"The Supreme Sacrifice"

Founded on the novel "TO HIM THAT HATH" by Leroy Scott

¶ Affords Robert Warwick a magnificent opportunity to display his brilliant gifts of dramatic power and characterization. ¶ The story concerns itself with the heroic sacrifice of David Aldrich, a young author, (played by Mr Warwick), who sacrifices himself and endures a bitter term of years in prison to save the hallowed memory of his dearest friend, an East Side clergyman, who in a moment of desperation has embezzled the charity funds placed in his care to satisfy the extortionate demands of a woman with whom he had become entangled years before.

"Passers By"

By C. Haddon Chambers

¶C. Haddon Chambers, the celebrated author of "Passers-By" has written many successful plays; but none that has attained the international fame accorded to this wonderfully powerful and brilliant piece of literary art. ¶ The story interests with its novelty, thrills with its dramatic climaxes, and impresses with the masterly way in which the author handles the deeper currents of modern life.

MILLIONS INVESTED

¶Means proportionate profit to the exhibitor. The World and Equitable Film Corporations could not afford the immense expenditure involved by starring in great features such notable artists as Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Kitty Gordon, Georga Baban, House Peters, Edwin August, Charles Cherry, Frank Sheriden, Holbrook Blinn, Muriel Ostriche, Carlyle Blackwell, Bruce McRae, Gerda Holmes, and a host of others unless they could be sure of substantial returns on the investment represented.

¶The only way to make sure of this reasonable profit is to produce photo-plays that are "sure-fire" money-makers, not a "hit or miss" program. It follows therefore, as sure as night trails day, that the prosperity of these two great corporations, is bound up with the exhibitors success. If we are to exist, we must give the exhibitor features that will yield him big business. That's "Horse Sense" isn't it?

Film Recruits Soldiers

OTHER "BIG FOUR" EVENTS

'THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE' promises to produce more recruits for the Canadian government than any other medium we have employed since the war began."

Above is the statement Major M. S. Boehn, chief recruiting officer for the Province of Ontario, made after he had witnessed a showing of the great American war film.

When the big "preparedness" spectacle was given its initial showing at the Strand theater in Toronto, all attendance records of the house were demolished. And since that time the V. L. S. E. feature has continued to draw immense audiences.

The reasons for this are easy to understand. When one considers the thrill which the big film caused through the very backbone of the American nation, which is at present enjoying the solid comforts of peace, it is little wonder that war-suffering Canada is stirred to its depths by the heart-seizing story and the lessons of unpreparedness contained in the tremendous picture. Interest in the scenes of the spectacle is not confined to the Canadian fathers, mothers and sisters whose sons and brothers and sweethearts are at this very moment in the trenches "somewhere in France," but every officer in all the branches of the government had driven home to him more forcibly than ever before the importance of his duties toward his country.

Although Canada has contributed valiantly of her youth to the English armies in Europe, separated from the actual conflict by the broad ocean, she realized only indirectly the horrors of actual combat and invasion. The graphic story and terrible scenes shown in "The Battle Cry of Peace" brought vividly to every Canadian's mind the actual meaning of war.

It is little wonder, then, that recruits, stirred as they had never been stirred before, flocked to the standard to swell the forces who are attempting to finish the war in Europe and protect the mother country.

Hitherto it has been the practice of the Canadian censors to eliminate from imported films scenes showing the American flag, but in "The Battle Cry" no such action was taken.

Prior to the public showing of the film at the Strand, the picture was exhibited privately before various members of the Canadian parliament, Toronto aldermen and army officers. Realizing the stimulation the great film would be to the sense of duty to one's country, Major Boehn delivered the following impressive speech at the conclusion of the private performance:

> I am willing to go on record as saying that 'The Battle Cry of Peace' promises to produce more recruits for the Canadian regiments than any other medium we have employed since the war began. Its appeal is simply invaluable for this purpose. Also, the marvelous manner in which the invasion of the United States is depicted leaves small room for doubt as to what would happen in Canada under similar circumstances. As a screen production it is magnificent, considered in the light of a tremendous and much needed lesson to those who fail to realize the dangers of modern warfare when waged by an unscrupulous enemy, and the necessity for checking a foe's offensive by every possible means; there is practically no limit to the influence it exercises.

Selig and Lubin on V. L. S. E.

IN THE next Selig feature film, scheduled for release on April 3, Bessie Eyton and Edith Johnson are starred, supported by Al Filson and a strong cast. The title is "The Cycle of Fate," and it is a five-part feature of which Marshall Neilan is author. The story is said to be alive with dramatic incidents, the scenes ranging from ocean, storm and shipwreck, to the world of the yeggman and the heart of a great city.

One of the screen's most successful character leads is Al Filson, who is seen in "The Cycle of Fate" with Miss Eyton and Miss Johnson. He has passed through a long course of apprenticeship for the screen in his work in vaudeville, during which he appeared in a number of George Cohan's sketches. He joined the Selig company in 1912, appearing in regular program plays. One of his distinct picture successes is seen in "The Cycle of Fate," in which he appears as Boss Kipper.

"The Golden Highway" is the splendid title of a new Lubin five-part feature, the release date for which has not yet been announced. This play will appear as a part of the regular V. L. S. E. program before long.

The author of this story with the golden name is Daniel Carson Goodman, who was also the creator of the scenarios for "Souls in Bondage," "The Gods of Fate" and "Life's Toll." His latest play tells of the possibility of finding the blue bird of happiness in spite of poverty and trials.

Rialto Opens With "Ne'er Do Well"

THE Rialto, Brooklyn's newest and largest motion picture house, opened its doors last week. The leading attraction of the program for the first four days was "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Selig's ten-reel picturization of Rex Beach's novel, released through V. L. S. E. Messrs. David V. Picker and Whitman Bennett are interested in the Rialto, which was constructed at a cost of $125,000. The new theater is designed on strictly modern lines and stands in an exclusive residential portion of the Flatbush section. The policy of the house is modeled on that of the Broadway Strand theater, the program containing vocal and instrumental numbers. A large orchestra adds much to the attractiveness of the program.

Robert Roberts, the well-known "legitimate" star, officiates as manager of the Rialto.

During the latter part of the week "The Hero of Submarine D-2," a Vitagraph feature by Reverend Cyrus Townsend Brady, will be presented.

New "Big Four" Men

C. L. KENDALL, formerly of the Universal booking service, Cincinnati, is now a member of the V. L. S. E. forces of that city in a similar capacity. Announcement is also made of the promotion of L. H. Watrous of the Toronto sales forces, to the position of manager of the Montreal sub-office, succeeding Mr. McCullum. Manager W. C. Gookin has named R. O. Caveness to cover the territory over which Mr. Watrous formerly held jurisdiction.

J. A. Conant has been transferred from the Cincinnati sales department to that of the Cleveland office, and Marx S. Nathan, formerly of the Kleine feature service, is now a member of the Washington sub-office of Philadelphia.

George T. Pardy has joined the publicity staff of the V. L. S. E. at the New York headquarters. Mr. Pardy is well-known in the journalistic world, having worked in an editorial capacity on newspapers in Chicago, New Orleans and New York.

The Nation's Fourth Industry!

Although America is famed the world over for its industries, and its business interests have developed several new "wonders of the world," nothing in the globe's history of commercial development has equalled the swift progress of the moving picture industry.

Born scarcely fifteen years ago, and really active for but the past five years, motion pictures have performed the remarkable feat of achieving fourth place among the industries of the United States. This statement is based on official reports from the government at Washington.

Few people can really realize just what a "fourth industry" means—the enormous amount of capital involved, the tremendous activities, the vital hold of pictures upon the masses, the number of people which the business supports. Motography will print, as soon as the detailed statistics from Washington are available, the complete report concerning the film industry and its relation to the other big commercial interests of the country.

Film Shows "Real" Reporter

The newspaper reporter as characterized in drama or photoplay is frequently criticized as not conforming to the real type. Many times the criticism is warranted, as, for example, when an author sends his reporter into the throne of the King of Folderolario to punch the noses of a score of armed retainers and, with the oppressed princess in his arms, dive out of a window on the seventh floor of the castle into the moat below and so forth. Clay M. Greene, the famous playwright, on the other hand, has just given a practical demonstration of his ability to permit a photoplay reporter to act like a human being. Mr. Greene has just produced for the Lubin Company a three-act photoplay, "A Voice in the Night," in which dainty Helen Greene is featured. The principal male character in the drama is that of a newspaper reporter and was entrusted to Arthur Matthews a careful delineator of types. Without detailing the plot, it is sufficient to mention that the climax of "A Voice in the Night" is achieved when the reporter is forced to decide between conscience and duty to his city editor. When the photoplay was reviewed in the projection room of the Lubin studios some one remarked that a real reporter would have decided otherwise.

Call Chaplin from Trenches

"Read today in Paris papers that you have signed Chaplin. Kindly arrange to have first new picture sent to 'the boys in the trenches.' "

The above message, signed by Donald M. Gunn, C. Q. M. S., "16th Royal Scots," was received recently by the Mutual Film Corporation in its New York office. The message came in the form of a cablegram from "somewhere in France."

At the left is a scene from "Joyce's Strategy," a current Essanay featuring Joyce Fair, the new child star. The other picture is a glimpse of Essanay's "I Will Repay."

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

The New "Madison" of Detroit

By John H. Kunsky,

One of the Largest Exhibitors in the United States.

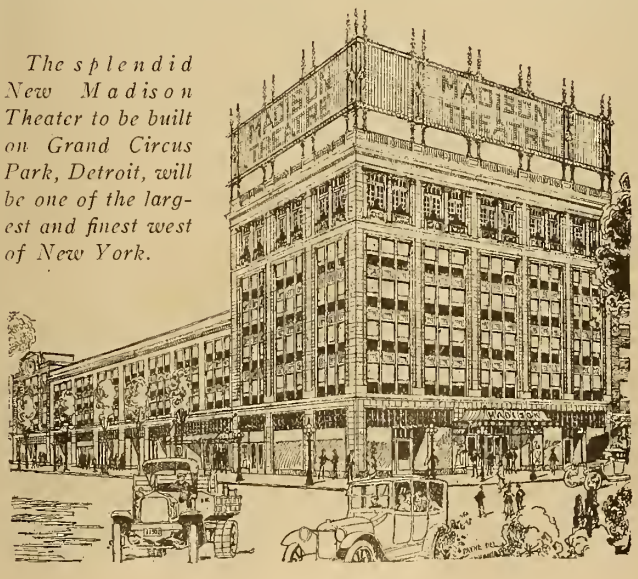
I AM about to erect a theater which will rank as Detroit's largest amusement palace and the most luxurious west of New York City.

This newest acquisition to Detroit's theater colony will be known as the Madison, and will occupy a site on the most prominent corner of Grand Circus Park and Broadway. This location is acknowledged as one of the most valuable pieces of real estate in Detroit, and is recognized as the heart of the new business district which already contains the new Statler and Tuller hotels, the Washington theater and several skyscrapers.

John H. Kunsky.

Occupying a large section of ground, a fine five-story office building will be erected upon the Witherell street side, facing the park, and a three-story office and shop structure will occupy the Broadway frontage, thus surrounding the theater proper, which will be a huge affair, seating 3,600, and with a spacious and fully equipped stage as large as any in the West, thereby offering accommodations for the largest of dramatic and spectacular productions. The upper floors of the office building will be taken up entirely with the offices of the various enterprises controlled by me, which are at present quartered in spacious offices in the Dime Bank building, this additional space being required for my other interests.

They tell me my rise as a power in the theatrical firmament of Detroit and Michigan has been somewhat meteoric. I started with the most modest of capital in the days of the penny arcade, and am now counted the greatest operator of motion picture theaters in this section of the country and one of the prominent factors of the business in the United States.



The splendid New Madison Theater to be built on Grand Circus Park, Detroit, will be one of the largest and finest west of New York.

While engaged in the operation of penny arcades with the late A. Arthur Caille, an article in the Scientific American stating that a machine to reproduce life-size photographs in motion had been invented, caught my eye. I interested Mr. Caille, and we took the next train east, witnessed the invention demonstrated and purchased an entire outfit.

The Casino theater, probably the first moving picture theater in the world, was then built at 28 Monroe avenue. Then followed the construction of the successful old Majestic theater, and the Columbia and the Garden, all of which met with instant public favor.

George W. Trendle.

About this time I purchased Mr. Caille's interests and erected the Liberty theater, situated upon the site of the old Scotch Presbyterian church at Bates and Farmer streets, and the Alhambra, a beautiful residential theater. I next took over the Washington theater, up to that time known as a complete failure, and made it into a playhouse catering to capacity audiences seven days in a week. Last September I opened the Strand theater, at Grand River avenue and Fourteenth street, seating 1,500.

The new Madison, my latest venture, marks the greatest effort of my career. It is not a question of money, but quality, style and comfort. The plans call for a very superior and highly decorative structure with an entrance from Grand Circus Park, the lobby leading through to the theater being mostly of solid marble, enhanced by costly ornamental work of the finest design. Leading directly into the theater, this lobby will open into a beautiful foyer which will equal or excel anything in playhouse construction in the country. The huge theater will contain a roomy main floor and balcony and finely appointed reception rooms, smoking rooms and grand promenade. The color scheme will be green and pure white.

The exterior of the building will be illuminated by a new system of indirect lighting which will throw out into bold relief at night the entire structure of white glazed terra cotta without the displaying of a single electric bulb. A huge electric sign will surmount the building. The top floor of the office building will contain a handsome suite of offices finished in pure Circassian walnut of massive design. The structure will have its own heating and lighting plant.

Even a higher class of photodrama and musical features will be presented at the Madison than is now shown in the Washington, Liberty, Alhambra, Garden, Strand and other theaters which I control. The great photodramatic productions which are now obliged to seek the dramatic theaters in Detroit in order to obtain sufficient revenue from the box office to make a profit will be offered. A pipe organ costing $50,000 will be installed, and a fine symphony orchestra of twenty-five.

No small factor in the successful culmination of this important realty deal is George W. Trendle, corporation lawyer, and my legal adviser, who witnesses in this the successful outcome of over two years' constant endeavor to bring matters to a head, and whose personal remuneration in the securing of the leases and the necessary financing amounts well up into the thousands.

The Schmied-Sisman Company of Detroit has been awarded the building contract.

C. Howard Crane, also of Detroit, and one of the most prominent theater architects in the United States, states that the Madison will represent his supreme effort in theater construction.

The loan on the property has been placed with the Tillotson & Wolcott Company of Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and New York, who will doubtless offer these bonds to investors in the near future.

Spanish Theater for Capital City

By Theodore Franklin.

A new architect has entered the motion picture field in the person of Horace W. Peaslee, of Washington, D. C. He is a graduate of Cornell University, where he also served as fellow in architecture. He was also instructor in landscape design in the University of Illinois and is at present an active member of the Park Commission of Gardens and Ground of the Federal government, which has for its aim the beautifying of the Capitol City, He has traveled much in this country and in Europe, always with the eye of an architect and has gathered much material from these sources.

Mr. Peaslee is a believer in the bigness of things and the broadness of viewpoints, but he does not believe that capacity in a motion picture theater is best accomplished by mere open space. It would seem that his uppermost thought is beauty, and he states: "The public is always attracted by beauty and good taste."

Mr. Peaslee has just completed plans for his first motion picture theater—the Spanish Gardens—to be located on Fourteenth street near Irving, in the residential section of Washington.

Its cost, about $100,000, has somewhat startled amusement circles; but the Federal Amusement Company, which is responsible for the enterprise, announces that it meant to depart from the plain established lines of theater construction. G. L. Stabler and R. W. Power, the fiscal agents, are giving the architect full sway to execute his artistic ideas.

A noticeable feature of the Spanish Gardens is that it will follow a definite style of architecture—that of the Spanish Renaissance—which will be carried out even in exterior and interior decorations. On this point alone Mr. Peaslee deserves congratulation, as too many of the motion picture theaters are a hopeless mass of stucco and an aimless combination of colors with no relation to the structural lines themselves, all of which grate harshly upon the eye and the sense of harmony.

THEATRE·FOR·THE·FEDERAL·AMUSEMENT·COMPANY

The harmony and restrained beauty of the new Spanish Gardens Theater of Washington, D. C., marks it as an epoch-maker in playhouse architecture.

The entrance lobby will be framed with a graceful marquise, rich in design and color. It will have a width of 30 feet and a depth of 50 feet, unobstructed by a ticket booth or by poster easels. The latter will be neatly encased in wall panels. The booth will be located under an ornamental staircase leading to the balcony and mezzanine tier. On the opposite side a moving stairway will afford another means of reaching the balcony as well as the open air promenade over the lobby. Here amid flowers and trellises refreshments will be served.

The auditorium will be 85 by 150 feet and will seat 2,500. In addition to comfortable seats and broad aisles, a spacious foyer will afford a promenade for patrons of the first floor. A similar privilege will be given the mezzanine patrons in a promenade created by the penetration of the underside of the balcony and the vaulted ceiling of the foyer. This is not only an unusual feature, but one which will add beauty to a neglected homely aspect in construction. The stage of the auditorium will be ample for a large orchestra and sets necessary to beautify the screen. Here also will be found a definite scheme in colors and designs harmonizing with the basic Spanish style.

Another novelty of this motion picture theater will be the introduction in Washington of a roof garden which will be a veritable picturesque Spanish retreat. Its roof will be the heavens, with the exception of the pavilion on the east side, which will be covered for the serving of refreshments. A raised promenade will run all around the air-garden ornamented on the north and south sides with an open pergola. The center of the garden will be reserved for seats only. The screen will be located on the west side, artistically framed, preserving the Spanish garden scheme. Everywhere will be beauty and ease and comfort, with flowers, and vines and harmonious colors. This roof garden, with its capacity of 2,000, may well be said to be situated a top of the Capitol City, as it crowns Mt. Pleasant Hill. It will afford a pleasure house such as Washington has never known before.

His deep studies, his wide experience and extensive travel has especially equipped Mr. Peaslee to give to the motion picture something entirely different and this he certainly has accomplished in the Spanish Gardens. It is hoped that this will be the beginning of other novel and artistic structures for the patrons of motion pictures from this man of distinctive ideas.

"Of course, I'm fond of motion pictures," replied the architect, "and that's why I mean to put in the Spanish Gardens comforts and beauties I have noted neglected in the present houses. I am building a personal theater, so to speak, just such a one in which I myself want to enjoy the pictures and I feel sure I am voicing the sentiments of the majority of photoplay patrons."

The electrical display of the Spanish Gardens will be a novelty, something that will be seen for a long distance, yet not gaudy, as are so many theater signs.

Twelve Theater Commandments

By Charles St. Clair,
Manager of the Majestic Theater, Corsicana, Texas.

I know of no greater opportunity for the display of business ability and intelligence than that afforded in the management of a motion picture house.

The man who is looking for "an easy thing" is making a huge mistake by taking "a flier" in this game. If a man has some means, some business experience and a determination to work hard, yes, very hard, his chances for success are good. He must have staying power; he cannot afford to be easily discouraged, must make himself conversant with every little detail and be willing to stay eternally "on the job."

The personal equation is as great a factor in this business as in any other, and a manager must have a reputation for truthfulness and business integrity. By strict attention to business he must maintain the respect of the community in which he does business.

If the theater is situated where the people are in the habit of passing, and the population of the town is commensurate with the seating capacity of the theater and the manager does not succeed in keeping his house generally well filled, he is at fault somewhere and should not rest until he has discovered wherein he is at fault.

A manager must read avariciously and not only know all about his own program but its comparative value with that of his competitor.

The essentials to success in my estimation are: First, keep your house scrupulously clean. The lobby must be just as clean as the inside and good taste and care exercised in the display of clean posters and photographs.

Second, let dignity and courtesy be prominent at each performance.

Third, commence each day right "on the dot," not a minute too early nor a minute late. Your patrons will soon be on time if you are always on time.

Fourth, keep a careful watch on your operators and see that the pictures are always "in frame," that sufficient light is used to insure a clear picture, and that your operators do not slow down or speed up without your orders.

Fifth, see that no loafers stand around your box office and also that your ushers are neatly dressed and have clean hands, faces and linens.

Sixth, avoid extravagant terms in advertising; tell your patrons the truth.

Seventh, do not run too long a program; in my estimation six reels is a sufficiency for any one performance. I run a five-reel feature and one reel of either comedy, novelty or travel.

Eighth, see that the children and "smart alecks" behave themselves while in your theater so that the others can enjoy the whole of the performance.

Ninth, studiously avoid vulgar and unclean pictures as much as possible; better keep a "dark house" than wilfully offend regular patrons.

Tenth, vary your program as much as possible. Give your favorite star a rest. You will destroy the drawing power of any favorite by running them too frequently.

Eleventh, music in keeping with the picture I regard as of great importance and is essential to an enduring success. I am a musician myself and know immediately when my organist is "off color," and we work together to make every performance a finished one.

Twelfth, never cease taking pains; never cheapen your performance. As the crowds continue to come, rather show them your appreciation by putting forth even greater efforts to please.

These twelve commandments may be crudely expressed but in striving to follow them myself I think I can say without egotism that success is attending my efforts and that the public are beginning to realize my worth not only as a "show man" but as a citizen seeking at all times to provide good wholesome amusement and recreation for the city in which I live.

Has Modern Film House

By H. W. Nadal,
Manager of the Hill-Top theater, Louisville, Ky.

The Hill-Top is a suburban theater of Louisville with a seating capacity of five hundred. The cost of the theater was $24,000. It was opened one year ago last February and has a stage all equipped for vaudeville and musical comedies.

We are running a mixed program of pictures, including the Universal, Mutual and Pathe program; also the V-L-S-E and Blue Bird features and two well-known serials—Graft and The Girl in the Game.

The Hill-Top theater has a forty-foot frontage with a spacious lobby and foyer. We can stand up four hundred comfortably.

We use two Powers 6-A machines and a Wagner converter to give us direct current. We have a ninety-seven-foot throw and pride ourselves on the best projection in the city.

I was formerly connected with the well-known vaudeville team of Herbert and Willing, an act that played all the "big time" vaudeville theaters of the country.

The Metro company and Madame Olga Petrova were honored by a rival concern this week.

The Broadway Theater management announced as a special feature they would present Metro's gifted emotional artist in her last production, "The Soul Market." Heretofore the Broadway Theater has shown the Paramount program exclusively. "The Soul Market" is a five part wonderplay produced by the Popular Plays and Players for the Metro program.

In Theater Business Twenty-Six Years

J. M. Kaufman, manager and lessee of the Gallipolis theater of Gallipolis, Ohio, is considered one of the most representative exhibitors in that territory and he has always done his best to uphold the interests of the picture business. But we will let Mr. Kaufman talk for himself:

"Being one of the promoters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, I have always expended the time and money necessary to be present at all their meetings and have fought with all my power for the interests of both exchange men and exhibitors.

"In conducting my theater I have always tried to give my patrons clean pictures, good music, fine picture projection and a fresh-aired, comfortable theater.

"I have been in the theater business twenty-six years and in the picture business since the movies were born. I have always tried to uphold the dignity of the film business by fighting the distribution of films by exchanges to exhibitors who ruin competition by running too many reels for the price of admission. In my opinion, about two reels for five cents and three to six reels for ten cents is the best safeguard for the future of the business. Of course the prices depend some on the productions."

"Yours very truly,
"J. M. Kaufman."

Courtesy His By-Word

By F. McCarthy,
Manager of the Strand theater, Beloit, Wis.

I believe that my success as an exhibitor in the motion picture world is due to the fact that I have at all times extended courtesy to my patrons. Their likes and wants have always been my first consideration. My dealings with the exchange men have always been pleasant because I do all in my power to make them so. I always aim to obtain the best program possible and suitable for my theater and have been successful at all times in this regard. Naturally, with the exchange men and brokers, I have always obtained results which are most pleasing both to myself and my patrons. I meet my bills promptly. This helps a great deal. I have been in the picture game for more than nine years, running the Lyric, Dixie and Strand theaters in Beloit during that length of time.

New Strand in Florida

The flower state has a fine new Strand all its own. It represents an investment of $90,000 by the Strand Amusement Company, the officers of which are Charles D. Cooley, president and general manager; Jerome A. Waterman, treasurer, and Pearce Noland, secretary.

This fine new Strand is located at Tampa, Fla., a city of about 40,000 inhabitants. The theater seats 850 and the shows are continuous. An orchestra discourses the music and the admission price is uniformly ten cents. A twelve by sixteen screen is used and the length of the throw is 85 feet.

Believes Better Pictures Pay

By G. W. Middleton,
Manager of the Colonial theater, Elmira, N. Y.

I will tell you why I am considered a successful exhibitor.

It is because we show the best pictures obtainable—Paramount—four days a week, with from three to five reels of Mutual. You know that the Paramount pictures show all the stars, and every one we show we have big business.

We have the oldest picture house in town. That is to say, the first one that was opened in Elmira.

We seat 1,500 people and never fail to stand them up every night.

We run the Colonial on strictly business principles, such as keeping the theater in A No. 1 order, and clean, opening and running on time (from 1 to 11 p. m.), advertising as it should be done, and many other such details.

Our ushers and all attaches of the theater are uniformed. That makes a great difference in appearance and causes favorable comment.

Utica Has Fine Film House

The Avon theater, Utica, N. Y., seats 1,500 persons comfortably. William L. Proctor is the manager. He also is interested in the Rex theater, Nanticoke, Pa. The Avon theater was built about a year ago and has been enjoying good business. The admission prices are 5, 10, 15 and 25 cents. Five shows are given daily. There are eight reels to each performance. The bill is changed thrice weekly. The Avon's screen measures 13 by 18 feet. The length of the throw is 87½ feet. The orchestra is supplemented by a large organ. Seven or eight houses are listed as competitors of the Avon, which claims the largest business.

"Projection First," His Motto

By Ben H. Zerr,
Manager, Schuylkill Haven theater.

"Projection First" for results.

That's my motto, and it has paid me in many ways.

I use a mixed program of multiple-reel pictures and change the character of my program often.

I am in favor of an "open market."

My theater has a seating capacity of 432, which is to be enlarged to 900 in a few months.

"Peppina" Sets Broadway Mark

A remarkable letter has been received from Manager Langsfeld of the Broadway theater, New York City, by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, concerning the record established by Mary Pickford's appearance in the seven-part picture, "Poor Little Peppina," prior to the release of this film on the Paramount program.

Manager Langsfeld's letter follows:

Adolph Zukor, President,
Famous Players Film Co.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Zukor:

On February 20, 1915, the Broadway theater changed its policy from vaudeville to Paramount pictures, featuring Mary Pickford in "Mistress Nell." February 20, 1916, we celebrated our first anniversary opening with Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina,"

Never since the erection of the Broadway forty years ago did the crowds storm the lobby to try to gain admission as they did during the showing of this seven-reel production. It broke all records as a box office attraction. Thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and ninety-three persons paid admission to see Miss Pickford, the theater having a seating capacity of only fifteen hundred, thus compelling the people to stand for hours in line in the street before they could gain admittance to the theater.

The police reserves from Captain Bailey's precinct were called at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, two hours after opening, and were obliged to remain at the theater during the entire week. On several occasions it was necessary to call the reserves from other precincts.

Had we booked this production for two or three weeks instead of one, our box office receipts would have been as high the third week as the first, as there were thousands of people turned away who were unable to gain admittance even to the lobby, and since the closing of the picture here Saturday night we have had numerous inquiries asking where "Poor Little Peppina" could be seen in or around New York in the near future. Our only reason for not booking this production more than one week was that the Broadway has a standard policy of weekly changes.

When Miss Pickford left the theater at the closing performance on Saturday night, hundreds of people gathered around her motor car to express their highest opinion of the picture and the little idol of the screen.

Very respectfully yours,

Leon D. Langsfeld, Manager.

Jacksonville Helps Producers

George E. Leonard, secretary of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Chamber of Commerce, has assured several big producers of motion pictures in New York that the Jacksonville organization will lend all the assistance in its power to make their temporary stay here profitable, and if they are contemplating the erection of a permanent studio here, to co-operate with them in every way. The action was taken some time ago by the commerce body, and Secretary Leonard again affirmed the policy of that organization a few days ago in a telegram to William Steiner, general manager of the Serial Film Corporation of New York, in answer to a message from the latter advising that a large company of Serial players would visit the Southern city in a day or so for a stay of several weeks.

Film Men to "Get Together"

Business meetings, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, at which every branch of the motion picture industry and its allied trades and professions will be represented, will be held as a feature of the First National Exposition of the Motion Picture Industries in Madison Square Garden from May 6 to 13, inclusive.

This will be the first time that the many distinct branches of industry, trade and professions allied with the film industry will be brought together in one building and at one time for an interchange of important business questions and trade problems.

Prisoners Challenge Ushers

The ushers' baseball team of the Strand Theater, New York City, has received a challenge from the Sing Sing team requesting a game early in the season. Last summer the Strand boys went to Sing Sing and defeated the prison team. After the game one of the prison team's players stepped up to the Strand team's catcher and said: "Say, for the love of Mike, go out and steal a watch or something. We need you up here."

The challenge has been accepted.

FANTASIES ARE POPULAR

C. Allan Gilbert Shows Picture Silhouettes at Smoker of Prominent Artists—Other Paramount Pictograph News

The picture silhouette-fantasies and alive cartoons from the Paramount Gilbert-Bray studios are enjoying continued popularity with the fan and the trade.

Mr. Gilbert showed his contemporaries a number of shadow fantasies, including "The Murder and the Muse" and "Inbad the Sailor." There were present such prominent personages as Charles Dana Gibson and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. James Montgomery Flagg, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, Irving Cobb and James Forbes. A number of motion picture men also attended. Portions of the pictures shown at the smoker are included in the Paramount Pictograph release called "In the Shadows."

The next delightful delirium of shadows to issue from the Gilbert-Bray studios will be "Inbad the Sailor Gets Into Deep Water." It will be released on the Paramount program on March 23. This silhouette dream deals with the adventures of Inbad as a result of his flirtation with a mermaid. He fights mammoth sea monsters who grow jealous of him, and admits that he licked them. He is, however, swallowed by a whale but is disgorged, Jonah-like, and lives to tell his tale.

Cartoons that come to life have now won a permanent place of popularity upon the screen. One of the cleverest which has recently appeared will be "Bobby Bumps Gets a Substitute." This pen-skit is the work of Earl Hurd. It will be released by Paramount on March 30.

A cartoon bound to have a wide influence on public opinion in connection with unpreparedness and "watchful waiting" is the new Paramount pictograph, "A Mo-no-syl-lab-ic So-lil-o-quy," from the Bray studios. It tells the story of Uncle Sam's patience, which is so colossal that he is twice blown into the air by enemies' bombs. The gasoline of his temper is finally set off by the spark of his ire, however, and he proceeds to thrash his opponent.

Sunday Closing Film Censored

A governor's daughter "saved the day" in Lubin's "Skirts and Cinders." During the staging of the photoplay, Director McKim discovered that through some misunderstanding, the role of the young society belle was vacant, with no one available for the part. In a quandry for a moment, he picked up a Washington society journal from a table where it was serving as "props" for the scene. On the front page was a photograph of Miss Helen Cox, daughter of the governor of Ohio, and the information that the young woman in question was stopping at a local hotel. Acting on the impulse of the moment, Director McKim telephoned Miss Cox, and after considerable urging, induced her to invoke the aid of a taxi in rusing to the studio to complete the cast. She did.

Claridge Films Get Courtleigh

William Courtleigh, who has been starred in the current Lyceum theater, New York success, "The Heart of Wetona," is the star in the Claridge Films, Inc., production, "The Birth of Character." Mr. Courtleigh has a successful record on the speaking stage. He has appeared under such managements, it is said, as Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Cohan & Harris, Liebler & Company, the Shuberts and William A. Brady. New York state, including Greater New York, and northern New Jersey rights to this picture have been sold to the highest bidder, who has arranged to conduct a publicity campaign in behalf of the feature film.

Metro Pictures Win Prize

The Metro Pictures Service of Chicago won first prize for their exhibit at Indiana State Exhibitors' convention, held at the Severin Hotel, Indianapolis, March 2 and 3, they being the only exchange outside of the state of Indiana that were represented. Comment was made on the excellent arrangement of the exhibit and the stars that Metro had present, including Mary Miles Minter, and a feature of the exhibit was the Metro car that stood in front of the hotel, which traveled over the poorest roads imaginable, blazing the trail for this convention. The car was drawn by Messrs. Weiss and Weinshenker. About 482 miles were covered in three days.

As It Looks From Here

NOW is the time to boost for the national convention of exhibitors to be held in Chicago from July 11 to 15. Chicago theater men are meeting often to make arrangements for the welcoming of fellow exhibitors from all over the country and the success of the convention is assured.

THE Pan-American conference at Buenos Aires from April 13 to 15 should cement the friendship of all countries on the western hemisphere. A representative delegation is on the way to South America and motion picture men are watching anxiously for a settlement of the copyright difficulties in Latin-American countries. William G. McAdoo, secretary of treasury, is chairman of the U. S. section of the International High Commission and he has been memorialized on the question of a better production on copyrights in Latin-American states by Paul C. Cromelin of the Cosmofotofilm Company. Mr. Cromelin has made a deep study of copyright conditions in South America.

THERE has been considerable discussion recently regarding the length of films. It is conceded that feature films will be developed to a higher standard than at the present. There is no reason to believe that the short film, which made the motion picture business in the beginning, will die. Short stories of strength, heart interest and real purpose will live forever. The chief trouble in the business has been that when a producer found an unusual short story he was tempted to pad it into a feature, with the result that the picture lost its value in being strung out. Many features recently released might have had a stronger appeal had they been held to what has been called a natural length.

AS long as film men continue to use the word "legitimate" in speaking of the stage, it will be difficult to impress upon the minds of the general public that we believe in ourselves. Fred J. Herrington, head of the Exhibitors' League, recently remarked that the word "legitimate" should be barred from motion picture publications. "Too often does this word get into print," said Mr. Herrington. "I always have considered my theater legitimate—just as legitimate as the speaking stage."

THEATER men throughout the Northwest are working hard to put over a monster convention in the armory at Minneapolis, May 2, 3, 4 and 5. The Civic and Commercial Association of Minneapolis is taking an active interest and it is requested that as many exhibitors from Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, the upper Michigan peninsula, Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington attend. There are 6,000 exhibitors in this territory and the committees are arranging to receive a majority of them.

JESSE J. GOLDBURG paid a flying visit to Chicago on a mission somewhat shrouded in mystery. He was in the city only three hours, during which he called up MOTOGRAPHY to pay his respects. He recently severed his connection with the Ocean Film Corporation. He has not announced his plans for the future, excepting to say that he has made no connection with any other concern and has not planned definitely his future operations, preferring to await developments which he foresees will cause radical changes in the manufacturing of photoplays, particularly features. "I have not determined as to whether I will proceed to produce features on my own account or make connections with a going concern," he said. "For the present I am sitting tight and awaiting developments, devising plans, however, that may be put to practical uses no matter what my connections may be in the future." Mr. Goldburg is properly reputed to possess an unusually thorough knowledge of every branch of the motion picture business, having inaugurated a large number of the systems now employed by manufacturers in their studios and laboratories. Until he settles upon his future activities Mr. Goldburg will continue to make his offices in the Candler building, New York.

THE Ohio censors refused to allow close-up views of Francisco Villa to be shown, according to a report from the Selig-Tribune editorial forces. The showing of Villa's pictures in theaters during the present crisis would serve to arouse bad feeling, the board held. Fortunately for those interested in the news of the day, the censors have nothing to do with the Ohio newspapers.

New Roles for Sothern

When the Vitagraph company announced that it had succeeded in gaining the consent of E. H. Sothern to appear in motion pictures, the theatrical world was profoundly interested in the news. In all his years as a joint interpreter with Julia Marlowe of Shakespearian roles, Mr. Sothern had never expressed his opinion of the motion picture field as one worthy of serious reflection, but it was a well-known fact among those of the dramatic profession that Mr. Sothern had turned down several fabulous offers of his services. The surprise caused by Mr. Sothern's decision to enter motion pictures was heightened when Commodore Blackton of the Vitagraph company announced that Mr. Sothern would not appear in Shakespearian roles, but that he would appear opposite Anita Stewart, Edith Storey and Lillian Walker in three features dealing with modern life.

Mergers and Rumors of Mergers

COMBINATION seems to be the rule of big business. That the film business would presently prove to be no exception we have said before this. Last November (the 27th, to be precise) we ventured to guess that there might be some merging of film makers before long.

Those we had vaguely in mind at that time have developed nothing so far; but there are at least rumors of others that promise considerable magnitude.

The outward semblance, at least, of combination is already seen in the composition of the large releasing companies now operating. That some, if not all, of these co-operative alliances are about to form inter-combinations, perhaps placing a large majority of all film brands under one corporation management, is the development that rumor threatens with possibly less than her usual dubiety.

Showmen's money is no longer the capital of the film industry. The millions demanded by gigantic projects have long been brought in from the Wall streets of the world—and those financial thoroughfares have not been displeased with their adventures. The newest and biggest get-together effort, if it materializes, will draw upon the resources of the same sort of banking and financial interests that have furnished the munitions of commerce for the development of the railroads, the steel mills, and other mastodonic enterprises of civilization.

With a capitalization estimated at anywhere up to fifty millions of dollars, a combination of the sort we are considering might include a fairly large proportion of the present producing strength of the industry. It may be likely, however, that the situation will develop two separate combinations, leaving for the future the question of merging them into one vast organization. If two charters are called for, it is probable that one will be essentially a Pacific Coast product, at least as to its tangible property, while the other will center in New York and embrace eastern properties.

The report that the contemplated holding company would attempt to operate its own immense chain of theaters may have some basis in fact, but we are inclined to skepticism until further details are announced. Combination has already progressed farther in the exhibiting field than it has in the manufacturing. MOTOGRAPHY'S latest circulation report reveals some remarkable conditions, showing that nearly eight thousand theaters are owned and controlled by a select coterie of less than fifteen hundred of this country's showmen, while the rest of our approximately ten thousand paid subscribers have possession of the other twelve thousand or more permanent picture theaters. These figures, of course, do not take into account the large number of once-a-week shows in halls and opera houses, most of which also appear on our lists.

We have records showing that it is not unusual for fifty or even sixty theaters to combine in a single chain under one management, while combinations of ten or a dozen theaters are common. It is evident, therefore, that the exhibitor has beaten the producer to the merger game.

Whether even the biggest manufacturing combination, with enormous capital, can enter the exhibiting field in competition with these big theater chains, or would care to do so, is a question on which we would not care to prophesy. The manufacturer who enters into retail competition with his customers invites, of course, a lot of opposition, and is likely to lose considerable independent business.

So far as operating exchanges goes (also one of the activities connected by report with the new consolidation), that is an industry which can as well be handled by the manufacturers as by any others.

No one will deny the maker of pictures the privilege of distributing his own product; but some will refuse to concede him the privilege of exhibiting them to the public, unless he desires to drive the independent exhibitor out.

Manufacturing combinations of one kind and another are bound to occur this year, whether those about which rumors are flying materialize or not. Considerable good should come of judiciously arranged mergers. The multiplication of producers has brought the usual business problems to some of them. What many imagined a veritable bonanza has proved to be like any other healthy business—profitable when efficiently managed, unprofitable otherwise. Assets of undoubted worth which have not yet paid interest may be made to yield not only profits, but products valuable to the world, under the master hand of a successful corporation organizer.

Competition, "The Life of Trade"

COMPETITION among exhibitors may be the life of trade, but too often it is the death of profits. The fellow who opens a new theater in a block already supplied with one or two good ones may be "not afraid of competition," but be assured, the competition is generally afraid of him.

They know exactly what the location is worth; probably he doesn't, or he wouldn't emit the unafraid talk.

Mere nerve in horning in on another exhibitor's location no longer pays profits. If the older house is any good at all, no new one can hope to take all its business away, though it probably will get enough so that both of them gradually starve to death.

A good many commercial atrocities are committed under the protection of the good old proverb that competition is the life of trade, and the belief that a strong man fears nothing—not even a competitor. There is generally enough trade to go around among the exhibitors who are good enough to deserve it. Sometimes—not always, by any means—two houses in a block will both fare better than either would alone. As a general principle, however, building a second theater because the first one, a hundred yards away, is making good, is poor business.

We used to start new theaters to catch the sidewalk hold-out lines of the old ones. Not any more.

A national chain of theaters, like the United Cigar Stores Company, would estimate in advance, with absolute accuracy, the future trade at any location. There would be no interference and each theater would get its share. All together they would absorb the local show business to the saturation point—because trade of that kind is an absolute mathematical quantity.

There is no guesswork about it, except among the amateurs and untrained men of small business.

It should be possible for men who are potential competitors to get together and divide up a territory to the advantage not only of themselves, but of the public as well. The problem is a little difficult among strangers, each solely responsible for his own business. It is so difficult, indeed, that it is a good deal easier to take a chance and lose the whole investment, besides spoiling the other fellow's business.

It is one of the logical functions of an exhibitor's association to handle this problem. Unfortunately, no trade association is anywhere near perfect. But the waste and havoc of injudicious competition is so great that every one planning a new theater should weigh the situation carefully before picking a location which will make his own and his neighbor's fight for existence so much harder.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

AGAIN I must plead with my readers to be more specific. I want to help all I can. I want to pass on to others what has been told to me and what I have learned by experience, so please help me by avoiding generalities whenever possible.

Question number six which I propose to answer first in this article is a difficult nut to crack. Here is a reader who says he wants to open a theater and he asks me how. Yet he does not tell me the size of the city or town. He does not tell me whether his site is in a residential or a shopping district. In fact, he does not tell me he has a site. How much simpler had he written: "I am about to open a theater in a rich residential section on a corner where two car lines cross. On one corner is a drug store which includes a postal station and a telegraph office; on another is a grocery store; on another is a saloon and cafe and the fourth is the site I have purchased. There are several other stores close by. These are patronized by residents within ten blocks of the corner. It seems like a live location, especially for night shows. I want to build a theater. Help me."

With that information I might have helped. However, I will do my best with the question as he has submitted it:

6.—I am about to open a theater in a distant city. What is the best way to go about it?

First I want to warn this adventurer, if he is one, and has had no previous experience, to study the city or town fire and safety regulations. Then, too, he should become familiar with the requirements of the National Board of Underwriters regarding the wiring and fireproofing of the operator's booth. In certain cities there are further regulations regarding the booth which every theater man should know. Also the prospective builder should learn if there are laws governing the arrangement of seats. Now, all these details are important and while the architect should know them, it is well for the owner to study these features beforehand. In my experience in the show business I have learned that a lawyer in time saves nine, and it is much easier and cheaper to build than to rebuild.

It seems safe to assume that the present day would-be theater owner will build a modern house rather than remodel a store, so unless I am questioned along these lines I am not going to give my views on the opening of a store theater.

In planning your house keep in mind always the safety and comfort of the patrons. Arrange for plenty of exits, wide aisles, sufficient leg room between seats, gently sloping inclines rather than steps and proper lighting arrangements. In many cities there are ordinances regarding steps. I believe stairs are dangerous and unnecessary. There is always a possibility of fire or panic, no matter how fireproof the theater is, and every possible safeguard against catastrophe should be provided. It has been found that the most comfortable slope for the main floor is a rise of one foot in the vertical to eight horizontally.

The slope in theaters in which the orchestra is on the stage and the screen is elevated need not be as extreme as in the theater in which the orchestra is in a pit and the screen is placed close to the stage apron.

When seats are ordered it should be specified whether they are for a sloping or a level floor. They should be arranged so that each seat holder gets a clear view of the screen without effort.

Find out if there is an ordinance requiring the last row seats to be on a level with the sidewalk. Some cities have such requirements on the statute books.

The size of doors and the fastenings usually are regulated by city ordinances. But whatever they are, for the protection of patrons they should swing outward.

Formerly the operating booth was located over the entrance passage but experience has taught me that the best projection is from the rear of the main floor. The booth should be absolutely fireproof and large enough to accommodate the operators comfortably.

Two scenes from Lubin's striking new multiple reel feature, "The Fires of St. John," in which Nance O'Neil is starred and which is being directed by Edgar Lewis. The picture will contain some extraordinary night effects. These were made at Thomasville, Georgia.

The temper of the men employed in these booths has much to do with the projection and they should have plenty of elbow room and breathing space. In the early days the operator climbed a ladder to get to the booth but now he gets in "on the level."

In up-to-date theaters the booths are built large enough so that the apparatus for the inspection and winding of film can be done in the booth. Formerly this had to be done outside, so that in some theaters a second booth was built. Probably in some cities these ordinances still are enforced but now it seems unnecessary.

Lighting has much to do with the attractiveness of a house. The comfort of the patrons should be considered first. It should be possible at all times for a patron to find his seat easily. Clever lighting arrangements have been provided in some of the newer theaters, descriptions of which are being printed in each issue of Motography. And that inspires me to make note of what benefit I get from reading Motography.

I believe every theater man and would-be theater man would do well to study the department headed: "What Theater Men Are Doing." This forum has been instituted for an exchange of ideas and several stories have been printed recently which should answer many of the questions I am asked to answer.

Now for the artistic side of it. We will take it for granted that the adventurer has got his house open. What is he going to do with it?

First he should see to it that his shows are clean and worth while. Then he must take especial pains with his advertising—newspaper, poster and electric sign. These subjects I shall take up later, so I will pass them over now.

Then after he has his patrons past the front gate he should welcome them. Courtesy is my watchword. It should be yours. Now the patrons are in the huose. What do they get—pictures or a show? I have a question to answer on the presentation of pictures. So I will wait a while before going into this subject. But to the builder this is important. Look ahead and study the demands of your patrons. They want a show. See that they get it.

Don't stop at getting the patrons in. Keep them in and keep them coming back.

WORLD "STAR" ROSTER UP

List of Permanent Principals, Male and Female, Made Public; Many Good Releases Coming in the Near Future

The roster of permanent stars, male and female, as it now stands, has been definitely settled upon by the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, of course allowing for future activities and the consummation of negotiations now pending.

The activities of the dual program, which under the new policy of two distinct and widely different subjects a week, requires a great array of talent and the announcement of the permanent players of all classifications has been deferred by the heads of the companies until now. It was thought many new stars and noted players would be added to the cast list controlled by the two organizations, but as is the case in transactions of this kind, delays are unavoidable.

Robert Warwick, whose work for years as a stage player, established him as a star of the first magnitude, is a permanent World Film star with four of the biggest successes the screen has known behind him and a multitude of elaborate and ambitious productions ahead.

Gail Kane, who appeared to such excellent advantage in "The Labyrinth," and who recently completed her second Equitable picture, "Her God," will be seen about five times a year on the program.

Alice Brady, daughter of William A. Brady and well established as a star of the spoken stage and the screen, last seen in "The Woman in 47," will characterize the World Program about every three months.

Mollie King, one of the best known of the younger dramatic and musical personalities and seen to remarkable advantage in "A Woman's Power," is at work on "The Call of Love," and will feature the World Film Program about every four months.

Carlyle Blackwell is permanently allied with Equitable and will feature the releasing program about five times a year.

Muriel Ostriche, who created a field for herself by her work in "Mortmain," "A Daughter of the Sea," and "A Circus Romance," is the Equitable ingenue piece-de-resistance. Dainty, diminutive and attractive of face and form, productions in which she has appeared have had extremely satisfactory return engagements, wide distribution and more than pleased, from every standpoint.

Ethel Clayton will probably appear from six to eight weeks apart on both World and Equitable.

Arthur Ashley is the "heavy man" of the Equitable concern and is now playing opposite Alice Brady in "The Grubstaker."

Clara Kimball Young, one of the World Film Corporation's principal stars for the past eighteen months, will be seen next in "The Feast of Life" and will be seen right along at regular intervals on either the World or Equitable releasing program.

Clara Whipple, recently seen in "The Question," "The Daughter of the Sea," and at present appearing opposite John Mason in "The Reapers," has the distinction of having played no less than four hundred different parts during her professional career.

Frances Nelson, who was featured in "Love's Crucible" and who is now playing opposite Robert Warwick in "Human Driftwood" and who will be featured with Mr. Warwick in that production, is a long-term member of the World Film roster of noted players and will be seen, from time to time, either co-starring with some prominent male star or featured by herself in pictures in which her particular type of beauty is requisite.

Holbrook Blinn, one of the most foremost actors of his type on the American stage and one of the most important of theatrical figures, whose wonderful creative ability at the Princess Theater established him as a producing as well as acting genius, continues with World Film and will be seen shortly in "The Unpardonable Sin," a virile dramatic document that suits Mr. Blinn's characteristics perfectly. Mr. Blinn will characterize the World Program about every ten weeks.

Leon D. Netter, who for the past four years has been connected with Sol L. Lesser's western exchanges, has arrived in New York and will probably associate himself with one of Mr. Lesser's eastern interests.

Theater Competition—An Example

BY THOMAS O. MONK

Washington Correspondent for Motography.

THE Savoy theater, Washington, D. C., located in the center of the uptown residential section, is furnishing its patrons with a statement as to its operations for the year 1915 which deserves careful attention. It outlines the plans of the management for increasing the capacity of the theater, and states that "a great popular misapprehension exists on the part of the public as to the money made out of exhibiting motion pictures." It also refers indirectly to the new theater which is to be erected on the corner of the block above by the Federal Amusement Company with an indoor capacity of 2,500 and a roof garden with a capacity of 2,000 as stated in Motography of March 18, with the statement that by competition another house would not only destroy the business of the Savoy, but be doomed to failure itself. The statement of the Savoy brings to the front the proposition that in some instances competition may reach a stage where concentrated in one locality it is fatal, but that if the same money were invested in another section or community it would yield substantial returns.

This is the statement of the management of the Savoy:

> The management of the Savoy theater is glad to announce that plans have been approved by the district authorities for the enlargement of the Savoy during the coming summer in order to provide additional and better accommodations for its patrons, and to make it possible to show the highest class photoplays at all times under the best possible conditions and at the lowest possible prices.
> We intend to add 240 more seats to the main floor of the theater, and 300 mezzanine seats, making a total of 540 additional seats. These mezzanine seats will be something unique and unusual in a motion picture theater, and will add largely to the beauty of the house as well as the comfort of our patrons. The rear end of the theater will be extended and a large stage with beautiful decorations will be added.
> These additional improvements will be made, not out of the profits of the company, but by adding additional capital, and will be in keeping with the present appearance of our theater, and as economical as possible. The lobby will be widened so as to give us a frontage of seventy-five feet on Fourteenth street.
> The enlargement of our theater is not to be made on account of our inability to accommodate all of our patrons, but is desirable in order to make our patrons more comfortable, and to accommodate all of them, even if they should all come at the same hour. These additional seats will give us a capacity of about 1,400, which is the same as the capacity of our Open-Air Park; so that during the summer season if a sudden shower should come up during the performance in the park we can quickly transfer the entire audience into the main theater building.
> A great popular misapprehension exists on the part of the public as to the money made out of exhibiting motion pictures. When the unstable character of the investment is considered, it is seen to be largely speculative. A fire, or an accident, or the opening of an opposition house, may in a night wipe out the investment and cause large loss. The business depends upon the good will and support of the public, and the management of this theater desires to do all in its power to deserve this good will and support.
> As will be seen from the sworn financial statement of this theater, which we herewith publish, during the past twelve months ending December 31, 1915, the total admissions to the theater were $46,688.91, or a daily average in receipts of only $127.91. Our expenses for the year ending December 31, 1915, were $41,484.42, leaving a net profit of $5,204.49. Our daily average expense being $113.65, and our daily average attendance 1,270 admissions at 10 cents each.
> From this you can readily see that the competition of another house would not only destroy our business, but is doomed to failure itself, because a daily loss of only 145 ten cent admissions to this theater would wipe our entirely all profit made last year.
> It may become necessary to establish a fixed price of 15 cents for admission to most of our high-price shows in order to enable us to give our patrons the best, not only in photoplays, but in music as well. With an enlarged theater, good music, and showing selected films only, the patrons of this house will, it is believed, support the price of admission necessary to furnish you with a high-class entertainment.

In order that the public may know that we are frank with it, and are entitled to its continued support, we, herewith, publish our annual financial sworn statement for the 12 months ending December 31, 1915, and hope all of our patrons will study it carefully:

I, M. B. Swanson, Treasurer of the Savoy Theater Company, duly sworn, deposes and says that the above statement is true to his best knowledge and belief.

M. B. Swanson,
Treasurer.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this eighth day of March, 1916.

W. Hayden Collins,
Notary Public, D. C.

With a large investment at stake in the enterprise, and the constant care necessary to give the public its return for its money, it will be admitted after reading this statement, that there is no more than a living at best in the motion picture exhibiting business in Mt. Pleasant.

Take the facts home. Think them over. Co-operate with us and let us together make the Savoy the most desirable pleasure resort for the people living on the hill.

Tell your friends.

Savoy Theater Company, Inc.

This statement should be of interest to every other theater man. Perhaps there are those who can help solve the Savoy problem.

George Beban in "Pasquale"

George Beban, the well-known portrayer of Italian characters, now is busily engaged in the production of "A speech, Charlie!" says Pasquale. An early glimpse of "Pasquale," now being filmed at the Morosco studios. This picture stars George Beban, the remarkable actor of "The Alien" his initial photo-play subject for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, "Pasquale," an original play, written by himself in collaboration with Lawrence McClosky.

"Pasquale" affords Mr. Beban an exceptional screen vehicle in which he will bring out to particular advantage the quaint character of the poor Italian such as we see in every-day life along Mulberry street, New York City. The subject also will have bearing upon the present war in Europe and various actual scenes of battle involving the Italian army, with others showing the manoeuvers of a fleet of Zeppelins are included in the production.

Scene from "The Folly of Sin," the next release of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street, New York. This five-part picture is said to be magnificently staged and wondrously enacted, the leading roles being interpreted by Miss Joan Peterson and Messrs. Wieth and Tolway.

Seek Snow; Halted by It

In the midst of a snow storm, Nance O'Neil, Edgar Lewis and a company of sixty-five Lubin photoplayers and camera men left Broad street station, Philadelphia, the other day on a special train for Wilkes-Barre, to secure some snow backgrounds. These were required by Mr. Lewis for one exterior scene in the prologue of "The Fires of St. John," a five-act photo-play feature by the Lubin company. The making of this scene will complete the photo-play in accordance with the adage that the last shall be first. Several weeks ago the company had to journey in a special train to Thomasville, Ga., to secure the foliage background for several scenes. On returning to Philadelphia, Mr. Lewis, while at work on other portions of the picture, has been praying for a snow storm as required by the script for the prologue. Despairing of any assistance from the local weather man the company left for Wilkes-Barre, in the vicinity of which city Mr. Lewis was advised there was an abundance of beautiful snow for even a Dr. Cook picture.

Miss Eyton to Show New Gowns

In the Selig comedy, "A Strange Adventure," Bessie Eyton plays the role of a princess in a mythical kingdom. She is co-starred with Jack Pickford and will wear two gowns which Selig directors assert will set feminine hearts aflutter. Both were designed by Miss Eyton. It is said that Miss Eyton also is taking a lively interest in the designing of costumes for "The Crisis," in which she is to be starred by Selig.

It's All About Charlie's Pay

COUNTRY STIRRED BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT

EVERY time the old saw, "There's nothing new under the sun," is exploded by the bomb of an actual occurrence the country gives pause for a moment and takes a brief close-up of what the old world has been up to to bring about such a disturbance of the ordinary run of things.

And then there rises a lot of interesting discussion, analysis and expression of opinion.

This time it's the cumbersome salary of a little shuffling comedian.

Charlie's reported contract with the Mutual company for an annual $670,000 has struck America "where it lives"—in the pocketbook—and has perhaps done more than any other recent event movie to shock the public into something of a realization of what an important and vigorous child the five-year-old picture industry has become. The opinions and comment have been new and extremely interesting.

Even the ministers took the matter up. The Reverend Roderick E. Heath of the Warren Avenue Baptist church of Boston based a sermon on the question. He said in part:

"We have been startled rightly by Chaplin's salary. If he had lived in Puritan times he would have been burned as a witch. But he is doing good because he is provoking laughter and bringing sunshine into souls.

"I admit that Chaplin must be a genius. He is only twenty-six but will earn $13,000 a week while some of us find it hard to earn $1,000 a year."

"Charlie Chaplin makes more people laugh than anything—man or animal—in the universe," says the Washington Times. Would you guess it from this solemn likeness?

The press, of course, as the screen upon which public opinion is always registered, produced the bulk of the comment. German, Scandinavian, Yiddish and French newspapers are numbered among those who spoke of Charlie's coming deluge of money and there were few small towns whose paper did not respond to the thrill.

Here are some of the comments from various prominent newspapers:

"As the motion picture has grown from zero to an industry representing half a billion dollars and ranking fifth among the industries of the United States in the past ten years," says the Washington Times, "it is but reasonable to suppose that the rate of pay for one of the most popular of the money makers in the industry would skyrocket in about the same way. It is perhaps a fact that Charlie Chaplin amuses more human beings than anything, man or animal, in the world—not excepting the mother-in-law joke."

The Pittsburgh Chronicle spoke as follows, editorially:

"The report that the new contract, just signed by a motion picture comedian, calls for a salary of about $650,000 a year, will be sure to evoke the customary comparisons with the meagre financial rewards in other fields of endeavor. It will be pointed out that the highest salaried official in the United States, the president, receives only $75,000 a year. The inadequate compensation of clergymen and professors will be cited.

"These criticisms will not be entirely fair and logical, for they will be founded on the assumption that the services of ministers and professors and other exponents of spiritual and intellectual things can be measured in dollars and cents. A piece of property in downtown Pittsburgh is worth $10,000 a front foot because so many thonsand of persons pass it every day. A piece of property on an adjoining street is worth $5,000 a front foot because half as many people pass it every day. A certain moving picture comedian is worth $13,000 a week, or whatever he gets, because so many millions of people will pay their money to see him every week. Those of less drawing power are awarded proportionately. One may be sure that these actors do not get more than they are worth to their employers."

"It may not be clever to kick a man into an ornamental pond or to stagger him with a rubber brick," stated the Cleveland Plaindealer, "but the man who can make tears of laughter roll down the cheeks of countless millions must have something about himself or his particular brand of humor which is an asset.

"Charlie Chaplin's clowning is not foolish and it is not vulgar. Those who decry him and his honest (and apparently successful) efforts to chase away the blues might expend their time and energy much more profitably in other directions."

"Every film company in the land strained in an effort to land the only Charlie for the season of 1916," says the Buffalo Courier of March 1. "None got anywhere near him but the Mutual. At the zenith of his fame, the funniest man in the world picked out that company as the fitting vehicle for his talents.

"Chaplin has monkeyed with several companies before he finally was landed. Really, the gentleman seems to know he is worth money and proceeds to ask it."

From the Brooklyn Eagle: "One big western exhibitor remarked at the recent trade ball at Madison Square Gardens that in one large city he owned three big houses that were losing money at the rate of $100,000 a year. Try as he would, the deficit continued. He said that he had tested service without much difference in results. Great organs played by master musicians; good orchestra; big comfortable houses, uniformed attendants and expensive pictures were not sufficient. But—a Chaplin subject always did the trick, which is a twenty-times exhibitor's answer to the question, 'Why $13,000 a week to a player in motion pictures?' "

Said the New York Morning Tribune:

"Unless the word of the press agent is to be doubted, Charlie Chaplin—the Harry Lauder of the movies—will take $670,000 out of circulation in the next twelve months. The deal was engineered for the fortunate youth of screendom by his brother, Syd, who is Charlie's business manager, promoter and fiscal agent when not heading his own slap-stick comedy company. Articles were signed in Mr. J. R. Freuler's office Saturday night to the tune of a turning camera crank. Cooper-Hewitts crackled, red fire glared and smoke pots puffed."

The Tribune of Providence, Rhode Island, said:

"Charlie Chaplin, the movie star, went on record Saturday afternoon as the highest paid man in the universe, when he signed a contract with the Mutual Film Corporation of New York for $670,000 for a single year's service.

"This means that every hour that goes by in the life of Chaplin brings him $77.55 and that he is earning a five-cent piece at the rate of every two seconds.

"The closing of this contract ends the most spirited battle for a public entertainer in the history of the theatrical world. At least half a dozen of the largest film corporations in the country have been fighting for three weeks to land the film comedian who has taken the country by storm."

NEW VITAGRAPH RELEASES

Unusually Interesting Program Prepared for Release During the Week of March 27, Headed by "Two-Edged Sword"

An unusually interesting program is announced by the Vitagraph company for release during the week of March 27. The headliner is the four-part Blue Ribbon feature, "The Two-Edged Sword." A strong supporting list of pictures consists of "Mr. Jack Inspects Paris," the latest of the "Escapades of Mr. Jack," with Frank Daniels; "Three Johns," a single reel comedy; "Freddie Foils the Floaters," another of the "Freddie" series of single part comedies; and the three-part Broadway star feature, "Out of the Quagmire," a gripping political drama, complete the bill. In "The Two Edged Sword," Edith Storey and Evart Overton find an excellent medium for the display of their wonderful talent. The story tells of Dorothy, the wife of Gordon Allen, a novelist who is too engrossed in his work to devote much time to his wife. During a visit to a friend in the country Dorothy meets Jed, a big hearted, innocent country lad. She is piqued when she sees that Jed is not attracted by her beauty, and determines to use her coquetry on him. She allows him to believe her unmarried. After some time the desired result is obtained, and Jed, for whom women never held charms, finds himself enchanted by her wiles. One day, during Jed's absence, her husband arrives and, seeing her in a hammock, kisses her, just as Jed appears on the scene. A fight follows, and Dorothy is forced to unmask and show up in her true colors. Jed is heartbroken, Gordon refuses forgiveness, and Jed's sister, Mary, realizing that the shock has had a terrible effect on him, determines to be revenged. When Jed, unable to withstand the anguish of a broken heart, kills himself, Mary's resolve is strengthened.

Ten years later Mary, now a grown woman, manages to secure a position in the Allen home, as secretary to Gordon. She deliberately makes love to him and is found in his arms by Dorothy. Then, as a shock, comes to the realization that she really loves him. The keen sword of vengeance has swung both ways. In bitterness against the world and Dorothy in particular she leaves for her country home.

While attending the annual auto races in that section, Dorothy is injured by a swerving car and is carried to Mary's house. While there she hears Gordon reiterate his love for Mary. She also learns that she was the cause of Jed's death. Over Jed's grave Mary reunites Dorothy and Gordon, who go away leaving her sobbing bitterly.

Edith Storey and Evart Overton have the able assistance of Josephine Earle, Robert Gaillard, Logan Paul, Marion Henry and Mrs. Nellie Anderon. George D. Baker directed the action. It will be released on March 27.

Vitagraph Has Press Staff

To meet the constantly increasing demands made by the unusual number of feature films now being released by the Vitagraph company a special department has been organized to distribute press material and magazine stories. The new organization is known as the News Service Department and the intentions are to have it live up to its title in every sense of the word. The efforts of the News Service Department will not be directed toward obtaining Vitagraph publicity, but will aim to render service to all publications, enabling the latter to cater to the needs of their readers in a more attractive manner.

Five Stars in Three Lasky Films

Five popular stars in three big productions is what the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces for releases in the month of April. This combination is unlike any individual producing company has offered to the public in one month. The stars in the three plays will be Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely in "The Love Mask," Victor Moore supported by Anita King in an automobile thriller entitled "The Race," and Marie Doro, in her first appearance as a Lasky star in a photoplay entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn."

Film Men Reply to Brisbane

EDITOR'S ORATORY STIRS INDUSTRY

THE speech by Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, at the banquet of the Motion Picture Board of Trade held in New York on March 12, has proved to be an oratorical bomb.

The explosion of the "great editor's" words stirred up some lively reactions on the part of film men, and at the same time laid bare the speaker's surprising ignorance of the picture industry. Mr. Brisbane's speech was printed in full in last week's issue of Motography, and at the same time the replies made the same evening by Commodore Blackton, J. Robert Rubin, counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Leon J. Rubinstein, director of publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

We print herewith some of the keenest of the "come-backs" made by film men since the date of the banquet, an editorial which appeared in the New York American on March 14, and Mr. Brisbane's answer to the latter.

Censorship's Political Aspect

By Cranston Brenton,

Chairman of the National Board of Censorship.

MR. ARTHUR BRISBANE is, however, always so well informed, it is surprising that, at a gathering called together in opposition to the legalized censoring of motion pictures, he should have charged the producers, who had invited him as their guest of honor, with an absence of intelligence in every phase of their business except that of making money, should have attributed even their financial success to the "stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race," and should have emphasized his utter indifference to the whole question of the legalized censoring of their films.

The National Board, of which I am chairman, is unqualifiedly opposed to all forms of legal censorship—federal, state and local—because it believes such censorship to be undemocratic and to threaten the fundamental principles of free speech and free expression. It feels qualified to object, through its extensive opportunities of observation, to legalized censorship because of the inherent dangers in allowing the output of the fourth or fifth largest industry in America to be controlled by a group of three or four censors appointed by any political party and open to the sinister influences that such offices invite, and it knows that no such group could possibly view efficiently the National production of motion pictures that taxes the best attention of its 225 members and the activities of its paid staff.

Mr. Brisbane's one contribution to the opposition to legalized censorship, voiced in his speech, was based on the dangers of possible political control.

The National Board, in this connection, would call attention to the work of politics in Oklahoma at the time when Al Jennings was a candidate for governor of that state. The story of his life, called "Beating Back," in which he told the history of his outlaw career and his return to the life of an honest citizen, which had appeared in serial form in a prominent publication, had been "filmed" for the screen. This moving picture was circulated in the state as part of his campaign propaganda, with the result that many voters were won to his support, and popular belief in his integrity created. Thereupon, a bill was introduced into the Oklahoma legislature looking toward the prohibition in that state of any film which dealt with "the history of a notorious criminal, such as a bandit or gunman." The evidence is that this bill was introduced at the behest of the political party whose interests Mr. Jennings was opposing, with the obvious object of defeating his campaign.

Another interesting question is presented by the case of the temperance film, "John Barleycorn," which, according to the Philadelphia Press, a prominent member of a legalized censorship board, who admittedly represents large liquor interests, attempted to keep from the motion picture screens of his state.

These incidents should be sufficient to demonstrate the evils of legalized censorship, and yet similar illustrations of the unfortunate effect of politics on motion picture censoring might be multiplied from many sources, and these will obviously increase if legalized censorship is generally adopted.

As chairman of the National Board, I am very glad to record my opposition to legalized, pre-publicity censorship, particularly as I might, because of a possible misunderstanding of the term "censorship" in the title of our board, have been considered the one arch offender against whom the dinner was given in protest.

Brisbane's Opinion Not Valuable

By John H. Freuler,

President of the Mutual Film Corporation.

HE reminded me very much of the woman who appeared before the House Committee on Education, during the recent federal censorship hearings in Washington.

This dear lady, after uttering a long tirade against motion pictures, was asked if she had ever seen a motion picture.

"No," she answered, "but I have heard about them and I know they're awful!"

Mr. Brisbane, who so vastly entertained us with his views on motion picture censorship, admits that he has only seen three pictures, and that he saw these under the stress of social obligation.

And still it is a repeated statement in Mr. Brisbane's own editorials that they reach, I forget how many millions of persons every day. The same people for whom he is writing advice on every subject from baby food to war, are patrons of the motion pictures. Probably it is true that the motion picture is the greatest amusement and exerts the greatest influence in the lives of the people who read Mr. Brisbane's editorials.

Mr. Brisbane, supposedly with his fingers on the pulse of the people, eloquently admits that he has seen only three motion pictures. He owes it to himself, and to the millions of persons for whom he writes, to find out something about active photography.

He said, among other things: "I don't care in the least whether the motion picture is censored or not. Its success is based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race."

His opinions on the picture are about as valuable as would be the opinions concerning newspapers from a man who could not read or write. If censorship of the newspaper were suggested to such a man, he probably would say, "Yes, sure they should be censored. They print awful things about murders, runaway wives, bad girls and burglars." This man, of course, would be talking on hearsay.

It is of interest, however, to note that Mr. Brisbane expressed the opinion, in his remarks at the Astor, that the news releases and pictures depicting scenes from history should not be subject to censorship.

Among other amusing things, he indicated that he felt the motion picture industry ought to produce such matter as the life of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, and similar subjects.

Since Mr. Brisbane has seen only three pictures, he has probably overlooked the fact that all these, and scores more, were produced and released in 1906, 1907 and 1908.

I would not spend so much valuable time talking about one man's opinions on the motion picture if he didn't happen to occupy a position of such importance and responsibility to the public. When Arthur Brisbane can be so misinformed or so uninformed about the motion picture, we should be little surprised that there is so much support for censorship, or much public indifference to the primary human rights involved. Perhaps the public may be excused, but Arthur Brisbane ought to know better—and more.

As an authority, and as a writer of many subjects, I admire both Mr. Brisbane's expressions and his style, but for him as a motion picture critic, I somehow do not feel the same warmth. His duty to the public should compel him to at least patiently consider the motion picture.

"He Spoke His Valedictory"

By Arthur James,
Publicity Chairman Motion Picture Board of Trade

WHEN Mr. Brisbane said that motion pictures owe their success to the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race he spoke as an editor whose success has been builded on precisely that foundation. I fancy, therefore, he intended to compliment the motion picture makers for being as wise as himself, and Mr. Brisbane could not imagine a higher compliment.

It must have been that Mr. Brisbane, feeling as he himself said, the years coming upon him, spoke his valedictory and bequeathed his mantle as "the greatest editor in the world" to his younger successor, the motion picture.

All his life Mr. Brisbane has been a brilliant performer. Experience and self training have brought his remarkable powers so sensitive to command that they operate instantly, even at the impetus of a whim. Mr. Brisbane has for many years been a highly organized mental machine that operated from a switchboard. He could turn on the current at will and the result has always been brilliant.

It is not fair to expect that with such development and such brilliancy there should also be profound conviction or deep sincerity.

It is not necessary to discuss Mr. Brisbane's abysmal un-information of motion pictures. He himself admits it and his words proved that this particular part of his speech was entirely sincere.

The only fear was that Mr. Brisbane might use his great editorial powers to give aid to the enemy—the censor. This fear has since been dissipated by the sound editorial spanking administered by Mr. Hearst's direction (no other could have ordered it) in the New York American the second day after the dinner.

Hearst Editorial Contradicts

From the New York American

IT is unfortunate that a newspaper man speaking at the Motion Picture Board of Trade should have shown so little appreciation of the rights, privileges and opportunities of the moving picture business, of his own business and of the public.

We believe, and we believe very earnestly, that the freedom of the printed press will not long be secure from attack if the freedom of the pictorial press is not stoutly defended against censorship.

It does not make a particle of difference whether the movies are educational or merely entertaining, whether they present "Hamlet" or Charlie Chaplin, whether they only bore an audience with dreary stuff that is supposed to create an intellectual atmosphere, or whether they make a lot of persons laugh and forget their toil and cares—still the movies are exactly what we have styled them, the pictorial press.

Now, the one essential point to bear in mind is that it makes no difference whether we believe a newspaper to be a cheap and shallow medium of sentimental slush and worked-over rags and tags of superficial information and copybook maxims, or whether we consider it a product of thought and real scholarship. Still that newspaper is entitled to the right of free publication, uncensored by anybody, and answerable only to the laws which prohibit libel and impropriety.

And that is exactly the rightful position of the moving picture press, and every one of us should unite in maintaining that position with all possible effort.

The proposed Federal moving picture censorship, like all State moving picture censorships, is an assault upon the constitutional guarantee of the liberty of printing and publication.

It is a serious and dangerous assault and should be manfully and strenuously resisted by every printed publication in the country and by every citizen who believes in free speech and the other guarantees of republican government.

THE DISTURBER'S DEFENSE

THE only "reply to the replies" which Mr. Brisbane has made to date is his answer to the above editorial in which he paradoxically states that motion pictures will become the greatest educating and political force in the United States. Here is a part of Mr. Brisbane's "defense":

> I do not agree that the moving picture stands as yet on a level with the newspaper. Later it may be as far above the newspaper as the Hoe press is above the cuneiform inscription.
> As it stands today the moving picture, to my mind is less like the newspaper and more like the printed book, the picture or the play.
> Nobody questions the right to censor an indecent book, or prohibit the exhibition of an indecent picture or play.
> Nobody, in my individual opinion, should object to censorship of non-political pictures that move any more than to censorship of pictures that stand still.
> While the moving picture remains a picture, a book, a play or merely an entertaining story, it should be criticized and controlled by law, as ordinary pictures, books and plays are controlled.

When the moving picture becomes, as it will, the greatest educating, political and criticizing force in the United States it will take its place beside and above the daily newspaper. Then it will be the duty of the people of the United States to decide whether or not the constitutional freedom and guarantees given by the people, and not by individuals, to the newspaper shall apply equally to the moving picture.

As a reporter and editor I have studied for many years efforts to entertain and instruct the people.

The decent moving picture will prove profitable and the censorship will not play an important part—as long as the moving picture remains merely an amusement.

Soon the moving picture will be made to tell the story of the corrupt politician or financial organization—then undoubtedly the people will say that such pictures must not be censored.

For the present, censorship by the government—which, by the way, is only threatened—does not seem to me a great menace to the welfare of the people, as I told the moving picture people, who were good enough to invite me to talk to them without telling me in advance what I must say.

Farrar's "Maria Rosa" Coming

Geraldine Farrar, who is probably America's most popular grand opera prima donna, is soon to appear upon the screens of the nation in her third Lasky photoplay, "Maria Rosa."

This is a story of unquenchable Spanish love, and is said to allow Miss Farrar even a greater play of emotion than her great "Carmen," for which she is famed both upon the grand opera stage and upon Lasky screens. "Maria Rosa" is sometimes spoken of as the play which won a husband for the popular diva. Lou-Tellegen, her husband, formerly Sarah Bernhardt's leading man, was acting for the Lasky cameras at the time Miss Farrar began "Maria." He had played the production on the stage and gave Director DeMille and Miss Farrarr the benefit of his knowledge. It was during these discussions that the two artists became well acquainted, with the resulting romance.

"Maria Rosa" is estimated by some to be even more striking a play than either of the singer's other screen dramas—"Carmen" or "Temptation." Opposite Miss Farrarr Wallace Reid plays with the same power as characterized his work in the famous gypsy play. Pedro de Cordoba, Ernest Joy and Anita King form part of the splendid support.

JOIN JUNGLE FILM COMPANY

Lillian Brown Leighton, Character Comedienne and Scenario Writer, and Ralph McComas, Comedian, Join Feature Concern

Lillian Brown Leighton, character comedienne and scenario writer, and Ralph McComas, comedian, have become affiliated with the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, producers of comedies featuring the chimpanzee team, Napoleon and Sally.

Miss Leighton has behind her several years of experience on the stock and vaudeville stage, while previous to her debut before the footlights she owned and published a weekly newspaper. Miss Leighton's last motion picture engagement was with the Selig company, where she remained for five years playing all varieties of parts from drama to comedy.

Although Miss Leighton has had little experience in playing with animals; she has become thoroughly acquainted with Napoleon and Sally. She has studied their accomplishments and is now fully equipped to act with and write for them. Some of her recent pictures with the E. and R. Jungle Film Company are "Stung," "Father's Baby," and "In Dutch."

Ralph McComas, who tips the scales at two hundred and ninety, is a true comedian in every sense. Business routine occupied the earlier years of his young life, but his astonishing rotundity soon earned him an offer from a vaudeville agency. He spent six months on the road and then joined the Universal-Joker company under Allen Curtis' direction. After a short period with Fred Mace he joined the Selig forces and appeared as Chubby Green in the series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center." With the E. and R. Jungle Film Company he has also appeared in "Stung," "Father's Baby," and "In Dutch," and has met with great success in each of these releases.

The E. and R. Jungle Film Company has disposed of the rights on its one-a-week product to the following states and territories: Greater New York, New York state and northern New Jersey, to Greene's Features, 110 West Fortieth street, New York city; Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, E. W. Lynch Enterprises, Boston and Worcester, Mass.; eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, southern New Jersey and Virginia, Electric Theater Supply Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa, Monarch Feature Film Company, Kansas City, Mo.; western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Liberty Film Renting Company, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Schayer Switches

E. Richard Schayer, formerly publicity promoter for the World-Equitable Film Corporation, resigned last week to align himself in a similar capacity with Lewis J. Selzneck, president and general manager of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Mr. Schayer was formerly a press representative for the late Henry B. Harris, Henry W. Savage and Klaw & Erlanger, and at other times a correspondent for the New York World and Herald. At the time of his entering the motion picture field as a publicity man, Mr. Schayer had just returned from nine months' service with the British army in the field as a correspondent for the Wheeler Syndicate and the American Magazine.

Building a Musical Program

BY ALFRED DE MANBY

PROVIDING atmosphere for a picture play by means of music is at once a science and an art. It is more than merely accompanying the pictures or entertaining the audience. The music must aid in interpreting the play; it must aid in directing the mood of the audience.

This does not mean that you need an elaborate orchestra to give the best setting to the pictures in your theater. A good musical program does not depend on the number of musical instruments nor yet on the skill of the players. It depends primarily on the imagination of the director. The man who builds up and directs the music must have a sense of drama, a knowledge of pictures and of an audience, and he must have an unlimited repertoire.

While these requirements may sound very alarming, for in one sense they cannot be acquired, still they can be cultivated, and with a little study an intelligent director can learn to arrange an attractive musical atmosphere for his picture.

The things we have discovered in studying pictures, music and audiences at the Knickerbocker theater, New York and the Colonial theater, Chicago, are applicable to the most simple theater. The first thing the director must remember is that the object of his program is to provide atmosphere for the pictures. The plays then are his first consideration. When I first see the pictures for the week, I study each play with an unprejudiced mind. I analyze its effect on me. Then in arranging my music I take into consideration its mood, its purpose, settings and type of characters. Then, besides the question of selecting the numbers, I must decide how they are to be played.

To illustrate from the music of "The Habit of Happiness," we used the strains of "My Hero" to express the admiration felt for "Sunny," but as Douglas Fairbanks was a gay, vigorous hero, with no trace of sentiment, we played the music briskly, gayly. An entirely different effect could be gained with the same music for another hero. Another illustration from the same play was our use of "What's the Matter With Father?" played in a minor key to introduce Jonathan Pepper while he lived in "the house of gloom." Then when he was cured, was "all right," we played the same music loudly in a major key.

That music does have a decided influence on the audience's enjoyment of a picture was shown recently when we presented an educational feature, "The Film Hunters." It was a beautiful thing, pictures taken of an exploration party in the Columbia National Forest. The last scene was a sunset view, and after we had shown the picture a few times the inspiration came to me to accompany it with "The End of a Perfect Day." Then the audience realized that they liked the adventure and applauded most enthusiastically, which they had not done before.

As important as the setting for each picture is the arrangement of the entire program. Every number on the Colonial program means something. It has been selected for some reason, and it holds that particular place for some reason. Even its title is taken into consideration.

In selecting the solo numbers, I consider not only their beauty, but their relation to what precedes and follows them. They serve as a transition, and this must be a shifting of mood, not a sharp contrast. For while one mood must not be sustained too long, I consider too abrupt a contrast equally bad. After a sad scene, the audience does not wish to laugh at once, and after laughing it will not be serious too soon. Therefore these transition numbers. And in these solo numbers, I try to keep the performer in the background, to give the emphasis to the mood of the music.

These numbers serve excellently to put the audience into the mood for the coming attraction, although they do not always realize what is being done. For instance, when we showed "The Moral Fabric" I needed to introduce a serious play after the bright "Colonial Weekly." To put them in the mood for the beginning scenes, I had one violinist, off stage, play softly strains from "The Mystery of Love." And after the play, which ends sadly, we had a light number, but not too gay, to prepare the people for the humor of a Keystone comedy.

It is a fascinating task, setting pictures to music, and it is interesting to watch the effect motion pictures will have on musical composition. It has opened a new field of musical thought, and already the Triangle company accompanies many of its feature pictures with music specially written. There will always be free scope for the imagination of the director who can build his program to sway the audience in the varying moods of a photodrama.

EXPORT "DIAMOND FROM SKY"

American's Thirty-Reel Feature Sent to Foreign Lands to Answer Great Demand for Thriller

The American Film Company's thirty-chapter photo-play, "The Diamond from the Sky," picturized from story and scenario by Roy L. McCardell, has proven so popular in the United States that a foreign demand has been created. Sixty-one reels of positive film and an equal amount of negative film constitute the recent shipment to foreign lands. This required twenty-one galvanized iron fire-proof cases. Attached end to end, the 122 reels would span a distance of twenty-five miles. The duty to be paid on this export shipment represents a liberal fortune, and is a forceful indication of the great demand for this thrilling photo-novel, which was produced at the studios of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, Cal.

The three latest David Horsley productions are peculiarly adapted to sex. In "Vengeance is Mine" and "A Law Unto Himself," all of the important parts, except one, fell to men. In "The Love Liar," however, the reverse applied. All important parts except two were taken by women.

Triangle Facilities Unsurpassed

BY H. E. AITKEN

President of the Triangle Film Corporation

DURING my five weeks' stay on the coast I made a careful investigation of the Triangle's facilities. I believe our capacities for preparation of the highest class motion picture play to be unsurpassed. The three directors, Griffith, Ince and Sennett, are in frequent conference with a view to the improvement of plays. I found them most enthusiastic over the outlook and I feel certain that the established quality of the Triangle product will still further improve from this time on.

Harry E. Aitken.

Thomas H. Ince, when I left, was busy superintending the removal of his activities from the former studios at Inceville to the new quarter-million-dollar plant at Culver City. Mr. Ince is making this transfer without any loss of time and at the present time he has eight companies at work producing Triangle plays. Among those to be seen in the near future will be found some of quite extraordinary interest. Several new big glass stages lend themselves excellently to the production of special effect, and furnish a positive insurance against the possibility of delayed production during the rainy season. The new Culver City studios were used for the first time about three weeks ago, and today all companies are working there. The Inceville plant is being used for special work to which it is adapted.

Under Mr. Ince's guidance H. B. Warner, the well known dramatic star, has enacted the principal role in several plays. I believe that one of these, "The Beggar of Cawnpore," will be acclaimed as the most artistic production seen in years.

At the Keystone comedy factory I found greater activity than at any time in the history of the Keystone product. Mr. Sennett is now working thirteen companies in Los Angeles, and these, with the company under the direction of Roscoe Arbuckle at Fort Lee, N. J., will be able to turn out the Keystone comedies at a rate never before equalled. The Keystone plant has also been enlarged and now occupies fully two square blocks. A new steel and concrete administration building has been erected, and added facilities for stage and field work supplied. The task of turning out two two-reel Keystone comedies a week is in itself a stupendous one, but I feel confident that there is enough margin of equipment to take care of this and a possible increase, should it become necessary. The individuality of the Keystone comedy, I can assure the motion picture industry, will be maintained and accentuated.

At the Fine Arts studio I found affairs in a most satisfactory condition. There too, added facilities have been supplied. The activity of Mr. Griffith in supervising the product of this studio is unquestionable. I found his energy manifest everywhere in speeding up production. Just before I left, Mr. Griffith, with his aides, had been doing some big battle scenes in which 2,500 people were employed. As an evidence of the perfection of organization I think it is interesting to state that in the course of handling these vast scenes there was but one fire call and 47 ambulance calls during the day. I mention this merely as an indication that the taking of high class motion pictures that will carry conviction to the spectator is not by any means a matter without risk, not alone to physical property, but to human life. The Fine Arts studio has in preparation some excellent material, and Mr. Fairbanks' new picture, "The Good Bad-Man" is a play distinctly different in character to anything this new picture star has attempted, and takes full advantage of his versatility.

At the present time I consider the whole production end of the Triangle Film Corporation in a most satisfactory state. I do not believe that any organization is better prepared to furnish the highest class material and this I think is a conservative statement, in the light of what I have witnessed in Los Angeles during my recent trip. The task of having had to supply nearly 1,500 separate and individual theaters with Triangle plays has been no small one, and when it is considered that the list is growing at a rate that makes it reasonably certain that we will be supplying 10,000 within the year, I feel that we have indeed reached a most satisfactory situation in the twenty weeks that we have been supplying Triangle films to exhibitors throughout the country.

Press Host to Film Stars

The Chicago Press Writer's Club, on Saturday, March 25, in the Gray Room of the Hotel Sherman, will entertain motion picture stars and others at a banquet. Headed by Mrs. Maude Moore Clement, a well known Chicago literary worker, the Entertainment Committee has issued invitations to Colin Campbell, Thomas Santschi, Miss Bessie Eyton, Miss Eugenie Besserer, and other Selig directors and stars, who are at present in Chicago working on "The Crisis." Gilson Willets, the famous author of motion picture stories, has also been invited to attend and speak. It is said that the Press Writers Club has issued over a hundred invitations. The club is composed of all classes of workers in the Chicago literary field and is rapidly growing.

For the first time in the history of Loew's West End theater, in New York City, it was found necessary to open the second balcony. The occasion was the Pathe Gold Rooster play "New York." Miss Florence Reed, the star of the production, was present at the opening and the picture was such a huge success that Mr. Loew decided to use it for the opening of his new Brooklyn theater, the Regent.

A PERFECT BABY

Little Eileen Geraghty of New York Makes Full Score in the "Better Babies" Campaign and "Stars" in Paramount Pictographs

Paramount Pictographs continue to play a very vital role in the campaign for "Better Babies" being waged by the national government, woman's clubs and different state and city officials.

The latest coup accomplished by Paramount is to show in pictures the one perfect baby that has been discovered in New York. Her name is Eileen—an appropriate name for a little Venus, is it not?—and she is just three years old. Her last name is Geraghty. She is one hundred per cent perfect and thus the envy of all the mothers who have seen and heard of her, and they will be many when Eileen has completed her run before the thousands who will view her as "star" in the Paramount "Baby" Pictograph which shows parents how to measure a baby.

It is explained in the pictures that parents should weigh their children regularly and keep records of the weights. Weekly weighings are advisable for the first six months of the baby's life; twice monthly for the rest of the first year, and monthly during the period of the second year. Delicate children should be weighed more frequently, as the weight is the best index of their health.

Paramount strongly maintains that healthy children are the most valuable asset of a nation and that they have entered into this humanitarian movement for healthier children because it is of vital importance to the progress of the human race.

Films Aid "Baby Week"

The following letter has been received by the Editor of MOTOGRAPHY:

Publication of our request for information regarding motion pictures for Baby Week brought helpful responses from several directions.

Will you please give publicity to the fact that many cities will celebrate Baby Week at a later date than March 4-11. Moreover, there is developing greater desire to use motion picture films all through the year, indoors and outdoors, according to the season.

Films are sought not alone relating to the interest of babies, but those treating on various health topics and all phases of social welfare, civic betterment, municipal activities, and the work of institutions and organizations.

Kindly request producers as well as all informed individuals to send us information regarding films likely to be of service.

CALIFORNIA PLAN WINS

Alexander Beyfuss Declares Company's Policy in Making Few Pictures of Highest Quality Is Assured of Success

Alexander Beyfuss, vice-president and general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, has returned to San Francisco, after a month's stay in New York looking after his company's initial release of its "better-than-program" pictures. Before departing, Mr. Beyfuss concluded the sale of the various territorial rights throughout the United States of "The Unwritten Law," in which Beatriz Michelena is starred, and gave out the following statement:

"We are convinced that the state rights method of distributing is the big and absolutely the only way for our policy, that of producing five or six pictures a year superior to those released by the programs. In this connection, we note with interest, a resolution adopted at the fourth annual convention of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in session at Albany a week ago, to the effect that the 'Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is opposed to the program system now enforced by a majority of the producers, and we favor a system of open booking.'

"We want to impress once more that we have had no quarrel with the program, but merely wish to go on record that the state rights or open distributing policy is the only way for a concern like ours, with a policy of producing but a few exceptionally good pictures a year, and that we could not release our product on the program basis and exist.

"In disposing of 'The Unwritten Law' by state rights, we have conducted our negotiations strictly on a business basis. Our state rights facts and figures were not the result of hasty conclusions, but were based on careful investigations conducted for the past year. In certain territories, our prices, we found after a thorough examination of present conditions to be too high, a condition which we were readily willing to admit and adjust by lower quotations, in order that the buyer might still enjoy his reasonable profit. During our investigations we found that at this time, because of the great number of feature pictures purchased each month, conditions were at the lowest ebb as far as prices are concerned, this condition making, however, a keener demand for the really good pictures, for which good prices always can be obtained.

"Another feature which the state rights buyers appreciated was the fact that we did not use offers submitted to us as a leverage to bid the price up on other prospective buyers. Wherever two purchasers in the same territory offered a similar price, the sale was made to the one whom we considered the most responsible financially. His ability to place our plays in the best theaters also was considered."

Metro Gets Lockwood and Allison

STARS BEGIN SERIES OF FEATURES

HAROLD LOCKWOOD and May Allison have signed extended contracts with Fred J. Balshofer to appear exclusively in photoplays to be produced by the Quality Pictures Corporation, which will be released on the Metro program.

Mr. Balshofer will direct the Lockwood-Allison feature productions, and will be assisted in this work by Howard Truesdell. The first production already is well under way and several unusual and distinctive stories have been obtained which are admirably suited to the talents of these two popular stars.

Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison recently came to New York from Santa Barbara, California, where they were engaged in making feature productions for the American-Mutual. It was rumored that they had eloped and were married, but this was emphatically denied. According to Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison, the rumor had its foundation either in the brain of some practical joker or else of someone who wished to injure them, when they made their presence known in New York. Before appearing on the American-Mutual program Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison were among the foremost stars engaged by the Famous Players.

The addition of Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison to the list of stars offered on the Metro program will cause distinct satisfaction among photoplay lovers. While Metro has already a long list of stage and screen stars presenting a greater diversity of talent, than any feature producing company, still there was a place left for just such a combination as Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison. They are a distinct addition even to the program which already has such eminent stars as Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Martha Hedman, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Mme. Petrova, Mabel Taliaferro, Mary Miles Minter, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Julius Steger, Marguerite Snow, Hamilton Revelle, Lionel Barrymore, William Faversham, Valli Valli, and other well-known artists.

Mr. Balshofer has exercised especial care to select scenarios for Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison in which youth, romance, adventure and a spirit of the great outdoors predominates. It is in such productions, that this couple have always excelled and which have won for them thousands of admirers in every quarter of the globe. Mr. Lockwood is one of the most fearless artists now acting before the camera and takes a keen delight in doing so-called "stunts" of the most dangerous character. He has been injured repeatedly for his daring, but never discouraged.

Ethel Barrymore, the gifted dramatic star, who is appearing exclusively on the screen in Metro wonderplays, will next be seen on the Metro program in "The Kiss of Hate," a stirring five-part feature produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation under the direction of William Nigh, dealing with the persecution of the Jews in Russia. This production will mark Miss Barrymore's greatest achievement in the silent drama, and in many respects the greatest dramatic effort of her career on either stage or screen. The story was written by Mme. De Grissac especially for Miss Barrymore and gives the gifted star the fullest opportunity to display her distinctive dramatic talent and magnetic personal charm which have made her name a household word among American audiences.

Miss Barrymore is surrounded by an exceptionally strong supporting cast including H. Cooper Cliffe, the eminent English dramatic actor. Mr. Cliffe was seen in support of Miss Barrymore in her previous Metro offering, "The Final Judgment," which critics declared to be one of the best features produced last year. Others in the cast include Niles Welch, William L. Abingdon, Robert Elliott, Martin J. Faust, William Boyd, Roy Applegate, Frank Montgomery, Ilean Hume, Daniel Sullivan and other well known artists of the screen and stage.

William Nigh, one of the foremost directors now producing for Metro, is producing the Barrymore feature, assisted by David Thompson. Mr. Nigh has many Metro achievements to his credit including "A Yellow Streak," in which Lionel Barrymore is starred, "Emmy of Stork's Nest," with Mary Miles Minter, and "Her Debt of Honor," in which he appeared himself, sharing the honors with Valli Valli.

Miss Barrymore is one of the highest salaried stars now appearing in motion pictures. She is under contract with Metro for three years to appear in at least four feature productions a year during that period. She is to receive $40,000 for each feature, which brings her contract to a total of $480,000.

Sidney Drew, the new Metro star, who, with his wife, is engaged in making one-reel comedies for the Metro program, brought the indignation of a score of people upon his head recently when he advertised for a goat to be used in one of his comedies. The day following the publication of the advertisement eight young men and boys were at the studio with goats they hoped to hire out for the picture. Mr. Drew had neglected to state the hour for interviewing goat owners, and the boys were there three hours ahead of him. The studio is on the sixth floor and the goats, when not held in leash, had the time of their young lives upsetting everything in sight. The stage hands and property men were up in arms, but there was nothing to do but wait for Mr. Drew. When he arrived and faced the problem of making a selection an agent for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals came in and announced that he would not permit a goat being kept a captive in the studio. So Mr. Drew was obliged to substitute a bock beer sign.

During the making of their first Metro picture Miss Allison and Mr. Lockwood met with a unique experience in the Maine woods. Their hotel was destroyed while the stars and twenty other members of the Quality company were working in the forest. and the whole company was obliged to return to New York in their "working clothes," which in this case consisted of such apparel as mackinaws and lumber-jack socks. Needless to say they attracted a good deal of attention when they arrived at the Grand Central station and percolated to their hotels.

CRISP FORMERLY SOLDIER

Briton Who Created Much Favorable Comment in Clune Photo-Drama "Ramona" Has Varied Career

Donald Crisp, who created much favorable comment by his work in the Clune photo-drama, "Ramona," is a native of London, England. He was born there July 27, 1885.

His father was James Crisp, a Scotchman, who never ceased to roll his "r's" like a drum, nor to be proud of the sturdy Covenanter stock from which he sprang. For twenty-eight years the elder Crisp was chief veterinary surgeon at Buckingham Palace. His standing in the community is attested by his membership in the London County Council and his place as head of the Royal Humane Society of Great Britain. Young Donald got a rigorous Presbyterian training, but the solid grounding that he received in the theology of John Knox did not smother his spirit of adventure. His fourteenth year found him one of a party of five youthful companions from Kensington Gardens, setting out without parental consent to investigate the larger world.

The band had heard of the wonders of Paris, and started for that great city. For eighteen days they prolonged their escapade, and Crisp carries to this day the evidences of the trip. In Paris the young Britons got into a fight with Paris' most dreaded outlaws, the Apaches, and while they emerged from the melee victorious, they took back to England a choice collection of stab wounds and at least some of the money which the apaches sought to take from them.

At seventeen years Crisp was a soldier in the Boer war in South Africa. For two years he served with the King's Regiment, the Tenth Hussars, and a seven-bar medal, which is among his treasures, records the fact that he was in the battles of Ladysmith, Kimberly, Blomefontein and other big engagements.

Crisp was a singer at the great St. Paul's Cathedral in London for three years, and many a time looked down in the little body of Queen Victoria as he caroled his music in the famous sanctuary as a boy soprano. It was Crisp's voice which brought him to America. He came to New York without definite plans for the future. Luck brought him the chance to appear at a benefit engagement for the San Francisco sufferers, held at the Knickerbocker theater. John C. Fisher at once engaged Crisp for a company he was organizing to sing light opera in Havana for three months.

Following this engagement Crisp went with the company all through Mexico and back into the United States. Subsequently he became stage manager for Cohan and Harris in the musical productions, "The Little Millionaire," "The Yankee Prince" and "Fifty Miles from Boston."

It was while engaged with this firm that his attention was attracted to what was then known as the "jumping pictures." That was six years ago. The Biograph company was the only American concern attempting to develop a serious art out of the new invention. The salaries were small and the artists were chiefly people from the stage. They filled their regular theater engagements at night and worked in the pictures during the day. Among the pioneers, along with Crisp, were Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Henry Walthall, Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Sidney Drew, D. W. Griffith, Owen Moore, Billy Quirk and others.

Fox April Releases

Four widely dissimilar William Fox productions are to be released in April. "A Modern Thelma," April 3, features Vivian Martin and Harry Hilliard in a romantic story of Norway. "Blue Blood and Red," April 10, is the first outdoor, western play Fox has produced. Raoul Walsh has directed the play, featuring George Walsh and Doris Pawn. James A. Marcus appears as a ranch owner. "Blazing Love," April 17, is Virginia Pearson's first Fox picture. In it she commits suicide. The last drama, "A Man of Sorrow," April 24, features William Farnum. It is based on the stage success, "Hoodman Blind," and deals with the drink problem.

French and English representatives of the Gaumont company have arrived in New York City and will look over the properties of the American Gaumont with a view to establishing new studios at Flushing. The Paris representative is M. Leon Gaumont himself. The Englishman is Reginald Bronhead, an official of the England branch.

Pictures Before Politics

HORSLEY MAKES STATEMENT

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that David Horsley, the well-known producer of Mutual films, is about to sail into the race for the nomination to Congress from the tenth district of California, he is still very much on the job in the production of film features which uphold the standard set for years by the big producer. Two five-reelers and a one-reel comedy released from the Horsley studios in four days are the proof of that fact.

Crane Wilbur.

Mr. Horsley's candidacy for Congress has stirred up a great deal of discussion in the picture industry and of especial interest is the statement he issued from Los Angeles last week as to his reasons for entering the race for a position as understudy to Uncle Sam:

"I believe that the importance of the motion picture industry, not only throughout the country but particularly in Los Angeles, justifies the putting forth of a candidate identified with the wonderful growth of the business in Southern California.

"The motion picture industry has grown since 1909 from the spending of a few hundred dollars per week to over half a million dollars per week in the city of Los Angeles alone, and hostile legislation, which was proposed at Washington during the past two months, has seriously threatened the permanence of the picture business, and the manufacturers of the country were put to enormous expense and inconvenience to fight this proposed legislation.

"And while the motion picture industry is the fifth in importance and investment in the country, there was not a single representative or senator at Washington who knew anything about the picture business at first hand, and they were very nearly led to the passage of the Hughes bill, which would have seriously jeopardized the investment of every manufacturer, exchange and theater in the United States.

"In order to safeguard the film industry the idea of electing a congressman was broached, and the logical place to elect him from seemed to be this city, as more than eighty per cent of the world's pictures are made here. Over thirty million dollars were spent in Los Angeles in 1915 in the making of motion pictures, and at the present rate of expenditure and growth, over forty million dollars will be spent during this year.

"This is a matter which involves the interests, not only of those employed in actually making the pictures, but it affects owners of real estate and business houses who supply the wants not only of the companies but of their employes."

Milton H. Fahrney.

It will be seen from this frank statement by Mr. Horsley that he is fully alive to the effects of censorship on the film business in all its phases and his ideas are in line with the opinions of those most closely conversant with the national film situation. There can be no logical doubt but that a representative in the United States House would be one of the biggest guns the film industry could possibly bring to bear upon the question of censorship. Such a representation would also serve as a constant safeguard for the unhampered development throughout the ENTIRE country of the photoplay business of the future.

In view of that it is well that every person connected directly or indirectly with the industry in Southern California be urged to turn out in support of Mr. Horsley's candidacy.

To get back to the statement made in the first paragraph of this story, the activities in the Los Angeles Horsley studios continues at the usual rapid pace—or perhaps more so. It is evident that Mr. Horsley does not intend that his debut into politics shall interfere with his business.

Among the mutual releases on the program between March 24 and 27 Horsley productions will hold a prominent place. During those four days three productions will issue from the Horsley film factories.

The first of these pictures to be distributed is to be the one-reel Cub comedy, "On the Rampage," released March 24. The shining light of the film will be George Ovey in his original character of Jerry. The latter's frantic and ludicrous efforts to break into society form the meat of this comedy repast. In order to accomplish his diabolical purpose Jerry fearlessly impersonates a nobleman. The surprising and snappy situations resulting are best left to the imagination.

"The Hidden Law," a Mutual masterpicture of the de luxe edition, will be released on March 25. This production features Margaret Gibson and William Clifford. The plot visualizes a story based on the law of reckoning. Thodosia Harris, who is responsible for the scenario, has constructed vivid characters alive with human interest and has laid the action in unusally interesting environments. The scenes of the first part of the play are taken from the intimate phases of stage life; the latter half of the film takes the spectator into the wilds of the west. The Bostock animals give some very decided touches of realism to this release. Miss Gibson and Mr. Clifford are happily cast and they are amply supported by such competent players as Frederick Montaige, Robert Kenyon, Mae Adams, Doris Baker, Marie Gavette, John Oaker and Pauline Williams.

The third of the releases mentioned is "The Love Liar." This is said to be the biggest production coming to date from the Horsley studios. Weeks of time were spent in its making and every detail is alive with the unusual.

An extraordinary amount of time and money was spent to make this production one of the supreme examples of the photoplay. It is the creation of Crane Wilbur. His principal character is a noted violinist, an eccentric and extremely temperamental man who believes himself in love with every pretty face that crosses his soulful gaze. He unconsciously tells so many "love lies" that he comes to believe them himself, which of course results in his speedy undoing.

Crane Wilbur himself plays the feature-personage of the lover of lies. His co-players leave nothing to be desired, for they are Lucy Payton, Mae Gaston, Nan Christy and Ella Golden.

The Cub comedy brand of Horsley has been in existence for but seven months, but in that time the films have won a place next the funny-bones of exhibitors and fans alike. Everyone connected with the brand is deserving of generous credit, but the lion's share perhaps should go to Milton H. Fahrney, who has directed these new one-reel subjects and who, with Mr. Horsley, has gathered the present Cub organization. It was Mr. Fahrney, too, who dug George Ovey up out of the twilight and placed him in the middle of the comedy spot light.

Mr. Fahrney's performances with the Cubs are not to be wondered at when his wide experience is considered. He began in pictures in 1908 when he joined the Edison company as author and director. He had served previously along the same lines on the speaking stage. In 1909 he was engaged by Mr. Horsley to continue his work along his comedy lines. He has had free play for his ideas and the success of the "Cubs" has proved his unusual abilities in producing comedies that register grins on the faces of all those who chance to view them on the screen. A fine example of this will be found in "Jerry's Big Game," which is to be seen for the first time during the month of March.

It is interesting to note that George Ovey is featured in all of the four Cub comedies which Horsley will release on the Mutual program during the month of April. The first of these to come along will be "The Winning Punch."

Of the two five-reel subjects which Horsley will release during April, "The Leopard's Bride" will appear first—on April 15. The scene is laid in India and Theodosia Harris has injected a lot of novelty into the plot. Margaret Gibson, noted for her beauty, will play the leading woman, and William Clifford will furnish the male part of the heroing. Bostock's leopards also have feature parts in the film.

The second five-reel Horsley for April is "The Conscience of John David." Its release date is April 24. Crane Wilbur is the featured personage and he is also the author of the play, which is based upon a pathological theme.

HUGHES BILL IN DANGER

Proposed Censorship Measure Likely to Be Sidetracked for Other Legislation and Be Put Over to Next Session

THE House Committee on Education has had several meetings during the week at which the new Hughes censorship bill was considered, but the draft was not completed and the indications now are that it will not be ready until the end of the month. The determination of the House and Senate leaders to speed up legislation with the object of bringing the present session to a close by July 1 if possible may result in the whole question of censorship going over until the session which begins December next. This is the short session of the 64th or the present Congress, and it expires by constitutional limitation on March 4, 1917.

It is believed that if the Hughes bill is reported and the indications are that it will stir up prolonged debate, it will be sidetracked in order that the appropriation bills and other necessary legislation can be considered and passed. Chairman Hughes announces him firm determination to have the censorship bill reported at as early a date as possible and to urge its consideration and passage in the House at the present session.

The Committee on Education has been furnished by J. W. Binder with a membership list of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. This information was requested by Chairman Hughes in connection with information he is collecting for inclusion in his report on the censorship bill relative to the attitude of motion picture manufacturers, distributors and exchange men on censorship. Mr. Binder has declared that about four per cent of the industry favored the censorship proposition and 96 per cent were against it and favored the Towner bill. Following is a copy of the statement furnished by Mr. Binder:

Mr. Binder also has furnished a statement in connection with the production of pictures in January and February, the information contained therein evidently having been obtained from the National Board of Censorship, as the figures for January are identical with figures sent to the committee by the National Board and published in Motography, March 11. This statement given below concludes as follows:

The Metro Pictures Corporation, which was originally quoted as in favor of this legislation, has since repudiated the statement quoted, and is today actively opposed.

The Metro Pictures Corporation was quoted in connection with censorship legislation as set forth on page 286 of Motography of February 5, in the report of the proceedings before the House Committee on Education on the Hughes bill, Arthur S. Friend, attorney for the Lasky Company and others, reading a letter signed by C. A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and addressed to W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. This is the statement furnished by Mr. Binder:

It will be seen from the above that the concerns which are favoring this censorship legislation, produced in the months shown above (and these are representative average months) less than 5% of the total output of motion pictures for these months.

The Metro Pictures Corporation, which was originally quoted as in favor of this legislation, has since repudiated the statement quoted, and is today actively opposed.

AMERICAN BUSY ON FEATURES

New Master Pictures, De Luxe Edition, Shorter Dramas and "Beauty" Comedies on List of Activities

Activities at the studios of the American (Mutual) company in Santa Barbara are concentrated on the production of some excellent Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, shorter dramas and "Beauty" comedies.

Having just completed a thrilling three-reel drama by Karl Coolidge, entitled "Four Months," Director Carl LeViness has started upon another play by the same author. This is entitled "The Lesson" and shows the remoulding influence of love upon a young butterfly girl, who marries a farmer simply to inherit money she could not have otherwise. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Perilat are in the leading roles.

Director Thomas Ricketts is busy in the production of "The Pendulum of Chance," a story by Anthony Coldeway. The drama pictures graphically the fact that the business efficiency which completely overlooks the personal element may be carried so far that it defeats its own ends. A financial crash brings about a deeper understanding between a hard working husband ad a frivolous wife. Lizette Throne and Edward Coxen have the leading roles, while George Field has the rather thankless task of playing the heavy.

Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor, Harry Von Meter, Louise Lester and Harry McCabe are still working on the attractive Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "April," a story of mountain folk, which is being produced under the direction of Donald Macdonald. Good contrast in characterization is obtained by placing a young man of the "blue grass" region in the half primitive mountain country among the mountain folk, where he loses his heart to "April," a wild flower of the district. Helene Rosson has an opportunity for charming work in the role of the maid.

William Russell is directing, as well as playing the leading role, in a five reel feature, entitled "The Secret Mating," a picture in which the "Eternal Triangle" gives way to a four cornered affair. Hylda Hollis, Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan support Mr. Russell.

Art Acord, Nita Davis, Dick Le Reno and Lawrence Payton are being featured in a delightful three-reel drama which Director William Bertram is producing at the American Mutual studios, entitled "Under Azure Skies." Cattle rustlers, struggles, and a deep underlying touch of romance makes this western picture out of the ordinary and intensely human.

CLERGY HIT THEDA BARA

Cincinnati Ministers Request Mayor to Curb Certain Films Which They Describe as Objectionable; Take Slap at Musical Shows

Cincinnati clergymen contend that certain photo-plays in which Theda Bara appears should be suppressed.

Other films now being shown in the Ohio metropolis also are described by the pastors as objectionable.

Among those who have requested Mayor Puchta and Safety Director Friedlander to take action against these films are the Rev. John F. Herget, representing the Federation of Protestant Churches, Philip Herget of the Federation of Catholic Societies and F. P. Rowe, secretary of the Western Society for the Suppression of Vice.

Dr. Herget previously had conferred with Post-Office Inspector-in-Charge, Col. William McHenry, who promised that he would make a thorough investigation. The representatives of the organizations protested against the use of runways for chorus girls in theaters. They also asked that the exhibition of two motion pictures, "The Serpent" and "Forbidden Fruit" be stopped. They presented letters of complaint from prominent Cincinnatians about the literature they had received relating to a musical comedy known as "The World of Pleasure."

Dr. Herget made the charge that the orders of the State Board of Censors for eliminations in films have been in many instances disregarded in Cincinnati, and he criticized the state board for not being more effectual in enforcing its orders. He pointed out, however, that the State Board of Censors was handicapped in not having a corps of inspectors to follow up its work and declared that it was therefore the duty of the local public safety authorities to see that the orders were enforced where their attention was called to violations as he had done in several instances.

SELZNICK MAKES STATEMENT

Clara Kimball Young and Manager Give Out Facts Regarding Plans of the New C. K. Y. Film Corporation

In order to give the trade a factful understanding of the situation of the recently organized Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, the star and Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the company, have issued over their signatures a clarifying statement, the gist of which follows:

"Miss Young's contract with the World Film Corporation will terminate the fifteenth of July, 1916. Miss Young will then immediately begin work in her own studio on the first production in which she is to be presented by the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. This will be released in October.

"Our plans have been perfected for the maintenance of a completely equipped studio of our own, and the production of our pictures will be pursued without reference to or connection with any other organization in the film business. The Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation is not affiliated with any other film organization and we urge all our friends in the business to pay no heed to any utterances or announcements concerning Miss Young and her activities subsequent to July 15, except those statements having their source in the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation offices.

"Miss Young desires further to make it clear that she has no intention of accepting any of the numerous and flattering vaudeville and theatrical offers she has received.

"We wish to emphasize the fact that our output will be marketed and controlled exclusively by our organization and that exhibitors desiring to avail themselves of our service will make application direct."

"WAR-TORN POLAND" READY

Arrangements Completed for Exhibition of Feature Film—Production Is More Than 6,000 Feet in Length

Arrangements have been practically completed for the exhibition of the feature film, "War-torn Poland."

The production is over 6,000 feet in length and is said to present a more complete series of war pictures than any production ever released in the United States. While a majority of the scenes are laid in devastated Poland, yet the feature film shows the general war conditions in Europe in startling fashion.

"War-torn Poland" presents exciting scenes along the Italian battlefront; at Saloniki, Greece, now occupied by the Allies; gripping news pictorials from the French, Belgian, Turkish and Russian firing lines, etc.

Many of the rulers of the countries at war, together with world-famous generals and others, now in the public eye, are presented in their varied fields of activity. The king of the Belgians, the president of France, Emperor William, General Von Hindenberg, and General Joffre posed for this film as did King George of England and numerous commanding and staff officers at the battle front.

There are also close-up, intimate views of Paderewski, the great Pole, who has labored for so long in the service of his unfortunate countrymen across the sea. Paderewski is seen together with Gov. Dunne, of Illinois. Paderewski is also shown appealing to forty thousand of his fellow countrymen and others in the United States, to aid in relief work for the starving in Poland.

While "War-torn Poland" in six sensational and instructive reels, will no doubt be released through a regular service, arrangements are nearing completion for this feature film to be shown under the auspices of the largest Polish newspapers in the United States. Many requests for exclusive territorial rights are also being received and are carefully considered.

A large percentage of the proceeds from the exhibition of "War-torn Poland" will be devoted to the Polish relief fund which is utilized for furnishing the necessities of life and comforts to the unfortunates of a war-stricken country.

HILLER TO SOUTH AMERICA

President of Claridge Films, Inc., to Visit Latin Nations with View of Establishing Branch in Buenos Aires

L. L. Hiller, president of the Claridge Films, Inc., is planning to leave within two weeks for South America was a view to establishing a branch of his company in the South American metropolis, Buenos Aires. Many inquiries for rights to the Claridge Films productions have come to their office and instead of having the films handled through the customary channels, Mr. Hiller thinks it best to look over the ground with a view toward establishing a South American office for the Claridge Films. Although she planned on leaving several weeks ago, Mrs. Agnes Egan Cobb, general manager of the Claridge Films, left last week on her trip, as far west as St. Louis. Because of the many western and foreign buyers in town, Mrs. Cobb has been delayed in starting from time to time. She will visit the various exchanges which have bought the rights of the Claridge Films' first two releases for their territories. Robert T. Haines in "The Heart of New York" and the William Courtleigh production "The Birth of Character." The Claridge Company reports unprecedented results in these features, and within a few days the third release of Claridge Films will be announced.

Marshall Neilan in Chicago

Marshall Neilan has been summoned from the Selig Pacific studios to play the part of "Colfax" in the production of "The Crisis" being made at the Selig plant in the Windy City. Mr. Neilan just completed his work in the Red Seal play, "The Cycle of Fate," and this will be released on the V-L-S-E about April third.

The cast working in Chicago on "The Crisis" includes—besides Mr. Neilan—George Fawcett, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer and Leo Pierson. A month's time will be used in filming scenes at Vicksburg, Mississippi, and on the historical grounds surrounding St. Louis.

"The Girl and the Game"

Signal Serial Chapter 13, "A Fight for a Fortune" Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE various complications in this episode are well arranged, and the usual measure of excitement and danger has been put into this chapter of "The Girl and the Game." Seagrue is now attempting to regain possession of Superstition mine, which he sold under the impression that it was worthless. It proved still productive, and his trickery is now directed toward cheating Rhinelander out of the property.

Spike, the convict, who is so interestingly played by Director J. P. McGowan, again appears. He had been returned to the penitentiary a few chapters ago, charged with being one of the gang who murdered Helen's father. When this installment begins, the true murderer has confessed and Spike is to be released from jail. Rhinelander and Helen go to Las Vegas, Rhinelander to pay the quarterly installment to Seagrue for the mine, Helen to meet Spike on his release.

But Seagrue, consistently a villian, has laid a deep plot to separate Rhinelander from the money before the payment can be paid. He hired two crooks to rob Rhinelander. The men set about their business, and then things happen at the usual rate of speed.

The men exchange bags with Rhinelander, thus getting possession of the money. Rhinelander does not discover his loss until he is in Seagrue's office. But soon after their theft, the crooks are captured by the police as suspicious characters and taken to jail. Rhinelander telephones to Helen and Spike, asking them to bring securities from the bank. It is after banking hours, but with their usual resourcefulness they get the funds anyway. They are caught, however, and taken to the police station. Rhinelander's recognition wins them their freedom, just as the two crooks are freed because of lack of evidence against them. As the men leave, Rhinelander recognizes his bag, which they are still carrying. The men rush into a car of a freight train, and Helen follows them on a passenger train. She leaps from the top of this to the freight car, and gets the precious bag from the robbers. Spike and Rhinelander, following in an automobile, come to her rescue, and the crooks are defeated. Rhinelander then can pay Seagrue.

"Snow Stuff"

Three Reel "Mustang" Comedy Released March 24 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS "Buck Parvin and the Movies" story is a delightful offering. It is beautiful, as are almost all plays of the "Mustang" brand; it is very interesting; it is genuinely funny. What more can an audience wish for? The roles are handled very well, as in the previous stories. Art Acord plays Buck Parvin. Larry Peyton is Monty, the director of the company, Ashton Dearholt is Jack La Rue, the leading man, and Dixie Stratton is Myrtle Manners, leading lady. Joe Massey is the property man.

Monty's company are in Truckee for "snow stuff." Eskimo costumes, dog teams and sleds are in the picture, and Monty is so busy he has no time even to go skating. Then the western manager of the film corporation arrives on the scene, investigating. George Clancy enacts the role of the director excellently. He is a most important personage, but to the company is very much of a nuisance, always in the way. He spoils scenes, and is well snubbed by the whole company. He is especially disagreeable to Myrtle Manners, leading lady, with whom he falls in love. When he takes occasion to show Monty how a love scene should be acted, and in it tries to kiss Myrtle, she gives him a push which sends him over the cliff into an icy stream below.

When the director finally gets back east, much the worse for his experiences in "snow stuff," he insists that the whole company be fired. Seligman, the president, refuses to discharge Monty, but agrees to let Myrtle out. Then the completed film arrives from the west, and is run off in the projection room. Seligman cannot understand the manager's objection to Monty's company, as he watches the excellent views, until on the screen is flashed the manager's encounter with Myrtle and his plunge into the river. After that, Seligman, delighted at the girl's spirit, disgusted with the director, "wouldn't fire Manners under any circumstances," but he can get along without the manager.

William Bertram directed the play. Charles James, Hardy Gibson and Perry Banks complete the cast. The subtitles from the Van Loan story are as effective as the scenes and add greatly to the humor. Clever subtitles, like these, are a delight. In short, the whole play is an entertainment any exhibitor may be glad to offer his patrons.

"The Havoc"

Essanay V. L. S. E. Featuring Gladys Hanson Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TO MAKE a five reel film drama from this play by H. S. Sheldon in which the interest lies in three characters was not an easy task. There is little movement in the play. The development of the story is in the minds of the three people, and faithfully to portray the emotions without words and with little action was a test of acting for Miss Hanson, Lewis Stone and Bryant Washburn. They proved themselves equal to the task, and the characters of the woman, her husband and the other man stand out vividly. The players are to be commended highly on the consistency of their characterizations as a whole and on the many fine touches.

The play is sad, a story of wrong-doing, of weakness, of heartlessness. The theme chosen is one of the variations of the "triangle" situation and is a true, detailed study of three types of characters. Though interesting, it is not very cheerful, and one comes to the conclusion that the three were a particularly unfortunate combination; almost that marrying a villain under any circumstances is a sad mistake.

Much attention has been given the settings, which are good. The story begins in the offices of a rich corporation in whose employ are Richard Craig (Lewis Stone), a cold, hard man of business, and Paul Hessert (Bryant Washburn), a young man who is both weak and deceitful. Craig is interested in Hessert, believing he is capable of better things. Craig marries his secretary, Kate, a quiet young woman, not in love with him but who hopes to be happy when married. There is a pretty dissolve which shows her remembrance of her parents' happy home life, a memory which influences her decision to marry Craig.

Craig hopes to help Hessert by bringing the young man into their home. Then, as Kate has not been happy with Craig, she falls in love with the younger man. Craig is blind to the situation; Hessert is a villain; Kate is unhappy and reads a novel called "The Downfall of Nora," which seems to have an unfortunate influence on her. Instead of reading a page of this book we are shown a dissolve picturing a scene from it. This is cleverly done, for the highly romantic little scene is a good contrast to the more realistic scenes depicting Kate's own life.

Then Craig discovers the disloyalty of his wife and his friend. There is a long subtitle in which he points out what their punishment will be for the havoc they have wrought. Kate is divorced and marries Hessert. They have an unhappy time, as predicted, and at last, after five years, Hessert proves a thief and must escape. Kate at last shows a spark of spirit, tells him to go away, and she returns to Craig's office, again as his secretary, to earn a living for herself and her child. The play ends, therefore, where it began.

Subtitles could have been used to better advantage in this play. There are many scenes of conversation which would have been clarified by short, but effective subtitles.

"In the Shuffle"

Three Act "Flying A" Drama Released March 28 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS play is a preachment against gambling, but in presenting the lesson, more gambling and drinking scenes are shown than are absolutely necessary. A number of these could be eliminated with benefit to the play. But after these first scenes, in "Bluff" Stuart's gambling resort, the play takes a more pleasant turn when Sharlee Evans' a nurse, is introduced. Winnifred Greenwood is very delightful in this role.

Edward Coxen is Bill Ensor, the silent partner of "Bluff" Stuart, the owner of a gambling resort. He wins the enmity of "The Kid," a youth of weak character whom he will not allow to gamble. There is an encounter in the resort, and Bill is wounded. He is taken to a hospital and there meets Sharlee Evans, a nurse. A romance is begun and goes well until, after Bill is released from the hospital, "The Kid," who is Sharlee's brother, sees them together and tells his sister who Bill is. Then Sharlee sends him away, telling him, as shown in a dissolve, the havoc which the gambling vice wrought in her family, of her father's ruin and her brother's tendencies. Bill decides to give up his interest in the resort and to save "The Kid."

He tells the boy of the part "Bluff" Stuart played in his father's ruin, and the boy decides to break away from his dangerous habits. Then there is a dramaitc episode in which Stuart is killed and "The Kid" is accused of the murder. He is cleared, in the end, and Bill and he go west, to begin anew. The last scene shows them in the mountains, awaiting a visit from Sharlee and her mother.

Thomas Ricketts directed the play, which holds the interest throughout. The suspense is well arranged. There are many pretty scenes. George Field plays "Bluff" Stuart, while William Marshall is "The Kid." The roles are well acted.

"Her Great Price"

A Rolfe-Metro Drama Featuring Mabel Taliaferro, Released March 20. Reviewed by George W. Graves

WITH a story of excellent quality and all the fine setting that can be supplied by production on a big scale, Mabel Taliaferro has in this picture all the opportunity she could desire to display her wonderful art. And this art is the kind that the gradually refining taste of the motion picture public is clamoring for in more distinct tones with the passing of each week. "Her Great Price" is wholly true to the name "wonder-play," the name which is so often seen on Metro announcements. It is a triumph at all points—acting, plot and direction.

Miss Taliaferro's entrance into the motion picture arena is altogether an impressive one. All the exquisiteness of her person and supreme acting register perfectly on the screen and her grip upon the spectator is magnetic. In one of the visualized reminiscences of the leading character's past life, some perfect child impersonation is done by the star, showing her ability to portray child characteristics exactly. The observer is nearly fooled into believing that a child actress is playing the part, so entire is the change from a downhearted young woman to a vivacious and betattered youngster.

The romance was written by Florence Auer and scenarioized by June Mathis. Its theme takes a number of novel turns and the style of presentation is also unconventional. The staging and photography is up to the high standards that one is accustomed to see in Metro pictures. A studio set with all its appointments savor strongly of Washington Square Bohemianism, and the cameraman's ingenuity shows itself in novel views of night fireworks.

Supporting Miss Taliaferro are Henry Mortimer, Richard Barbee, George Fauncefort, William Cahill, Jeanette Horton and Ruth Chester. Edwin Carewe directed.

The story mostly concerns the experiences of Agnes Lambert, a discouraged young novelist who has been befriended by three young men who live in an artist's studio. As the result of a despondent fit she is about to poison herself when a wealthy friend of "The Trinity" enters the room. As the girl will accept help in no other way, Leighton makes a strange proposal to her. He agrees to pay her $50,000 if she will have her life insured for that amount in his favor. It is understood that, if at the end of a year she is still discouraged with life, she can then carry out her former intention.

Agnes immediately starts to enjoy the luxuries of life and during the succeeding months becomes very much attached to Leighton, with whom she studies sculpture. "The Trinity" believes that the fortune has come as an inheritance. In her younger days Agnes had been taken into the home of a rich lady who cared for her as a daughter. This happiness was broken off abruptly, however, when Ruth, the snobbish daughter, caused her to be sent away.

Now Agnes learns that Leighton is engaged to Ruth and she goes to her in a triumphant mood to make her give him up. But, in the midst of a volley of scornful words, Agnes discovers that Ruth has become blind—the result of an accident, and goes away in shame.

Agnes begs Leighton to marry the girl he is engaged to and show himself to be strong and noble. It is now Ruth's turn to show her real character. She implores Leighton to let her do the first big thing she has ever done in her life. Leighton, now free, tries at once to get in touch with Agnes, but too late, for she, despondent, has carried out her bargain.

"Dollars and the Woman"

A Lubin-V. L. S. E. Six-Part Drama Released March 20. Reviewed by George W. Graves

TOM MOORE and Ethel Clayton are at their best in "Dollars and The Woman," the latest Lubin offering for the V. L. S. E. program. The acting of both is as convincing and vivid as the story which they enact. There is no attempt at forced acceleration in the action; it moves along at a smooth and even gait and holds the interest through to the finish. It is possible enough that the story could be told in five reels, but it is delightful as it stands. Albert Payson Terhune is the author.

The director's touch is felt throughout the play in the way of good settings, cleverly arranged situations, etc. The picture was produced by Joseph Kaufman. Others who are well suited to the requirements of the cast are Crauford Kent, Bartley McCullum and Herbert Fortier.

When Dan Hilyer sells one of his patents for seven thousand dollars he and his young wife start to enjoy life on a large scale, and a few months finds them with only a few hundred left. Meanwhile Dan is frantically trying to market his latest invention. After many disappointments he learns that by going West he can sell his copper smelting machine. Madge draws the money for transportation out of the bank but her bag is cleverly clipped off by a thief. Desperate, she goes to her old lover, Arthur Crewe, for aid. What the latter says infuriates Madge, but she takes the money as a loan.

While Dan is away, Madge gives birth to a child, all the expenses of a private room in the hospital and a trained nurse—although Madge does not know it—being paid for by Crewe, who has repented of his attitude toward the girl. During her husband's absence, Madge has suffered the pangs of poverty and when he returns, a rich man, she has the insane desire to economize on everything—which leads to some few quarrels.

But the big quarrel is precipitated when Dan learns that Crewe has paid for his wife's extra comforts at the hospital, and, knowing the man's reputation, surmises that his wife has agreed to "pay." When this furious quarrel is about to culminate in separation, Crewe arrives and vouches for the noble character of Agnes. Then a baby's voice is heard in the next room and as the little family comes together in happiness, Crewe, a changed man, walks from the house.

"The Waifs"

Jane Grey in Triangle-Kay Bee Modern Drama Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THERE are many things about which one can say a good word in "The Waifs," the Kay Bee production directed by Scott Sidney from the story by J. G. Hawks. There is a prologue telling how the young divinity student, on the day of his ordination, for the first time drinks an alcoholic beverage, becomes intoxicated and at once gives way to his inherited weakness for drink. Aside from the moral this teaches to people who think inducing others to take their first drink a delightful sport, this prologue, in the light of later events, is not in its entirety necessary. Not much time is given to it and it would not be mentioned only for the fact that the developments in this part of the picture while within the bounds of probability are not convincing.

After Rayburn's enslavement by Demon Rum is established, there is a lapse and we next see him in rags and frequenting low drinking places. At this point a remarkably interesting story is begun; one which has much of the human element in it. The story in many instances suggests a real understanding of human nature and an ability to realistically depict it in a screen drama, on the part of the author. In other words the play is convincing. "The Waifs" strikes one as being a story of real people who think and act accordingly. It seems as though the author after imagining his characters permitted them to do their own bidding, and for that very reason "The Waifs" is a strong play.

The minister, after his downfall, is started on the road to respectability and righteousness by a girl of the slums, who falls in love with him. She is most unselfish in her willingness to help Rayburn and when he rises above his failing and pitiable condition he fully realizes his debt to her. Consequently he does the manly thing and asks her to marry him, but she sacrifices her own feelings, for she is deeply in love with him, and refuses because she knows he is actuated by honor and not love. The girl is aware that Rayburn is in love with the Bishop's daughter, so she returns to the slums, not with whimperings and lamentations but bravely, though perhaps inwardly bitter.

The synopsis above shows that more or less familiar material is treated in a novel manner. There is a pleasing absence of sticky sentimentality which is so often resorted to in solving the problems of a story of this kind, and of which there is entirely too much in photoplays. The girl's last scene with her "man," a character of the slums, is a particularly fine one. Here Mr. Sidney's splendid direction reaches the height of its effectiveness.

Jane Grey's performance as Rags merits the most enthusiastic praise. Sounding phrases and adjectives denoting rare artistry could be fearlessly used in speaking of Miss Grey as Rags. William Desmond is a sincere and convincing Rayburn and Robert Kortman an excellent Bat, the bar tender.

"The Supreme Temptation"

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. Offering Released March 20 Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IMPRESSIVE settings and artistic interpretations by the cast bring out the good qualities embodied in this melodrama directed by Harry Davenport. The story was probably written by one who appreciates the fact that most audiences are won by a picture containing strong melodramatic situations, and it is evident that more attention was given to devising such episodes than to the attainment of smooth and efficacious construction.

This Blue Ribbon feature takes its title from a scene showing a physician confronted with the opportunity to blot out his inky past, which in turn threatens his future, by committing murder with little fear of his act becoming known to the world. Following his victory over such temptation he is at the point of taking his own life, which opportune and external circumstances prevent him from doing. In the case of these situations conviction grows pale and concessions must be made. When this is done the scenes take on the appearance and influence of dramatic properties.

There is no dearth of good material in the story, for tried and true photoplay principles are used, but surely it could have received more skillful treatment by the scenarioist. "The Supreme Temptation" is interesting. It contains elements which make for successful reception by the picture going public, which, when all is said and done, is about all the exhibitor is interested in.

Antonio Moreno gives his usual effective performance. He is Herbert Dubois, the physician who marries a grisette at a rather sporty party one night and regrets it the next morning. He arranges a separation and returns to America. After establishing himself and receiving word that Annette is dead he marries again, this time he is really in love.

It transpires that Annette only fell into a cataleptic state. She comes to America, where another cataleptic trance brings her to the hospital as dead. Dubois, who is to perform an autopsy, makes the discovery. His present wife is about to become a mother so the temptation to kill the woman is supreme, but he conquers this base impulse. Annette's death from natural causes at the time of his son's birth leaves Dubois free to enjoy a happiness his conduct may or may not have entitled him to.

By virtue of his opportunities and his intelligent playing, the acting honors belong to Mr. Moreno. There is a large supporting cast made up of popular and efficient Vitagraph actors. Dorothy Kelly distinguishes herself in this able cast as Annette. Of the important characters Annette is the only one the author has made deserving of the spectator's sympathy, and even this character fails to move one to any great extent.

"Driftwood"

Raver Film Corporation Offers Forceful Society Drama. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN ADAPTING "Driftwood," by Owen Davis, to the screen the Ocean Film Corporation attained remarkable success and this five reel drama, which is offered by the Raver Corporation, seems destined to prove an extraordinary box office attraction. "Driftwood" has the much courted punch. The scenario prepared by Anthony Kelly and Marshal Farnum's direction brings the author's tense situations to the screen with all their dramatic power intact.

This picture has numerous situations which really grip the spectator. The inclination on the part of the cast to overact them even fails to make these dramatic structures shaky or in the least top-heavy. The shortcomings, few as there are, become inconsequential, entirely so, in the high and impressive character of the story's ability to hold the spectator interested always and thrilled frequently. As a picture drama dealing with the sex question vividly yet unoffensively and containing brisk action and highly dramatic situations, "Driftwood" has few equals.

"Driftwood" tells the story of a girl who agrees to marry the son of a wealthy man secretly. She elopes with him, but before they are married an auto accident in which Lawrence is severely injured causes the girl, who awaits him at the hotel, to believe that she has been deserted. Rather than return to her mother Helen seeks to earn her own living in the city. Upon his recovery Lawrence immediately visits Helen's mother and learning that she is not there determines to use every means to find her.

Two years later we see Lawrence in Canada and Alice, Helen's older sister, married to James Wayne, a moneyed and influential lawyer. Helen visits Wayne's office and because of her attractive appearance she is at once employed. In a short time he forces his attentions on her. Since earning her own living Helen has had many experiences such as this, and wearied by it all she accepts what seems to be the inevitable. Only a day or so later she and Lawrence meet again. Though he is ready to forgive and pleads with her to marry him, she refuses. When he gains the knowledge that Helen is his wife's own sister Wayne realizes the wrong he is guilty of and in a melodramatic scene he forces her to accept Lawrence's marriage proposal.

The settings are appropriate. The cameraman deserves mention along with the director. The photography and lighting in this picture are wonderful. Vera Michelena is the featured player. In support of this popular musical comedy actress there is a cast composed of Harry Spingler, Clarissa Selwynne, Charles Graham and Joseph Daly in the important roles.

"A Social Deception"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released March 27. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE are a number of pretty scenes in this play, a good cast of characters and many exciting episodes, but for some reason, possibly the lack of subtitles in the right places, the story itself is not clear after the complications begin. The cast includes Harry Mestayer, Eugenie Besserer, James Bradbury, Grace Darmond, Wheeler Oakman, Al. W. Filson and Vivian Reed. T. N. Heffron is the director. As the title suggests, the frauds and deception of social life form the theme.

Grace Darmond is Violet Rensselear, whose father, played by James Bradbury, loses his fortune just as his daughter is returning from a convent school abroad. She is accompanied by Grace Elliot, a wealthy widow (Eugenie Besserer), who is in love with Blake Penderly (Wheeler Oakman). Violet and Blake are engaged, but when the young man learns that Violet has lost her fortune, he breaks the engagement and married Mrs. Elliot for her money. In America, Violet becomes a companion to Mrs. Roache Dunning, a social climber.

Page Carter, a wealthy western man, arrives in New York in search of his sister. He meets Violet accidentally and tempts her honesty by allowing her to find a purse full of money. Violet takes the money, but later tries to return it. Episodes from the life of the missing sister are shown, and with the money Violet is able to help her. Later Violet and Carter meet, when Violet learns that Carter is a millionaire. She helps him to find his missing sister and in the end of the story marries him.

The evil hidden in conventional society is emphasized by many scenes. But the production would have been better if some of these had been eliminated and the story itself been made clearer. The cast is able, and the characters are clearly drawn, but their relationship with each other and the play is frequently confused.

"My Partner"

Screen Version of Bartley Campbell's Play Is Mutual Masterpicture. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

BURR McINTOSH returns to the screen as the big hearted Joe Saunders in a picturization of Bartley Campbell's play, "My Partner," a Mutual Masterpicture which should be popular; for the sympathetic appeal of the story shines through the dims and faults and crudities of its telling and atmosphere added to pleasant photographic effects gloss over the occasional defects in direction and interpretation.

There is a bigness to this theme and a quality to the situations, which, however compelling they are, deserved better treatment by the players and more skillful building by the author of the scenario and the director.

But, as stated before, if "My Partner" has weaknesses it also contains numerous admirable things. To begin with its shortcomings are not what one could call fatal. There is a spirit of sincerity, which runs through the five reels as an undercurrent, and one is always conscious of it. Also one gets pleasurable entertainment from the nicely photographed settings with their pretty shadows and streams of light.

"My Partner" is a Western story playing in a mining town called Siskiyou. Joe Saunders is the favorite of all who live there. He has been in love with Mary Brandon, whose father keeps the hotel, this long time, but there is no definite understanding between them. One day a newcomer arrives in Siskiyou—an Easterner named Singleton. He is the recipient of the innocent taunts which greet all newcomers. Ned is ready for fight and he immediately wins the esteem of the men.

Saunders is so taken with Singleton that he invites him to become his partner in the work and reward, if any, of Saunders' claim. Singleton and Mary are mutually attracted, and love grows up between them. Ned for some unknown reason refuses to make good his promise to marry the girl. Saunders overhears her pleadings and hastily forces his partner to live up to his word.

Joe then divides their product of the mine and refuses to have more to do with Singleton. A jealous rival for Mary's hand stabs and kills Ned. The murder is charged up to Joe, but evidence of Scraggs' crime is discovered in time to save him. Mary is spared disgrace and the harsh words of an angered father by Joe's statement that she is his wife. The marriage ceremony is performed by the magistrate, Joe's friend, who tells the father that he married them some time ago but will do it again to calm what fears Brandon may have.

Mr. McIntosh is supported by Mary Mantell as Mary Brandon, Curtis Cooksy as Singleton, Goldwin Paton as Josiah Scraggs and Mathew Brandon is played by James Ryan.

"Little Meena's Romance"

Triangle-Fine Arts Production in Which Dorothy Gish Stars. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE producers of "Little Meena's Romance" have made a picture which approaches perfection in photoplay offerings of its kind. If "Little Meena's Romance" is not a perfect example of the camera's artistic possibilities at least it reaches a plane far above any picture dealing with a story of this class we have ever seen. Stars who have built success and popularity on their characterizations of Cinderella-like roles are continually exploited in stories which are so much star and so little anything else that it is little wonder that one would as soon as not avoid these sweet, simple pictures—the very ones which should have an especial attraction.

"Little Meena's Romance" is simple, it is sweet, and it has a star, one of great brilliance, in Dorothy Gish, and it tells a tale that will win the hearts of all who have the good fortune to see it. This picture is an exceptional one. It is one of those which happen only once in a while in spite of the perseverance in the effort to produce hightly artistic screen plays by the many high class producing companies contributing to the market at present.

The story tells of a Pennsylvania girl who, true to nature's merciful aversion to the performance of things conventional, is in internals and externals at variance with her environment and the accepted principles of her forebears. According to her father women should wash and dust and bake, but never think. Meena, however, does think, she has individual ideas, and those ideas clash with the thoughts and deeds of her people.

Rudolph, a German count temporarily out of funds, comes to this country selling clothes wringers, which in these parts are a distinct novelty. Rudolph remains long enough to win Meena's heart and to form a deep attachment for her. Rudolph returns to the city when he receives his allowance. Later by coincidence Meena and Rudolph meet again and they carry on an innocent deception which gives zest to delightful romance.

One cannot go into the many details of story, its admirable material and clever construction, nor the details of direction which make this picture the excellent one it is. Paul Powell directed "Little Meena's Romance" and F. M. Pierson wrote the story. Both have done more than well. The play is logically developed and there are any number of the finer touches which suggest the desired atmosphere of reality and charm.

Miss Gish gives a remarkable characterization as Meena. Meena is innocent but not ignorant, delicate but not weak, she is intelligent, so it only remained for Miss Gish to make her beautiful and magnetic of personality. This Miss Gish does, and more; she is a Pennsylvania Dutch girl in her every action. Owen Moore is Rudolph, Count Fredrich Von Ritz to be exact. Mr. Moore is capital, perhaps he gives a more artistic and effective performance as Rudolph than he ever did since he has been acting before the camera. There is a splendid supporting cast.

"The Fortunate Youth"

A Film Version of Wm. J. Locke's Novel Offered by Raver. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

SCREEN adaptations of Wm. J. Locke's novels have been done before. In one instance in the past an emphatic success was obtained and readers of Locke's works who are familiar with photoplays in general are still talking about the picture; for these people will tell you that in their opinion the novels confront the scenario writer with great difficulties. They will go so far as to say that Locke's novels do not meet the demands of the screen.

"The Fortunate Youth," a screen version of the novel of the same name, is a picture containing much that is admirable but at the same time one feels that the action before him was not intended for this manner of depiction. As the story sets forth the adventures of a certain character there is ever the danger of disconnected scenes, developments which are all effect and no cause, with the consequence that the action is physical rather than dramatic.

One can be pleasantly entertained by this picture for there is a sympathetic interest centered in Paul. But at no time does the play threaten to take the spectator anywhere in particular. "The Fortunate Youth" takes one through five reels of film containing rather pleasing scenes, well mounted and finely photographed, but that is about all.

The play begins with the marriage of Paul's parents. Kegsworthy takes to drink and mistreats his wife. He is imprisoned for beating her. Later, after reading in the newspaper that her husband is dead, Polly marries again. The man she marries is no better than Kegsworthy, so Paul's youth is one of abuse and misery. When he can stand it no longer he makes off with Barney Bill, the tinware pedler. With him Paul goes to London. From here on the story tells of his steady climb to success and his meeting again with his father, who instead of dying as the paper said, was released from prison, reformed and became rich.

Wilmuth Merkyl is Paul. The character of Barney Bill is more consistently developed and acted than even that of Paul, it seemed. John A. Smiley plays this part. Lilie Leslie as Polly and William Cohill as Silas Kegsworthy are pleasing. So, too, are Charles Graham in a repelling role and the boy who is cast as Paul, the youth. In this picture the Raver Film Corporation offers one which makes a wholesome appeal in spite of its dramatic shortcomings. It was produced by the Ocean Film Corporation.

Three Juvenile Company Comedies

Novel Program for Children. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A PROGRAM for children, something which producers have been considering for some time, is to be offered by Paul H. Cromelin, organizer of the Juvenile Co. The concern's first three releases have been completed by James Fitz Patrick, who is the director of productions.

"A Chip Off the Old Block," "Chip's Elopement" and Chip's Backyard Barnstormers," which are the first three productions for release, while produced with the children's program in mind will also entertain adults, for Joseph Monahan, seven years of age, and his sister Janethel, who is eight, are remarkably clever actors and Director Fitz Patrick has provided his diminutive stars with fine working material. These pictures have a slight comedy plot and they are more amusing than many comedies offered for the entertainment of grown-ups we have seen.

Children's parents or guardians who accompany them to the theater showing any of the above mentioned "Chip" comedies at a special matinee or performance for children will have no cause for complaint as to the quality of amusement their charges are given, nor will they be likely to murmer on the ground that these child pictures bore them. On the contrary we are of the opinion that many guardians will suddenly discover that these picture shows are good for the children; it being understood that the guardians must act as chaperons.

In "A Chip Off the Old Block" the newsboy meets a pretty little girl just as he comes out of a theater where he had seen the famous Charles Chaplin. Later he has a dream in which he as Chaplin has some typical Chaplin adventures. The pretty girl figures in these. "Chip's Elopement" is also a dream. This picture is an account of his elopement with Janethel. He foils the villian and finally wins the blessing of his bride's pursuing father. In "Chip's Backyard Barnstormers" the newsboy, the girl he dreams about and other children in the neighborhood give a show. This picture is in two reels.

Master Monahan's impersonation of Charlie Chaplin is particularly good, and his sister is a fine team-mate. While looking at their pictures one often finds it difficult to believe that these are really children. There is nothing amateurish about Joseph Monahan's impersonation of the popular comedian, it is splendid and the more wonderful when one considers his age.

Mr. Fitz Patrick's keen sense of comedy values as well as an ability to procure desired effects is shown in these pictures. He possesses that strange faculty which puts children at their ease and makes them willing to do the things he tells them. He must; for the children who take part in the pictures all do their stunts with a natural abandon that makes their acting of the highest possible order, for the simple reason that it is not acting at all. Instead these children do just as they would if the camera and director were far away.

"The Red Circle"

"Judgment Day," the Fourteenth Episode of Pathe Story. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"JUDGMENT Day" is the final episode of "The Red Circle," and it brings to a happy conclusion the romance of June Travis and the detective, Lamar. In the beginning of the release June resolves to fight off her impulses to commit crimes, even if they are benevolent ones, and she is reconciled with her foster mother at the trial at which she is found guilty but released on parole, all of which serves to make her future as the detective's wife take on a roseate hue.

As was the case with the previous chapters, "Judgment Day" calls for commendation. This continued story by Will M. Ritchey has had its full share of interesting phases, as continued stories go. The acting throughout the fourteen chapters has been most favorable and the production received effective treatment at the hands of Sherwood Macdonald.

A serial picture with so few dragged-in-by-the-heels situations as "The Red Circle" contained merits admiration. Pictures in general and serials in particular depend too much upon situations devised for the purpose of introducing some melodramatic stunt. Runaway automobiles and the like are supposed to thrill even if there is no reason advanced why the auto should plunge to destruction.

In the opening scenes of "Judgment Day" Lamar strives unavailingly to induce June to flee with him. She prefers to remain and stand trial even though the chances are all that she will be found guilty. Though Farwell, Tod Drew and George Grant, who have suffered a bit of deserved punishment through June's thefts, all prosecute her and she is found guilty, the court releases her in custody of her foster mother. And the closing scenes shows June and Lamar standing at the marriage altar.

Ruth Roland as the central character has held her acting up to a high quality from the beginning. Frank Mayo deserves praise for his work as Lamar and Corenne Grant displayed talent by her performance as June's nurse. Mollie McConnell and Gordon Sackville made their roles impressive.

"The Struggle"

A Five-Part Equitable-World Drama Released March 27. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A VERY great feature about the production of "The Struggle" is that it is not only elaborate, but genuine, many scenes being taken in the South American tropical forests. These add, more than any artificial setting ever could, to the romantic spirit of the play. The escape from the doomed ship by life-boat or any other available means is another piece of realism which is not wasted. One life-boat coming down end first from the davits and spilling its occupants into the sea is a vivid reminder of the Titanic disaster.

Frank Sheridan stars as Major James Carewe, an army post surgeon who loves Marjorie Caldwell. But Ames, the junior surgeon, supplants him in the girl's affections, and, attracted by the mere outward polish of the man, she marries Ames. It is not long before Ames shows himself to be weak and unprincipled. Both Carewe and Ames are transferred to Manila. The ship is wrecked and Carewe and Marjorie are cast up on a small island. While there Marjorie learns the true character of the man and they become deeply attached, so much so that after some months the two submit to rescue rather unwillingly.

In San Francisco they learn that Ames is missing but his wife is still confident that he lives. Fate leads Carewe to the isle on which Ames, bereft of his memory, has been dwelling. After Ames has been brought home he undergoes an operation, only to find on the return of his memory that he is the victim of leprosy. Dashing to a window he then leaps to his death.

Frank Sheridan's acting has a distinct compelling force at all times. Ethel G. Terry is charming as Marjorie. Other important members of the cast are Arthur Ashley and Eileen Evans. John Ince is the director.

"Austria at War"

Views of the Austrian Army Offered by Raver Film Corporation. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE RAVER FILM CORPORATION is acting as distributing agent in this country for two reels of film giving views at the Austrian front which will be released under the title "Austria at War." These are the Austrian Government's official war pictures and they come to America with the personal endorsement of Emperor Franz Josef.

With the mode of warfare prevailing in the present European conflict it is impossible to procure pictures of actual battles in which both armies are seen at once. Moreover if one is looking at Austrian pictures one sees only the Austrian side of the question, and the same holds good if the pictures are French, or English or any of the other powers at war. Consequently the pictures shown in "Austria at War" are like many other war films offered to the American public in that when a view of a bombardment is given it looks a whole lot like so much target practice. We see the gun fired and that ends it. Except of course that pictures of the successfully bombarded communities are presented and we then wonder at the marvelous destructive powers of these guns.

The pictures are interesting, there is no doubt about that, but this is so because of what the pictures represent more than what they actually show. When soldiers march past the camera the spectator gives willing attention because he feels that these very men are on their way to do battle and perhaps lose their lives and not because he is shown anything new in the way of marching. Therefore it is essential that the pictures be authentic and reliable, because if the spectator reads that the marching men are on their way to the battlefield in a subtitle and he is not so sure of the picture's authenticity he may feel that for all he knows they may be on their way to the field kitchen, which is about the same in effect as the actress who over-acts a dramatic scene.

These pictures were taken under the supervision of two Austrian military officers. All the scenes were taken at the battle line. They show soldiers going through their daily routine, the wounded being cared for at a field hospital, where there appears to be remarkable efficiency, the firing of the big guns, the building of a wooden bridge across the San and innumerable other incidents, all well worth seeing, which occurred during the Austrian march on Lemberg. To see the pictures is to be assured of their authenticity. The Raver Corporation has documents establishing the "Austria at War" film as the official pictures of the Austrian government. The papers bear the signature and seal of the Emperor Franz Josef.

"The Hand of Peril"

World-Paragon Drama in Five Reels Released March 27. Reviewed by George W. Graves

PRE-EMINENT in "The Hand of Peril" is its swift action —action everywhere and all the time. The story, which has a strong, palpable plot, is the product of Arthur Stringer's best efforts, while the direction is in the hands of Maurice Tourneur. The latter has introduced an interesting innovation in the way of settings by using what is practically an open cross-section of a house, with action transpiring on every floor.

Add to the above mentioned names that of House Peters and we have the three mainstays of the picture. He acts with the fervor of a natural-born detective the role of James Kestner, a government agent who is hot on the trail of Frank Lambert and his band of counterfeiters. Among the latter is "Bull's Eye" Cherry, a girl who has been stolen from her parents and educated to a life of crime. This part is brilliantly carried by Doris Sawyer. Every member of the cast, those unmentioned so far being June Elridge, Ralph Delmore and Ray Pilcer, do exceedingly whole-hearted and telling work.

James Kestner finally gets his man single handed after a struggle in which wits and brawn are almost evenly mated on the part of each master of his profession, and the detective also succeeds in convincing "Bull's Eye" Cherry that her next move is to give up the crooked path.

"The Hand of Peril" has the proper suspense, mystery and plenty of that vitalizing "battle of wits" element without which a detective drama would fall flat.

"The Aryan"

Triangle-Kay Bee Drama Featuring William S. Hart Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A PLAY as good as this is sometimes puzzling to review. One wonders just which phase of its building contributed most to the total excellence. In "The Aryan," although the story is unusual and the characters exceptionally strong, perhaps it is the effective way the material is presented which deserves particular attention.

The scenes which tell the story are beautifully photographed, and although they are realistic and the story itself is cruel, the atmosphere is so well sustained, and the play is so much a unit, that the drama gives the effect of a stirring poem. Two things are largely responsible for this, the beautiful subtitles, and the wonderful desert scenes.

The subtitles of Triangle productions have been worth attention for some time. At first they were pleasingly decorative; later they aided in interpreting the mood of the play. In this offering they surpass anything attempted before, in sustaining the atmosphere and interpreting character. Especially notable was the one introducing Mary Jane, which contained a drawing of the wistful, childlike face of the little girl. The text of the subtitles not only advanced the story, but when conversation was used, helped the characterization, and the skillful word pictures aided and completed the scenes.

The story of the play which C. Gardener Sullivan wrote, is essentially simple. A miner, Steve Denton, is leaving the desert with his wealth to return to his old home and his mother. He comes into the picture from the distance, out of the lonely desert. There is a short subtitle, his words to his horse. Just that, and his petting of the pony, and we know Steve Denton. William S. Hart plays the role of the miner effectively, artistically, throughout. There is short dissolve, his remembrance of his mother. Then, the next day, he arrives at the little border town, where at a gambling resort the keeper, with the aid of Trixie, a dancehall girl, well played by Louise Glaum, robs him of his fortune. More than that, they rob him of his faith in humanity, for he discovers that they not only tricked him through his chivalry, but that they held back a message from his dying mother so that he would not leave before his money was spent.

When he learns that his mother is dead, Steve kills the resort keeper, then goes back into the desert, forcing Trixie to go with him. There he becomes the head of a lawless, evil band of half breeds and Mexicans.

A caravan of farmers, their wives and children, coming to the mining district, is lost in the desert and in wandering comes to Steve's town. Although the people are dying of thirst, Steve refuses aid, particularly as there are women in the party. Recognizing the evil nature of the man, they go on hopelessly. Only a young girl of the party, believing that no white man would refuse aid to women, goes again to ask help from Steve.

The strong point of the play is the encounter between these two, the man who believes himself and everyone else evil, the girl who steadfastly believes in the man's goodness. Bessie Love, as the girl, Mary Jane, is wonderful. It is a role in which the actress must be, rather than do, and without a touch of artificiality or mannerism, Miss Love is Mary Jane.

The picture takes its name from the girl's belief a man of the Aryan race will protect a woman. And at the last, when she learns that this man will not help, she tells him that he is not a member of the white race. In the end, the man justifies her faith, and sacrifices his interest in the mine to save the voyagers. There are a number of very stirring speeches, setting forth the girl's belief in her race, but these are scarcely in character for the little waif. However, the success of her plea is convincing, for a white man could not betray a faith like hers. After saving the wanderers, the man goes back to the desert, an ending in keeping with the play.

"His Vindication"

An English Drama Presented by the Cosmofotofilm Company. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

CHARLES ROCK as the featured player in "His Vindication," the Cosmofotofilm Company's melodrama, gives a performance of marked skill and power. An English actor of note, Mr. Rock is certain to add to what prominence he holds with the people in this country by his acting in this drama by Mackay and Ord. There is force and conviction in his characterization of George Faulkner, the squire who is imprisoned for another's crime.

But this English production has more to recommend it than the brilliance of the star in portraying the central character. The most impressive acting by the featured player could never make a picture of such strong appeal as "His Vindication." There is a story which, though a bit weighty of plot, is told with directness and precision. It is British melodrama but it is almost certain of success with American screen patrons. From the outset the creation of interest and suspense is admirably sustained. There is, too, a sympathetic note.

The play opens in a tavern. Charles and his brother, George Faulkner, make the acquaintance of Captain Haverleigh. The latter introduces himself, explaining that he has met the brothers before. That night at a game of cards Haverleigh loses heavily to Charles. He plans to regain his money. By pretending to be drunk Haverleigh cleverly builds an alibi. His entrance into the Faulkner house ends tragically. Charles is killed in a struggle with him. There is a strong case of circumstantial evidence against George, and on this he is convicted and sentenced to a long term in prison.

A number of years pass. Edward, George's son, is now a young man, while his father is white haired and drawn from the miserable life in prison. The son is sought by Haverleigh. Edward falls under the spell of the Captain's attractive personality.

Haverleigh, to suit his own purposes, prevails upon Edward to go through a bogus marriage ceremony with the inn-keeper's daughter, whom Edward professes to love. This plot is frustrated by the father, who, having escaped from prison, warns the girl when he learns of his son's low purpose. Haverleigh is exposed in a melodramatic scene at the Faulkner home and the end finds the deserving ones happy. The story was given a splendid production. The locations and interior sets live up to the high quality of foreign productions in this particular. The photography which reveals the well directed action and artistic backgrounds is particularly good.

"The Voice in the Night"

Lubin Three-Reel Drama Released March 30 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ONE of those exciting stories which reporters are supposed to discover in the day's work and because of their kind-heartedness refuse to publish forms the theme of this drama. The story fulfills very well its first mission, to interest. It is clear and plausible, and is dramatically presented.

Richard Powell, a newspaper reporter, is out in search of a "scoop." He notices a woman waiting in the park, and witnesses her meeting with a man. Then a masked man appears. The men struggle and the first man is killed. The woman escapes. Powell rushes to the slain man, and the masked man, after declaring that he acted in a good cause, escapes. When the police arrive Powell withholds his knowledge in the hope of being able to solve the mystery himself and give his paper a good "story." His only clue is the peculiar voice of the masked man.

Powell bets with his friend, a police sergeant, that he can find the man within ten days. Then he sets about solving the mystery. He learns from her photograph that the woman is the wife of the governor. Later he discovers the owner of the peculiar voice is the minister of the wealthy church the woman attends. Powell goes to the minister, and at the threat to expose him, the minister tells the story.

The governor's wife is his sister. Years ago she had eloped with Leach, the man who was killed. Later, disillusioned, she left him. Then she discovered that the marriage was faked. Several years later, she married the governor of the state, and was very happy until Leach again entered her life with threats of exposure. Then she appealed to her brother for aid, with the fatal meeting as a result. The bullet, however, was not fired by the minister but by Leach himself, in the struggle.

After hearing the story, Powell refuses to use his knowledge, and gives up his hope of a good "story" and the winning of his bet.

There is some very good photography in this picture. The cast of characters is well chosen and does very good work throughout. Arthur Matthews as the reporter, Francis Joyner as Leach, Helen Greene as the woman, Leslie Austen as her brother, have the most important parts.

"The Woman's Law"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Produced by The Arrow and Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE first Arrow Film Corporation production to be released on the Gold Rooster Program sets a high standard for that organization to live up to in their future Pathe feature releases. Taken from a standpoint of artistry in treatment, the judicious selection of players and expert camera work, one is forced to admit that the producers of "The Woman's Law" deserve a place among the foremost in the field today. One feels that here is a producing organization whose aim is the making of pictures such as will meet the approval of an intelligent, even an exacting public.

Florence Reed, whose two former appearances in Gold Rooster Plays make it unnecessary to comment upon the star of this picture, has a role providing opportunities for the style of acting for which she is recognized as one of the best who have come to the screen. Supporting Miss Reed are Duncan McRae and Phillip Hahn. Mr. McRae is a well known player and in this picture he brings into play all his skill and finish in the dual role of George Orcutt and Keith Edgerton, Orcutt's double.

The story, adapted from the novel by Maravene Thompson, tells of a woman who determines to go to any lengths to prevent the law from taking its course in punishing her unfaithful husband, for the sake of her son. Upon learning that Orcutt has killed a man, Gail at first intends to throw herself upon the mercy of her friend, the district attorney, but she then realizes that duty comes first and that Kent is a man of honor. While on her way home she notices a man seated in the park who is the exact image of her husband.

Upon speaking to him she is at once aware that he is in a dazed condition and persuades him to come to her home. The unknown man is arrested as Orcutt. When he is pronounced insane he is committed to an asylum. Gail insists upon Orcutt's immediate departure from her home and life. The insane man steadily improves. When he recovers from his temporary derangement his memory of the past is gone and he believes himself George Orcutt. The story then concerns itself with the love which comes between the unknown and Gail, and its happy fulfillment when Orcutt is shot as a thief.

This story is admirably told. The scenario was written by A. S. Le Vino and Harvey Thew, and a scenario so finely constructed is not by any means the usual thing. We have seen stories fundamentally better by far than "The Woman's Law" which failed to impress merely because of the manner in which they were scenarioized. The story is not bad but certainly it is much better for the excellent treatment it has received. Every scene sustains the interest because every scene marks an advance in the story's movement toward a climax.

There is a good word for Director McGill, many in fact, if we are to give full recognition to the high quality of his work. Throughout the picture one can find few flaws chargeable to the director but there are many evidences of artistic conception and skilfull execution. The settings, in a word, are beautiful, while photographically "The Woman's Law" is an achievement.

Exhibitors Elect Officers

An election of officers was held by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Local 1, on March 14, in the Wurlitzer theater building. The regular meeting was well attended and a large number of votes were cast. The following men were elected to hold office for the ensuing year, some serving for the second time:

Lee A. Ochs, president; M. Oestreicher, first vice-president; I. Hartstall, second vice-president; Benjamin Lyons, secretary and financial secretary; Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer; Gus Koenigswald, sergeant-at-arms. Finance committee, Charles Haring, chairman; William Hilkemeier, Otto Lederer, Charles Steiner, S. Rhonheimer.

The league has leased the fourth floor of the Candler Theater Building Annex, at 218 West Forty-second street, where they are fitting up meeting rooms, executive chambers and private offices for the various committees.

PATENT Number 1,152,515. Fire Shutter. Issued to C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. The shutter is before the film gate and carries an extra plate which protects the film gate when the shutter is not revolving at speed.

No. 1,152,620. Screen. Issued to John B. Flogerzi, assignor of part to John T. Smith, St. Paul, Minn. The screen cloth is varnished, then a fine metallic dust rubbed in, then a coat of powdered glass applied. The screen may be improved by a second coat of varnish, metallic powder and glass powder.

1,152,989. Intermittent Movement. Issued to P. J. Taylor, Cairo, Ill. The drive wheel is mounted loosely upon the intermittent shaft and is connected to the shaft by a spring which is kept wound by the movement of the drive wheel. The intermittent shaft and sprocket are held by cam teeth and the drive wheel has cams which shift the holding teeth to release the sprocket, the sprocket then being shifted quickly by the spring to the drive wheel. The suddenness of shift may be regulated obviously by regulating the tension of the spring from the drive wheel to the intermittent sprocket shaft.

1,153,163. Combination Lantern. Issued to C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. In a lantern for slides and motion pictures, the lamp house swings through 90 degrees, the projection of the slide is made directly to the screen, and the projection of the motion picture is made through a reflecting prism. The prism is between the film window and the lens. The film has its edge to the screen. The shutter is between the film window and the lamp house.

1,153,164. Intermittent Movement. Issued to C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. The claw system is used. The claws are mounted upon a carriage which rotates upon a vertical rod to carry the claws into the perforations, and then slides upon the rod to shift the film.

1,153,887. Film Feed. Issued to T. H. Blair, assignor to Whiting Mfg. Co., Northboro, Mass. (Application filed Nov. 29, 1909.) Rotating mechanism rotates the feed reel, the rotation being controlled by the tension of the film between the feed reel and the film gate, yet the pull of the film is not depended upon to turn the feed reel. The claims cover this feature broadly.

1,153,963. Film Cabinet. Issued to A. E. Sengstock, Detroit, Mich. Each reel has a separate lid. The lifting of the lid pulls a strap to lift the reel far enough to grasp.

1,154,233. Projector. Issued to H. B. Byron, assignor of parts to A. H. Adams, A. E. Pickard, and J. L. Jackson, Chicago, Ill. There is no intermittent film shift, and the film moves steadily. The beam of light passes through the film strip and then falls upon an inclined plate which rotates and which bears small rocking mirrors. The mirrors correct the motion of the film to produce a steady projected picture from the moving images. An inclined fixed mirror then reflects the beam of light to a horizontal direction through the lens to the screen.

1,154,835. Projector. Issued to W. Buersfeld, assignor to Carl Zeiss, Jena, Germany. The film moves continuously and a comparatively large wheel with a number of reflectors, each of three reflecting surfaces, compensates for the film motion to produce a steady picture on the screen.

1,154,952. Fire Shutter. Issued to J. T. Wells, assignor to Edwards Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. A fire shutter is lifted by a worm thread mechanism upon the drive, the worm thread operating to lift the shutter only when the speed of the projector is sufficient for safety.

1,155,056. Color Projection. Issued to William Friese-Greene, assignor to Friese-Green Patents, Limited, London England. To balance the colors, in the Kinemacolor system of projection, the predominating color has a black blank substituted for a film image, at intervals, thus cutting out a little of the color to be subdued.

1,155,561. Screen. Issued to J. P. Gilbert, Rochester, N. Y. A theater drop curtain has a projection screen hung hinged upon it. During projection the top of the screen tips forward, but is drawn vertical when the curtain is to be lifted to the loft.

1,156,025. Rewinder. Issued to W. A. Akin, assignor of parts to C. F. Moyer and A. J. Bateman, Falconer, N. Y. Rewinding reels are arranged in a cabinet built beneath the table of the projecting machine.

1,156,824. Intermittent Movement. Issued to Oscar Schwimmer, Los Angeles, Calif. The claw system is used. A Pitman connection draws the claw down. A cam forces the claw into the perforations.

1,156,934. Framing Device. Issued to E. Schneider, New York, N. Y. (Application filed Oct. 22, 1907.) The film shift is upon a frame hinged to the base plate and shifted by a toothed rack and hand wheel. The claims are limited to the specific mechanism but are of interest because of the early date of filing.

1,158,011. Developer. Issued to C. J. Thatcher, New York, N. Y. A photographic developer consisting of hydroquinone, alkali carbonate and sodium hydrate.

1,158,587. Cinematograph Printer. Issued to J. E. Thornton, London, England. A large drum or wheel, with a circle of lights fixed near it, turns in a closed box. Pulleys and guides conduct film stock and negative to it, clamps on the wheel hold them rigidly, a current of air cools the printing chamber.

1,158,960; 1,158,961; 1,158,962; and 1,158,963. Plastic Products. Issued to W. A. Beatty, assignor to Geo. W. Beadle, New York, N. Y. One of the claims of the last of these patents will serve as an index to the nature of all—"A moving picture film substantially composed of a mixture of cellulose acetate and a condensation product of acetone and phenol in the form of a transparent ribbon and coated with a condensation product of a ketone, a phenol and an aldehyde.

1,159,130. Spliced Film. Issued to J. Tessier, assignor to Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa. The joints in the film are made by a narrow lap between two adjacent pictures and a longer lap on the sprocket edges.

1,159,650. Cinematograph Printer. Issued to E. L. Crabb, assignor to The Bell & Howell Co., Chicago, Ill. Between the lamp and the film being printed is a sliding frame containing glass plates of different degrees of translucency. This frame is shifted to vary the amount of light admitted to the film.

1,159,731 and 1,159,733. Finding and Focusing Device. Issued to Carl E. Akeley, New York, N. Y. An oblique reflector is moved into place behind the lens to reflect the image to a finder screen, then removed while taking pictures to permit the image to reach the film.

1,159,732. Film Magazine. Issued to Carl E. Akeley, New York, N. Y. The hub is a spiral spring which may be compressed as the film is wound upon it.

1,159,734. Panoramic Device. Issued to Carl E. Akeley, New York, N. Y. The camera is round and is adopted for movement in any direction. Vertical and horizontal toothed arcs and pinion wheels are provided. By a friction clutch the drive crank may be connected to the pinion wheels and any desired amount of movement or any desired speed of movement may be obtained.

Top to bottom: 1,159,731. Combined finding and focusing device for cameras. 1,159,734. Panoramic device. 1,153,963. Film cabinet, with separate lid for each reel. 1,158,587. Apparatus for printing films.

1,159,740. Cartoon Picture. Issued to John Randolph Bray, New York, N. Y. The outlines of the separate pictures are drawn upon separate sheets of translucent material; the surface shading is done upon the reverse surface of the sheet and show through the sheet when photographed.

1,159,796. Camera. Issued to J. A. Ramsey and C. P. Hulfurd, Los Angeles, Calif. The drive sprocket has its teeth undercut so that at the point of engaging the film the driving face of the tooth is substantially at right angles to the film.

1,159,924. Film. Issued to Leon Gaumont, Paris, France. The film has a transparent, non-inflammable body and a very thin collodion coating, allowing the film to be developed so rapidly that water does not have time to affect the body of the film.

1,159,981. Projection. Issued to Anton Mullner, Vienna, Austria. Two projection screens are provided for one projector, and the projector may be directed toward either.

1,160,495. Shutter. Issued to Burr H. Caldwell, Niagara Falls, N. Y. A barrel shutter is located in front of the projecting lens.

1,160,671. Cinematograph Printer. Issued to J. E. Thornton, Rochester, N. Y. For printing films at a very rapid rate, two traveling bands are provided, one of them translucent and the other cushion surface. The film and negative are clamped between them, and the form elements are moved rapidly in front of a row of lamps.

1,160,824. Shutter. Issued to F. A. Berg, Chicago, Ill. The shutter is of transparent, light-diffusing material (such as white paper pasted on a frame), and supplies a diffused light to the room during the dark interval of the screen, thus reducing the flicker in the theater.

1,161,910. Printer for Color Pictures. The camera makes three color pictures near together on the film but the projector in this system requires a greater space between the images. The printer therefore maintains loops between the images printed on the positive film, thus separating the images of a set on the positive film while printing directly from a negative on which the images of a set are not separated.

1,162,419. Camera. Issued to C. Van Deventer, Chicago. For discharging static electricity from a film, an electrical conductor is so placed that a charge on the film will induce a charge on the conductor, an earthed wire being provided for the discharge of the conductor.

1,162,430. Projector. Issued to F. M. H. Wunderlich, Dresden-Lobtau, Germany. The shape of the casing is such as to give the film a maximum of protection from fire. The projecting lens is mounted upon the door portion of the casing, and projection is possible only when the door is properly closed.

LOIS MEREDITH IS A LUCKY STAR

Lois Meredith, Balboa's newest star, is one of those fortunate girls to whom success has come in the heydey of her youth, without a struggle. It is not meant by this that she has not had to work. Far from it! She is the hardest sort of worker. But her career before the public has not been beset with the hardships that so many of those who have arrived like to talk about. Miss Meredith comes to the screen after an almost meteoric flight across the dramatic sky's most recent period. Born in Pittsburg, less than a score of years ago, Lois Meredith had the benefit of foreign travel at an impressionable age. Always eager to be busy, Lois Meredith while yet a schoolgirl reviewed the various fields of woman's activities and decided to be an actress. Suiting the action to the determination, she arranged to read for Henry W. Savage. He liked her manner so well that she was immediately cast for the original production of "Everywoman," as Modesty. On a recent trip east, H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa, chanced to see a photoplay in which Lois Meredith was playing the lead. Her winsome personality and bright manner impressed the producer as having wonderful possibilities. When it came to signing a contract, it was found that on account of her youth, it was necessary for Miss Meredith's mother to sign to make the document legal.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Henry Otto is directing King Baggot in the Universal production of Harold McGrath's novel, "Half a Rogue."

Nance O'Nell and company of Lubin players are in Franklin, Pa., for scenes in "The Toilers," which Edgar Lewis is directing; a story by Daniel Carson Goodman, dealing with love, oil and money.

"Billie's Double" is a Lubin one-reel comedy featuring Billie Reeves. Clay M. Greene wrote the story, which Earl Metcalfe directed.

Ethel Clayton is featured in the six-reel Lubin play, "Dollars and the Woman," the scenario of which Mark Swan prepared from Albert Payson Terhune's story, "Dollars and Cents."

Frank Powell, director of the Equitable Film Corporation, has been elected a member of the Bayside Yacht Club of Bayside, L. I.

Jane Grey was hostess to a party at Loew's New York theater recently at a performance of "Man and His Angel." The guests were Gail Kane, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell, Frances Nelson, Gerda Holmes, Arthur Ashley, Mary Charleson, Mollie King, Holbrook Blinn, Doris Kenyon and Chester Barnett.

Alice Brady will appear in the World Film Corporation's production of "The Quick or the Dead" after her appearance in a Broadway legitimate offering.

Gail Kane, after a short vacation when "Her God" was completed, is working in "The Other Sister," directed by Frank Powell.

Instead of numbers, the Metro-Rolfe dressing rooms for the principal players are designated by different stars, as Mars, Juno, Saturn, etc. Mabel Taliaferro's mother was much astonished, on her first visit, when told that her daughter was in "Jupiter."

For "The Hand of Peril," Director Maurice Tourneur had nine rooms of a house shown, with action occurring in each room simultaneously, thus avoiding "flash-back" scenes.

The Pathe players acting in the "Sahara Desert" scenes for Director Jose's "Light That Failed," nearly froze to death. The scenes were taken near Bridgeport, Conn., and the players were supposed to be overcome by the heat.

Baby Marie Osborne, featured in the Pathe production of "Little Mary Sunshine," is very fond of animals. She quite enjoyed her scenes with the bear in the dream scene for the play.

Pearl White's wardrobe for her role in "The Iron Claw" includes thirty-four gowns, thirteen suits, eleven cloaks and coats, innumerable hats and other accessories costing the Pathe Company about $25,000. Many of these costumes are worn only in one scene.

Rockcliffe Fellowes, who was featured with Anna Q. Nilsson in "The Regeneration," is again with the William Fox forces. He is working under the direction of Frank Griffen.

Patsy De Forrest of the Lubin forces is suffering from chilblains, a result of playing with bare feet the role of "Trilby" in the new Davy Don comedy. Outdoor scenes were taken after a snowstorm.

The Mutual Weekly No. 63 shows the New York "Giants" training at Marlin Springs, Tex.

William Fox has received an invitation from the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce to come to Florida as guest of the organization. Twenty-five thousand dollars, the letter states, has been subscribed for entertainment, which has rather alarmed Mr. Fox.

Four complete rooms, representing the interior of an ocean steamer, were built in New York and transported to Miami, Fla., for some of the big scenes in "The Struggle," which John Ince is directing for the Equitable Company. Frank Sheridan heads the cast.

Robert Warwick will be seen next in "Human Driftwood," with Frances Nelson. Scenes are being taken for the World Film Company in Miama, Fla.

The new studio of the Paragon Film Company at Fort Lee, N. J., is complete and houses five directors. Maurice Tourneur is the managing director.

Henry W. Pemberton plays the role of the rajah in the Gaumont production, "The Haunted Manor." He had to wear brown grease paint for almost a month, while the picture was being filmed in Jacksonville.

Lucille Taft has another society girl role in the Gaumont drama, "The Quality of Faith."

Virginia Parson has been asked to invest money in a new beauty cream which its inventor says is a cure for blotchy complexions, a cement for broken china, a sure cure for automobile tire punctures. It is also perfectly harmless.

Alma Hanlon, now appearing with Theda Bara in "Gold and The Woman," is the ninth generation of family engaged in entertaining the public. She is the grand-daughter of George Hanlon, famed as an acrobat half a century ago.

Theda Bara's "Confessions" are interesting the public very decidedly, judging from the letters they have called forth.

The release date for the Gaumont play, "The Haunted Manor," first set as March 20, is postponed until April. Iva Shepard is featured in the play.

Dorothy Bernard's hobby is the cultivation of roses. The finest fertilizer, she states, is a mixture of coffee grounds and soot.

Louise Huff, who played in Lubin, Famous Players and other feature films, will appear in "Blazing Love," the first William Fox play featuring Virginia Pearson.

Harry Hilliard is soon to appear with Vivian Martin in the William Fox play, "A Modern Thelma," scenes for which were taken in Georgia.

Doris Kenyon, who appeared opposite George Beban in "The Pawn of Fate," and with Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," although in pictures only Mutual Film Corporation: The attitude on the part of the directors of this company, in issuing to all stockholders a statement—which, we understand, was properly audited by a certified public accountant—is certainly a step in the right direction. The Mutual Film Corporation and the various manufacturing concerns affiliated with this distributing organization, seem to be of one mind on this subject. The published statement of the Thanhouser in the leading financial journals of the country showed a far better condition than anyone except the directors had any notion of. The present report of the Mutual, as of January 18, 1916—after excluding good will item and proper depreciation—shows sufficient net assets to liquidate the entire preferred issue at par and the common stock at considerably above 70. It also discloses an undivided profit account sufficient to pay 7% for the entire year on the preferred and 7% on the common and still leave a surplus. The effect of this statement has already been felt as, outside of a few 5 and 10-share lots that can be picked up around 43½, there are no 100-share lots to be had under 50.

World Film Corporation: Trading in this stock is contracted to a very narrow volume and it is almost impossible to get buying orders at the present time.

Triangle Film Corporation: There has been a recession in the market value and trades have been registered at 3½. Next to the Knickerbocker theater in New York (the star institution of the Triangle circuit), the Colonial theater in Chicago reports banner business during the past week.

seven months, is soon to be starred in a production. Miss Kenyon, who is just eighteen years old, began her theatrical career in Victor Herbert's opera, "Princess Pat."

Mae Busch, tall Triangle-Keystone star.

Walter Miller, appearing in the Annette Kellermann picture in Jamaica, and James Marcus, working in the William Fox studios in Los Angeles, are playing a chess tournament by mail.

Alma Hanlon has discovered that the best way to remove mud from clothes is to scrape the spot with the edge of a penny.

Jane Lee, the six-year William Fox actress, caused much excitement in the studio recently by swallowing a safety pin.

George Beban, while playing for "The Pawn of Fate," herded sheep, milked cows, mended a dog's injured foot, was chased by a mad bull and stung by hornets.

John Reinhard wears a monocle in "Feathertop," and later appears as a scarecrow. He likes the scarecrow role best.

John Mackin takes the part of a strike leader in "The Quality of Faith."

Juliette Courtot, sister of Marguerite Courtot, has a small role in "Feathertop," "just for fun."

"Who Killed Simon Baird," with Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Rose and Muriel Ostriche, will be released April first on the Equitable program.

Carlyle Blackwell, directed by Ray Physioc, is working in "The Shadow of a Doubt."

Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes will appear on the World-Equitable program in Richard Le Gallienne's play, "The Chain Invisible," released April 10.

Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock wrote the scenario of "Who Killed Simon Baird." James Durkin is directing the play.

"The Surrender," Equitable production featuring Jane Grey, will be released early in June.

Olive Trevor of New Orleans made her screen debut in Gaumont's "The Haunted Manor."

Albert Macklin is a skilled piano player, and gives impromptu concerts at the Gaumont studios.

Work on the William Fox picture, "Scandal," featuring Bertha Kalich, has been held up because two child players, Kittens Reichert and Walter Ferguson, have the measles.

Lionel Barrymore will be seen next in "Dorian's Divorce," a Metro play.

Viola Dana began her professional career when she was five years old, as a juvenile exponent of classic dancing.

Clifford Bruce, the star of "Hearts Aflame," has a duck farm near Bayside, L. I.

Sidney Drew spends his evenings reading scenarios submitted to him during the day.

Daniel (Kid) Hogan, chief property man at the Rolfe-Metro studios, who often appears in Metro productions, re-received a green scarf and skating cap from a group of Brooklyn girls as a St. Patrick's Day gift. They did not know that Hogan is Italian, his real name being Daniel Bertona.

Lieutenant Victor DeLinsky, retired Russian army officer, plays a prominent role in "The Kiss of Hate," the Russian drama starring Ethel Barrymore. He assisted Director Nigh greatly because of his knowledge of Russian official life.

Thomas J. Carrigan owns a third interest in a factory in Michigan that builds portable houses.

Thomas Meighan. Lasky.

William Davidson, last seen with Hamilton Revelle and Barbara Tennant in "The Price of Malice," has many feminine admirers, judging from the number of letters he receives.

Florence Reed, the striking Pathe beauty.

S. M. Berg, who arranges musical programs for Metro pictures, was an orchestra leader in New York for ten years. Before that he was an amateur musician in London.

Mary Miles Minter received so many flowers from Montreal, Canada, admirers when she visited there that she needed an extra taxicab to take them home.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Fritzi Brunette enjoyed her role of "Cindy" in "At Piney Ridge," the sunbonnet and old wrapper of the mountain girl's costume being a welcome contrast after a season of "Lucille" gowns.

Edward J. Peil has purchased a rose-covered bungalow in California near the Selig studio.

The latest perfume has been named in honor of Kathlyn Williams.

Harry Mestayer has been seriously ill from an acute attack of laryngitis.

Frank Beal is staging a single reel light comedy, "Cupid's Touchdown," for the Selig Company.

Frank Borzage is taking Thomas Chatterton's place as actor and director with

Anna Little. They have just finished a two-reel American, "Two Bits."

William Wolbert staged two one-reel comedies while waiting for completion of the sets for his new serial. Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell and Otto Lederer appeared in the first comedy, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips, Otto Lederer and William Duncan in the second.

Introducing Miss Joyce Fair, aged 11, the littlest leading lady in filmdom.

She's also the best known child actress on the speaking stage and, when but 9 years old, established a reputation for herself by her remarkable acting in "The Dummy," which was a hit in New York City.

Joyce Fair, the brilliant little star just added to the Essanay constellation. Miss Fair was formerly the well-known child-star in "The Dummy" on the stage.

Miss Joyce will make her screen debut for the Essanay company in "Joyce's Strategy," a two-reel picture, written and directed by Harry Beaumont.

Bad roads have postponed the "housewarming" at the new Vitagraph plant, but it will eventually take place. Work on the new buildings is progressing.

William Hart's next play, after the Aztec romance, will deal with a Kentucky mountain feud. Scenes will be taken in the Santa Monica mountains. Monte M. Katterjohn wrote the story.

Many of the scenes for "Peggy," the Triangle play featuring Billie Burke, were taken by three or four cameras at the same time, to insure the best photography. Special attention was given to the fairyland scenes.

Captain Wilbert Melville of the Lubin studios in California has written and produced a three-act drama, "None So Blind," featuring Princess Nona Darkfeather.

Frank Mills, who was starred in "The Moral Fabric," a Triangle-Kay Bee feature, was very prominent on the speaking stage. Although born in the United States, he appeared for many years on the London stage. He has been leading man with Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. Fiske, Annie Russell, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Eleanor Robson and Olga Nethersole.

E. Forrest Taylor appears as a poet in the American play, "April," featuring Helene Rosson as a little mountain girl. Harry von Meyer and Louise Lester are in the cast.

With Norma Talmadge in the cast of "The Children in the House," the new title for "The Empty House," are William Hinckley, Jewel Carmen, W. E. Lawrence, Alice Ray, Walter Long, Alva D. Blake, George Pearce and the Fine Arts children, George Stone, Carmen De Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Fovieri.

C. Gardner Sullivan has completed the manuscript for H. B. Warner's next Triangle appearance. Reginald Barker will direct the story, which deals with modern warfare and the spy system.

De Wolf Hopper's infant son appears with his father in "Sunshine Dad."

Willie Collier is working in his second Triangle-Kay Bee feature, directed by Scott Sidney. He plays the role of an inebriate who, in delirium, goes back to primeval days.

Palmelia Woodruff and William S. Charles have written a song, dedicated to Lenore Ullich in her role in "The Heart of Paula." The G. Schirmer music house is publishing the song, which will be advertised by the publishers and the Pallas Pictures.

Nearly 700 persons, representing the marching armies of the Aztec Indians, appear in the sixteenth century story starring William S. Hart. Charles Swickard directs this Triangle-Kay Bee feature, written by Monte Katterjohn. Dorothy Dalton, Enid Markey, P. D. Tabler, Robert McKim and Walt Whitman are in the cast.

A sculptor who made statuettes of Helene Rosson in a spring dance for American photoplays and for commercial purposes, has presented Miss Rosson with one of the originals, an artistic piece of work.

Clune, his manager, Lloyd Brown, and Director Donald Crisp, have become well known throughout the country since the production of "Ramona."

Bessie Barriscale finished her role of an Italian peasant girl under the direction of Charles Giblyn, and without a day's vacation went to work in a production Raymond B. West is directing from a story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Ashton Dearholt proved himself a hero and a cook recently when a hungry automobile party, including Albert Russell, Vola Smith and Al Hammond, arrived unexpected at William Russell's ranch in Santa Barbara.

Anne Schaefer, Mary Anderson, George Kunkel and Lawrence Weingarten will be seen in a comedy which Dave Smith is now producing.

Corinne Griffith has just finished her role opposite Webster Campbell in a three-reel drama. After a short rest, she will play a leading role in Rollin Sturgeon's production of a story by Crittenden Marriott.

A private showing was given recently of "God's Country and the Woman," Rollin Sturgeon's eight-reel feature.

Rena Rogers, who has been signed to play leads in Vogue comedies, directed by Jack Dillon. Her first will be called "The Little Blonde Lady."

Wonderful effects in falling snow, heavy storms and blizzards have been obtained. Forty Siberian dogs are an interesting feature of the play.

Dave Smith is producing a comedy by William E. Wing featuring Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell as a farm girl and boy.

Special attention has been given the photography in "The Stepping Stone," which Reginald Barker produced under the direction of Thomas Ince. Lights and shadows were skillfully used to soften harsh details of the picture. Frank Keenan and Mary Boland plays leads in the drama.

Her role in "The Raiders" is Dorothy Dalton's third appearance in an Ince picture. She formerly appeared in vaudeville sketches over the Orpheum and other leading circuits.

Frank Keenan has begun work as the star of a Triangle-Kay Bee feature written by J. G. Hawks. He appears as a southern colonel, though the action of the play is in the present, not civil war times. Louise Glaum, Charles Ray, George Fisher and Joseph J. Dowling are in the cast.

The Scotch village set at Inceville, built for the Billie Burke play, "Peggy," is being transformed into a fishing village on the north coast of England for Walter Edwards' production starring William H. Thompson.

Director Stanton held up traffic on a busy Los Angeles corner recently and took some exciting election scenes for the "Graft" serial. Thousands of people appeared in the scenes.

William D. Taylor, director, and George Beban, the star, have worked earnestly on "Pasquale," the Italian-American feature. Very realistic settings were used throughout.

Anita King's sister in Chicago tried by legal injunction to prevent the leading lady of "The Race" from taking a plunge in an automobile over a cliff, which Director George Melford planned. She was too late; the stunt had already been performed.

Dorothy Gish plays the part of a girl philanthropist in her new Fine Arts play, written by Bernard McConville and directed by Paul Powell. Owen Moore is leading man.

Charlotte Burton recently received a letter from a French soldier praising her work in "The Thoroughbred."

William S. Hart had a chance to show his skill in marksmanship in scenes for "Hell's Hinges," once when he shot a can full of holes while it was tossed in the air, again when he cut with bullets the ropes holding the lamps in the saloon scene.

Bessie Barriscale and Lewis S. Stone, co-starred with Walter Edwards in "Honor's Altar," Triangle-Kay Bee feature, appeared together on the speaking stage in "The Bird of Paradise."

The boys' choir from St. Paul's Procathedral in Los Angeles appeared in the big cathedral scene for the Triangle-Kay Bee feature, "Waifs," in which William Desmond and Jane Gray are starred. More than five hundred people appeared in the scene.

Bessie Barriscale narrowly escaped injury in the scene in "Bullets and Brown Eyes," in which William Desmond, as the young prince, rescues her in the last act. Twice while taking the scene her horse became unmanageable.

Rollin S. Sturgeon has gone on his annual fishing trip to Santa Catalina Island. George Kunkel went with him to "help carry the fish."

Norma Talmadge and thirty-five Fine Arts players staged a fantastic episode in Oscar Wilde fairy play style for "The Children in the House," a coming Triangle release, first announced as "The Empty House."

Bessie Love will play opposite Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good Bad-Man," being staged for Triangle by Allan Dwan from an original story by Fairbanks. Sam De Grasse, Doc Cannon, Mary Alden, George Beranger and Joseph Singleton are in the cast.

Fay Tincher and Edward Dillon appear in fantastic make-up as two crooks in "The Philanthropist," the present De Wolf Hopper production. Marguerite Marsh and Chester Withey have important roles.

An admirer of Mary Anderson discovers in her expression in the character of "Bill Peters' Kid" a likeness to the famous "Mona Lisa" smile.

Howard Hickman and Hershall Mayall have strong roles in the Ince photoplay, "He Who Returns." Harold French, George Fisher, Lola May and Ethel Ullman are also in the cast.

Gretchen Hartman is playing lead in a Biograph photoplay just produced by J. F. McDonald.

Neva Gerber paid a visit to the Lindblom studios at San Mateo recently. She and Manager Baskette discussed the possibility of her engagement with the company, but no definite announcement is made.

Edward Arnold, Essanay.

Alice Maison, a clever fancy dancer, has joined the Balboa forces.

Jackie Saunders is at work in her first serial. She obtained many costumes for her role while on her vacation in the east. Roland Bottomley is leading man.

Nell Shipman is spending a vacation at Catalina. She is also finishing several scenarios before contracting for another screen appearance.

William Christy Cabanne is directing Douglas Fairbanks at the Fine Arts studio in another comedy.

Harry Keenan and Leona Hutton have been secured by the American Film Company to appear in "The Secret Mating," William Russell's play, in which he will direct and play lead.

Roland Groom, a Balboa cameraman, recently inherited a 360-acre farm in Iowa. But he prefers studio life to farming and will remain with Balboa.

Norman Manning, Balboa's business manager, and Ruth White recently won a gold medal in a dancing contest.

Tully Marshall's work in the Fine Arts melodrama, "The Sable Lorcha," led to his appointment for the heavy role in "The Little Apache," in which Lloyd Ingraham is directing Mae Marsh and Robert Harron.

Wilfred Lucas gave an impromptu speech in a Pasadena theater where "Acquitted" was being shown, his first public appearance since he retired from the speaking stage.

Lillian Gish has finished her role of a Russian girl in "Sold for Marriage," in which William Christy Cabanne, who directed, says she has done her best work so far. She will appear next in a play directed by Allan Dwan.

Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan are receiving many letters of praise for their work in "The Girl and the Game" from railroad men throughout the country.

Bessie Barriscale has just finished a Triangle picture and is beginning another in a role reminiscent of the part she played in "The Cup of Life."

Charles Giblyn is directing Frank Keenan at Culver City in a play whose cast includes Charles Ray, Louise Glaum, George Fisher and Gertrude Claire.

Edgar Kellar, assistant to Rollin S. Sturgeon at the Vitagraph studios, is exhibiting one of his paintings at the exhibition of Contemporary American Painters in Los Angeles.

Nita Davis, who makes her American debut in "Curlew Corliss" as the little school teacher, made her first appearance in pictures two years ago while a student in a Los Angeles high school.

Helene Rosson, although still in her teens and a beginner in picture work, is attracting attention. Her role in "True Nobility" is particularly pleasing.

Henry King, who directed Marie Osborne, the clever child actress in "Little Mary Sunshine," is pleased with the reception given the play.

Reeves Eason, who has been assistant director at the Balboa studios, is now in charge of a company, led by Lois Meredith, supported by Frank Mayo and Marie Empress, acting a five-reel drama.

Luther Graham, one of the champion rough riders of the west, is appearing in Balboa features.

George Fisher, now with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, while still in his teens, played in a stock company in the middle west and acted within one week a bearded cotton merchant in "The Lily," a juvenile in "Spendthrifts," burly Jacques Frochard in "The Two Orphans," and the father of Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

For "Whispering Smith," the next J. P. McGowan-Helen Holmes production, the Signal Company has purchased two beautiful horses, Dixie, a brown, for Helen Holmes, and Duchess, well known in pictures, for McGowan.

Cleo Madison is directing and playing the part of a tenement girl in "Virginia," a one-reel play.

Dave Smith, the Vitagraph comedy director, has begun a one-reeler by W. E. Wing, with Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell, George Kunkel and Anne Schaefer in the cast.

William Garwood received an offer from a company in Australia recently, but remains with Universal.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are hard at work on their new serial, "Peg o' the Ring."

Ed. J. Le Saint, with Harry Carey and Stella Razeto, has returned from the Mojave desert, where they were taking pictures.

Norbert Myles made his debut with the Signal Film Corporation's company as leading man in "In the Web of the Grafters," a Mutual Masterpicture.

Jack Halloway directed the American play, "Overalls," in which Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell and Sylvia Ashton appear.

Murdock MacQuarrie is directing the next Signal Mutual Masterpicture. He also plays the role of "Bill Jenkins," in the play. Edythe Sterling has the leading feminine role.

SOUTHERN NOTES

By William Noble

P. W. Hutchinson has leased the Republic theater, Jacksonville, Fla., from T. V. Cashel, Jr.

The Affiliated Booking will open in Atlanta, Ga., in the near future, dealing with feature pictures on a percentage basis.

Winter and Block have rebuilt the Royal theater at Chattanooga, Tenn., increasing the seating capacity to 800.

Thomas S. Wilcox is having plans drawn for a new $5,000 motion picture theater to be built at 116 East Ninth street, Chattanooga. The new theater will be 40 by 100 and strictly modern.

The supreme court of Tennessee at Nashville recently sustained the validity of a Chattanooga ordinance prohibiting Sunday motion picture shows.

The Yale-Majestic theater at McAlester, Okla., has been closed ten days for remodeling. The seating capacity will be increased to 800.

Bertrand Kiern has opened the Happy Hour theater in New Orleans, Louisiana.

The Empire, a new picture house, has been opened at 1010 Canal street, New Orleans.

E. L. Malone will open a new picture house at Oak Cliff, near Dallas, Texas, early in April.

The Star, for negroes only, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened at Dallas, Texas.

Pierre Le May. Metro.

E. W. Copley will soon open a new theater in Dallas, Texas. One side will be a regular motion picture theater, while the other side will be devoted to a children's playground with attendants.

Joseph C. Clemmons has leased the Elks theater in Port Arthur, Texas, and opened with Triangle, Blue Bird, Fox and other big feature pictures.

Mary Pickford as "Poor Little Peppina."

Tiefel Bros. are building a new moving picture theater for C. H. Dyar, at Hereford, Texas, to cost $10,000.

The censorship craze has struck Paris, Texas, and the censors, if they obey the city ordinance, will have to stop the showing of all pictures now being regularly shown in other places throughout the country. The ordinance provides that it shall be unlawful to exhibit any picture of film showing the act of burglary or arson or robbery or other crime violations of the laws of the state of Texas, or a male person striking a female person, or any violation of the marital relation, or infidelity expressed or implied, or anything tending to immorality. All pictures must have the permission of the censors before being shown upon the screen.

At Fort Worth, Texas, the injunction restraining the city officials from holding an election on the Sunday opening proposition, has been dissolved and an election ordered for April 1.

BRITISH TRADE GOSSIP

The morality of Sunday picture entertainments is again being discussed. The London County Council proposes to allow Sunday exhibitions only when given by the National Sunday League and when part of the proceeds are given to charity.

The Ideal Company has finished the production of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," Arthur Pinero's famous play, and the first showing was given in St. James theater. Sir George Alexander, who is featured, is to appear in a series of plays for the Ideal Company.

C. Stretton Walker has resigned as business manager of the Brixton Palladium Picture theater. Mr. Walker has been associated with Sedger and Laurillard for seven years, first as manager of the King's Picture playhouse, Chelsea.

On and Off is a new British film trade journal which deals with both screen and stage.

Arthur Catliff, for many years with Pathe Freres, is now the sole representative in South Wales of the Acorn Film Exchange.

The M. P. Sales Agency has prepared a very attractive "Stingaree" poster stamp.

The Birmingham office of the Clarion Film Agency, E. Grattan Milloy, manager, displays in its windows, with the striking pictures from the World Film productions, cards showing where the films are being exhibited.

George Smith of the Vitagraph Company, after returning from a tour in Scotland and the north, sailed for New York City.

The Hepworth Company's production of Pinero's play, "Trelawney of the Wells," created a most favorable impression at its trade showing, many declaring it Cecil Hepworth's best work so far.

The pastor of Bethel Nonconformist Church of Glyncorrwg, Glamorganshire, recently applied for a cinema license for the vestry of his church.

A chapel at Clydach Vale, in Wales, has become a motion picture theater, church services being held in a hall nearby.

"The Island of Regeneration," Vitagraph production of the novel by the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, was enthusiastically received at its recent trade showing.

W. Comrie Scott of the American Company has returned to London after a two months' tour of the United States.

Donald Crisp, director of Ramona, Cline's feature.

Frank Rogers of the Liverpool branch of Pathe Freres has resigned to go into the army.

CRANE WILBUR'S LIFE STORY LIKE FICTION

There are two classes of people about whose life it is very difficult to write.

One is the person who is so dull and colorless that there is nothing to write about.

The other is the person whose career has been so full of interesting incidents that it is impossible to include them all in a stipulated amount of space.

Out at the studios of David Horsley in Los Angeles, Cal., is such a person as the last named. He is Crane Wilbur, star of Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, whose life story is as fascinating as any book.

Mr. Wilbur's striking combination of black hair and blue eyes bespeak an Irish ancestry. And he claims such a one. His mother was born on the "ould sod," while his father was born in England. He has the temperament, the poetical nature, of an Irishman, with the thorough, tenacious tendencies of an Englishman. And he has the dramatic ability inherited from a long line of successful players.

Mr. Wilbur was born in Athens, N. Y. A large part of his early life was spent in study. He was especially fond of history and the languages, and even before he left school to go on the stage, he had mastered several languages and had read far more literature than most young men twice his age.

When Mr. Wilbur was fifteen he had an opportunity to go on the stage with Sir Henry Irving in "Robespierre," and shortly after, because of his excellent work, he became a member of Mrs. Fiske's famous Manhattan company, with whom he remained for four years. It was through an unforesoon turn of fate that he entered the stock stage, which, he now declares, was the most valuable training that he could have desired for pictures.

When the Crane Power company went out on its world tour, Wilbur went with it. The venture proved unsuccessful, however, and being stranded in the middle west, the youthful star took the first stock engagement which offered itself. He remained in stock for several years, playing in the leading cities. His last three years in stock was at the head of his own company in Rochester, N. Y.

The picture field, however, at length began to attract him. His large following of Rochester theatergoers did all they could to keep him on the stage, but when a flattering offer came for him to join Pathe, the handsome juvenile man left the stage for good.

It is to romance that Mr. Crane's face and bearing best lend themselves, so it has been in screen romantic roles almost entirely that he has appeared. His head of thick black hair, his languid eyes and his perfect profile are the cause of as much consternation among the screen fans as they were among the matinee girls. But the handsome star laughs at praise and declares that the only thing he asks is to be able to do his work as well as he himself thinks it ought to be done.

Wilbur remained with Pathe for several years, until he became leading man of the Horsley Mutual organization. Aside from acting, during the years he has been in the dramatic field Mr. Wilbur has followed up his literary bent by writing plays. Not one of the dramas written for the legitimate stage was ever refused.

Since his connection at the Horsley Mutual forces he has written a series of screen dramas in which he himself has played the lead. One of the most unusual dramas produced for the Mutual was Mr. Wilbur's three-part allegorical drama, "The Blood of Our Brothers," in which the author-star treats upon the horrors of war.

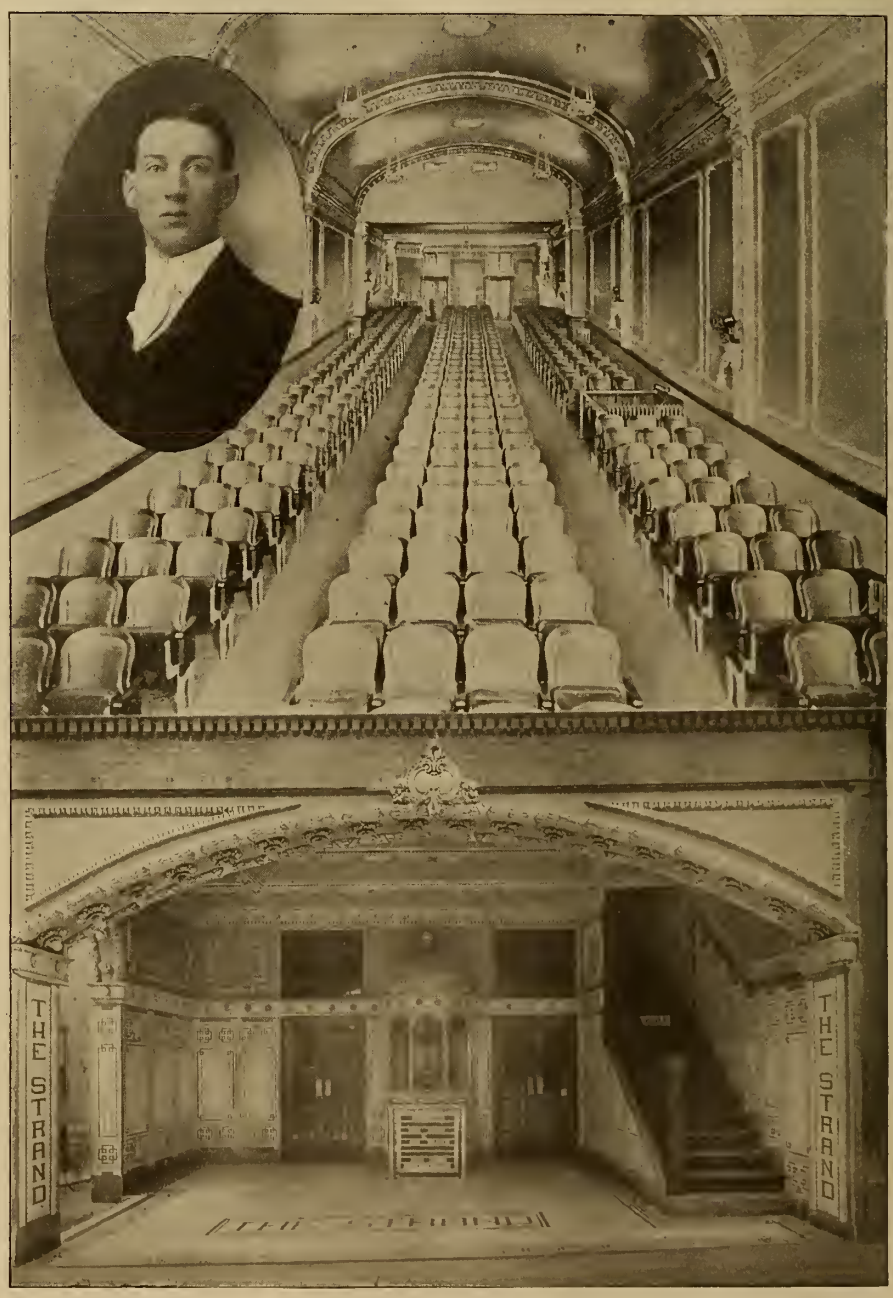
"Vengeance Is Mine," a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, based on the question of capital punishment, is another of the virile star's recent achievements.

FILM ACTOR IS TAKEN FOR HOBO

While in tramp make-up recently, Richard Johnson, the Balboa character man, had a number of yegg-men take him for one of them. In enacting a scene, Johnson was supposed to be stoned out of town by some irate citizens. As they drove him down the railroad tra[illegible] just outside the Balboa studio, several real knights-of-the-road hove in sight. Believing one of their comrades to be in trouble, they came to his rescue and set upon the other actors, putting them to flight. When they found out he was only a "reel" weary, they took the joke on themselves in good stead.

ETHEL KAUFMANN IN "THE IRON CLAW"

Director Edward Jose has cast Ethel Kauffman to play Jeannette O'Mara, supporting Pearl White, in "The Iron Claw," the big Pathe serial. Once again Miss Kauffman is back in rags, the little good hearted, heroic factory girl, who risks her life to save Marjorie from the villainous depredations of the Iron Claw.



The Strand Theater of Asheville, North Carolina, and its manager, Frederick Abbott.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Julian desiring once more to look upon the face he cannot forget descends into her tomb and while there Camilla awakes from the coma which resembles death and Julian takes her back to court. He finds Lionel, who has become a hermit, and reunites the lovers, while he goes away.

Otto the Soldier—Lubin—March 27.—Featuring Davy Don. Two men of the army induce Zimmerman, a German tailor, to sign as a volunteer. That night Zim at home with his family realizes the terrible thing he has done and shows his sorrow by refusing to eat. He even goes so far as to bribe Dr. Platz to give him a poor bill of health, but the army discovers the deception and Zim has to go to war. Many comical situations follow and finally Zim has to seek the trenches to escape his wife, whose wrath has been aroused.

A Social Deception—(Three Reels)—Selig—March 27.—Grace Darmond, Wheeler Oakman, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Mestayer and Vivian Reed featured. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

Mr. Jack Inspects Paris—Vitagraph—March 27.—Featuring Frank Daniels. Paul Renard, a young medical student in Paris, receives $5,000 from his rich uncle in New York to use for a new office, but instead Paul spends the money on Fifi, a cabaret queen. Uncle writes Paul he is coming to visit him and arrives in Paris sooner than stated in order to have a quiet peek at "gay Paree." He meets Fifi, and Paul, desperate, hires a furnished doctor's office and hires a bunch of loafers to act as patients. Uncle arrives, but Paul having never seen him thinks he is one of the patients. Uncle is enlightened of his nephew's opinion of him in this way and goes to Fifi for comfort, and here Paul meet him. After a grand expose all around they are thrown out of Fifi's home but later they make up and become friends.

Alias Jimmie Barton—(Two Reels)—Biograph—March 28.—Featuring Jack Mulhall, Jose Ruben, Gretchen Hartman and Vola Smith. Chester Randolph is disowned by his father, who is wealthy, and while intoxicated he loses his coat and hat which are found by Jimmie Barton, a country lad. Barton and Randolph switch identities and obtain work in a factory. The pseudo Jimmie saves the manufacturer's daughter from a fire and sometime later marries her. This news travels back to the village where Madge Saunders, who secretly married the real Jimmie, is waiting for him to make good. Complications occur, but finally the tangle of identities is unraveled.

The Dixie Winner—(Two Reels)—Essanay—March 28.—Featuring Joyce Fair, Marian Murray, Ernest Maupain and Patrick Calhoun. Judge Boyce disinherits his daughter, because she marries into a family with which the Boyces have carried on a feud for years. Her husband dies and she is compelled to earn a living for herself and little daughter. The mother is compelled to sell a horse which is her daughter's favorite and Judge Boyce softens and secretly buys the colt. Later he enters the colt in a race and through his daughter he wins the race and a reconciliation follows.

Madelaine Morel—(Three Reels)—Biograph—March 29.—Featuring Betty Gray, Jack Drumier and William Russell. Count Dalberg accuses Morel of stealing a bag of gold and Morel flees with his daughter Madelaine. Years later the bag of gold is found under a rose bush where it had been discarded by the count's children. The count dies of remorse and his son, Julian, seeks Madelaine and her father and he is about to marry her when Von Armin, who is about to wed his sister Marguerite, recognizes Madelaine as his former mistress. Her girl chum declares that he ruined Madelaine and on learning this Marguerite tears off her bridal veil and refuses to wed the scoundrel.

Runt gives his money to Plump to keep for him and while Plump is dining with a dainty miss the money disappears. Plump and Runt unable to pay their board are put to work by the landlord. Runt discovers their lost money in a pair of shoes which are brought to him to shine and with howls of joy awaken the landlord, pay their bill and later capture the crooks who stole their money.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Home-Breakers—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—March 31.—Featuring Fred Whitman, Margaret Landis, Charles Dudley, Madeline Pardee and Daniel Gilfeather. Gerald Sanderson inherits a large fortune from a distant relative and with his wife, Edna, comes to the city to live. He becomes active upon the street as a broker and meets with great success. Wilson Crane, a broker of unquestionable reputation, desiring to get a hold on Gerald endeavors to prove to Edna Gerald's faithlessness to her. Through Mrs. Renssaler, his accomplice, he manages to place Edna in a position where she can see, but not overhear what takes place in her husband's office. Edna heartbroken returns home, but an aged servant comes to the rescue and the young couple are reunited.

Anvils and Actors—Vim—March 31.—Featuring Pokes and Jabbs. Ethel, the daughter of the village blacksmith, is admired by both Pokes and Jabbs. She accepts an engagement ring from Pokes, and Jabbs, brokenhearted, goes to the city to become an actor. Pokes jilts Ethel for a girl from the city and Ethel, crushed in spirit, also goes to the city to seek her fortune. Years later Pokes visiting the city finds his way inside a theater where he sees his sweetheart, Ethel, and Jabbs, enacting a melodramatic play that portrays the conduct of Pokes toward Ethel in former days. Many exciting things follow, but finally Pokes is thrown out of the theater, while Ethel and Jabbs enjoy a good laugh.

Freddy Foils the Floaters—Vitagraph—March 31.—Featuring William Dangman. Freddie arriving in a country village secures a position in the local newspaper office. The owner of the paper is backing a candidate for Assemblyman against the town Political Boss, who becomes Freddie's enemy. The night before election Freddie overhears the Boss giving orders to secrete the gang of repeaters, or floaters, as they are called, which he has hired for the next day, in a certain barn. Through a clever ruse Freddie manages to lock the floaters and their leader in the barn and by so doing he saves the day. The newspaper's candidate is elected and Freddie is rewarded by his employer.

The Spider's Web—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 1.—Featuring Bryant Washburn, John Junior, Elizabeth Burbridge and Gertrude Glover. David Lindon and Buck Whiting, college chums, save the big football game of the year for their school and that night at a party Lindon takes his first drink. After that he becomes intoxicated several times and when he returns home he takes a position in his father's steel mills. Forsyth, who is desirous of becoming manager of the mills, one night finds the boy intoxicated and takes him to his home and injects morphine and he soon after becomes a slave to the new habit. His friend Buck Whiting, however, helps him to fight against the habit, and when he is cured he marries Buck's sister.

Billie's Double—Lubin—April 1.—Featuring Billie Reeves. Billie Riddle is living at a hotel and one morning there arrives at the hotel William Biddle and his wife. Biddle is in face and feature the exact image of Riddle and the mix-up that occurs because of their likeness is laughable.

Her Dream of Life—Selig—April 1.—Featuring Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond. At the grave of his wife Howard Crossley, a well-to-do clubman, finds a book which he opens and reads. This book is the diary of his wife and as he turns the pages days that have long gone by come back to him and too late he realizes that he has lost his best friend. The diary impresses a lesson upon him and he resolves thereafter to lead a more sedate life.

C.; Naval Militia of San Francisco, Calif., take possession of their newly acquired training ship, the historic Oregon; natives of Tampa, Fla., turn out in force to watch the first day's practice of the "Cubs" which necessitates many "limbering up" exercises.

Mutual Program

The Girl and the Game No. 13—(Two Reels)—Signal.—Featuring Helen Holmes. A longer review appears elsewhere in this issue.

In the Shuffle—(Three Reels)—American—March 28.—Wninifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen featured. A longer review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Paul's Political Pull—Falstaff—March 28.—Featuring Walter Heirs. Paul's two older brothers, selfish and lazy, have always made him do their work and they themselves have become more or less useless. A letter arrives at the house addressed to the brothers, notifying them that a wealthy uncle has left his money to the brother "who during the month of August shall work most steadily." The two older brothers have a tussle between themselves, not dreaming that Paul is eligible to the contest. Paul, however, is taken in hand by his friend, Sport Costigan, a ward heeler, who sees him through by resorting to a peculiar scheme. So Paul gets the estate and reciprocates by financing the ward heeler's campaign.

A Trunk an' Trouble—Beauty—March 29.—Featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway, Dick Rosson and Queenie Rosson. Ruth receives word from Mabel, her chum, that she and her husband are to pay them a visit. Walt flirts with Mabel while Bob is looking after their suit case and when Bob returns he chases Walt, who seeks refuge in an open trunk which falls off an express wagon and which belongs to Mabel. A series of exciting complications follow, but finally Walt explains everything.

Fear—(Three Reels)—Thanhouser — March 29.—With Robert Walker, Peggy Burke, and Howard M. Mitchell. A country tradesman's wife falls in love with a man whom he has befriended and the two abscond, taking a large sum of money in gold which the tradesman has stored in the house. It is not long before the woman leaves her paramour, however, and seeks a life on the stage. The man later becomes victim to an insane fear that he is forever being hounded by the man whom he has wronged. When at last the former tradesman does confront him, the fugitive falls dead from fright.

The Snow Shoveler's Sweetheart—Falstaff—March 30.—With Jay C. Yorke and Frances Keyes. The young man who is in love with the garage proprietor's daughter fails in his own business, because his photographs are so weird that customers refuse to pay for them. When father refuses to have the young man around, on the ground that no jobless man shall marry his daughter, Bob takes up the career of a snow shoveler. Several of the villagers decide to make an example of the garage keeper for his excessive rates and attack him at his home. Then it is that the snow shoveler comes to the rescue and ousts the intruders from the house in a hand-to-hand battle—with the result that the shoveler gets the girl and the garage owner comes down to low rates.

The Lion Hearted Chief—Vogue—March 30.—Featuring Frank Coleman, Priscilla Dean, Jack Dillon and Paddy McQuire. "The Lion Hearted Chief" objects to his daughter's sweetheart and favors the star detective. Her sweetheart arranges a plot to make the chief think his daughter has been kidnapped, hoping to be assigned the case, but the plans miscarry and the detective gets the assignment. He follows the scent and discovers the girl who has really been bound and gagged by a bandit. He is forced by the bandit to keep guard over the girl and in this compromising position he is discovered by the girl's sweetheart and her father. The star detective is disgraced and the lovers receive the blessing of the chief.

Jerry and the Smugglers—Cub—March 31.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry finds a bundle and upon opening it finds a book "How to Become a Detective" and also a collection of disguises including the attire of a Chinaman. He also finds a note telling of a band of Mongolian smugglers and resolves to run down the smugglers. He dons the Chinese attire and manages after much trouble to capture the Orientals.

On the Rampage—Cub—March 24.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry finds a suitcase belonging to Baron De Long, which he finds upon examination contains some article of apparel and also an invitation to attend a gathering at a great mansion. He impersonates the baron and is having a fine time when the baron arrives and a general mix-up follows, which results in both the baron and Jerry being arrested.

Snow Stuff—(Three Reels)—Mustang—March 24.—A longer review appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Bubbles and the Barber—Beauty—March 26.—Featuring Orral Humphrey, Gladys Kingsbury and Mary Talbot. The Bubbles, who have grown rich on soap, and Mrs. Bubbles having social aspirations plans to marry her daughter, Sophia, to a title. Mr. Bubbles phones the marriage bureau and the broker promises to produce a count before eight that evening. M. Fidgetti is hired by the broker to pass out off as a count, but he stops at the wine room to celebrate his good fortune and forgets about his appointment. The broker after waiting some time for Fidgetti, grabs a waiter in a beanery, who is accepted by Sophia.

See America First, No. 28.—(Split Reel)—March 26.—Palm Beach, Florida, is the subject of this installment of Mutual's travelogue series. The annual speed boat regatta, surf bathing and an extended trip through "America's paradise" makes this offering of unusual interest. On the same reel is:

Signs of Spring.—One of Harry Palmer's cartoon comedies.

Devilish Business—Vogue—March 26.—Featuring Arthur Tavepas, Alice Neice, Madge Kirby and Rube Miller. The story is of his Satanic Majesty's efforts to get the soul of a girl and of Rube's efforts to foil him in his designs. The manner in which Rube saves the girl is both novel in treatment and idea.

Universal Program

The Pirates of Finance—(Two Reels)—Episode 16 of "Graft." Featuring Jane Novak, Richard Stanton and Glen White. Stone, the last of the Graft Trust, prepares for a battle with Harding, the lawyer who has so effectively fought the other members of the Trust. Harding, however, is nominated for mayor and carried into office on a landslide of reform. Stone's power is broken and he prepares to flee and take Dorothy Maxwell into exile with him somewhere in Africa. His plan is frustrated as far as kidnapping Dorothy is concerned, but, in the guise of a chauffeur, he escapes detection himself and slinks away to safety.

The Janitor's Busy Day—Nestor—March 27.—Written by Al. E. Christie, this comedy plays in a boarding house where two actresses who have determined to dye their hair speak of "dying together" and alarm the janitor. This leads to comical situations which involve an eloping couple avoiding the bride's father and an actor who cannot pay his board. Lee Moran, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes are in the cast.

Lady Raffles Returns—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—March 28.—A detective story written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, who play the leading roles. The police are baffled by a series of daring robberies. Phil Kelly is assigned to the case. He receives a letter from Lady Raffles stating that she will rob a certain house the following day. The story then tells of the stirring incidents which lead to the capture of Lady Raffles by Kelly, and his success in obtaining the missing valuables. Kelly, however, does not arrest the thief, probably because he is much attracted by her beauty and charm. When his superiors ask him why he has not captured Lady Raffles Kelly's answer that he was only instructed to return the jewels is entirely satisfactory. Kelly is not even reprimanded.

The Gasoline Habit—Imp—March 28.—Victor Potel and Eileen Sedgwick are the only Fordless couple in town. Mrs. Slim persuades her husband to purchase one. He does, and it is a temperamental one. After a series of exciting adventures with the machine they decide to walk the rest of their way through life.

There Is No Place Like Home—Rex—March 28.—The story of a boy who fails to appreciate the many blessings of his comfortable home and runs away. His experiences with a family of roving, worthless people are the means of bringing him to realize that "there is no place like home," and he returns to a loving father and mother. The story was written and produced by Lois Weber and features Antrim Short.

A Model Husband—(Two Reels)—Victor—March 29.—Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in a comedy of domestic life. Mr. Cherub to all outward appearances is a model husband and he is the idol of the town. In truth he is the direct opposite to what people believe him. But one day his life becomes an open book and the former model is now the object of the neighbors' scorn. The picture is well supplied with diverting situations.

A Fool's Gold—(Three Reels)—Laemmle—March 30.—Produced by Richard Stanton, who plays the role of the husband, Dick Webster, a clerk who becomes suddenly wealthy after being shown the way by two dishonest people. His wealth turns his head. He divorces his wife and is eager to contract a marriage with some wealthy girl. In this he is unsuccessful. For Webster's own good his employer ruins him financially and in the time of his greatest trouble his wife comes to his aid. Webster and his loyal wife start life anew. Myrtle Gonzalez is cast as the wife.

Between Midnight—Powers—March 30.—A comedy burlesqueing the melodrama of the bank robbery type. There are crooks, a hero detective and a heroine stenographer. This enjoyable one-reel comedy was written and produced by Carter DeHaven. Margaret Wayburn, W. H. McCormick, Henri Bergman and Harry Depp are in the cast.

Scorched Wings—(Three Reels)—Imp—March 31.—Featuring Betty Gray and Curtis Benton. This story deals with the experiences of Betty Pendleton, a coquette who delights in conquest, immediately throwing over each man after having ruined his chances with another. Finally her girlhood lover, who has been thrown over in his turn, forcibly puts some sense into her head, and, after Betty has nearly broken up a happy home, she repents of the heartaches she has caused so many and especially Bob. She then returns to the latter. Although thoroughly disgusted with her, Bob now beholds a different woman and his old love returns with full force.

He Almost Eloped—Nestor—March 31.—In spite of the rought treatment they receive from the girl's policeman father, the two ardent suitors continue to visit her. The father sends his flirtatious daughter to a boarding school to put a stop to these meetings. The sweetheart writes a letter asking the object of his affections to elope with him. In the meantime he meets a girl he loves even more. In an attempt to get the letter he creates a stir in the school and brings trouble upon his own head. But all ends well for him; for he quite forgot to mail the love note.

The Night Riders—(Two Reels)—Bison—April 1.—This melodrama which plays in a Western mining town was written and produced by Jacques Jaccard. It is the story of an Indian breed, who has a fine education but is looked down upon by the white people, while, because of his white admixture he is an outcast from his own people. He saves the life of the sheriff by an act of great bravery and wins the admiration and respect of his neighbors.

The Tale of a Telegram—Joker—April 1.—William Franey and Milburn Moranti are cast as the cousins who get along well as business partners but not so well when it comes to affairs of the heart. They are both in love with Lillian Peacock. Lillian's father favors Bill and her mother shows a preference for Tom. The latter when told by father that the one with the most money may marry Lillian, draws upon the partnership bank account. But this he turns over to the crafty Bill after he receives a telegram announcing the death of a wealthy uncle. A second telegram tells Tom that his inheritance is just fifteen cents.

A Serpent in the House—Powers—April 1.—An amusing comedy produced by Robert Daly which tells of a slavey who dresses in one of her mistress' gowns and visits the beach with Eddie, the iceman. The mistress has an appointment to meet her husband at the beach. He mistakes the slavey for his wife and humorous complications follow. Albert MacQuarrie, Fritzie Brunette and Jane Bernoudy are in the cast.

Caught on a Skyscraper—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—April 2.—Cast with Harry Gribbon, Vin Moore and May Emory this comedy tells of a flirtation which brings about stirring and amusing circumstances. The husband threatens the young man who attempts to flirt with his wife. It happens that these people live opposite one another at the hotel. The wife is a sleep-walker. That night she walks into the flirt's room and is discovered there by husband whose wrath is calmed when he sees his wife walk out the window to the parapet which is just fourteen stories above the ground. She walks round and round to the dismay of the onlookers. But all ends well for husband and wife, and the bachelor swears never again will he flirt.

Her Sister's Sin—Rex—April 2.—Francis Ford and Grace Cunard play dual roles in this drama. Doctor Brock and his wife live happily together. His wife's sister is worthless. She robs her sister's home one night and the doctor is tempted to have her punished for the crime but his wife pleads with him. That night a male burglar enters the house and when the doctor confronts him he discovers that the thief is his own good-for-nothing brother. Later both worthless brother and gambling sister narrowly escape with their lives, which serves as an awakening for both. The picture closes upon their determination to lead better lives.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 11—March 15.—International High Commission starts for Buenos Aires by warship; University of Pennsylvania crew takes season's first row, Philadelphia, Pa.; latest fashions; New York's National Leaguers nearly fit for "play ball" order, Marlin Springs, Tex.; dress costing $21.50 wins thousand dollar prize in "America First" dressmaking contest, Chicago, Ill.; correspondent has military escort to French firing line; view of bandit chief whose raid on Columbus, New Mexico, sent American troops over border in pursuit; cartoons by Hy. Dollars and the Woman—(Six Reels)—Lubin-V. L. S. E.—March 20.—Featuring Ethel Clayton and Tom Moore. This story relates how peculiar circumstances lead to misunderstanding between a young husband and wife because of the at first evil-minded but afterwards sympathetic interference of an old lover in their affairs. The latter finally vouches for the noble motives of the wife and all is straightened out.

World

The Struggle — (Five Reels) — Equitable — March 27.—Frank Sheridan, Arthur Ashley and Ethel Gray Terry featured. Marjorie Caldwell rejects the proposal of Carew, surgeon at an army post, and marries Dames, a junior surgeon. Carew and Dames are transferred to Manilla and their ship hits a reef and Marjorie and Carew are washed upon an island, while Dames is on the shore of a leper island. They are brought back to civilization and again Carew asks Marjorie to be his wife, thinking Dames dead. Some time later he learns the whereabouts of Dames and brings him back. He learns of the feeling Carew has for his wife and prepares to assault him, but he sees marks of leprosy on his arms and agonized with fear he jumps overboard and is lost. When Carew returns he tells Marjorie of Dames' death and later she finds true happiness with Carew.

Live News Notes For Theater Men

HERE is an exhibitor who has taken the bull by the horns. He is J. W. Houck, manager of the Twilight theater at Cheney, Washington. He has petitioned the council of this city for right to open his theater on Sundays between two and five o'clock. He points out that he is running only the cleanest of pictures and that young people are better off in his theater than on the streets.

When the Alhambra, offering pictures and vaudeville to the Seatle public, was reopened last week the crowds packed the foyer to the doors. There was no formal opening.

How do you like this line-up?—Metro features on Monday and Tuesday, World features on Wednesday and Thursday, James Q. Clemmer, live Seattle theater manager who is using V. L. S. E. features.

N. H. Cinberg, manager the Magnet theater, Lincoln Nebraska.

Pathe Gold Rooster pictures on Friday and Saturday and Kleine features on Sunday. This is the program used by Manager Johnson of the Alcazar theater in Great Falls, Montana.

John Cort, theater magnate, is willing to subscribe $15,000, it is reported, toward the construction of a new picture playhouse in Helena. The Commercial Club expects that funds for the rest of the cost will be forthcoming in a very short time.

Don't let 'em overflow. Manager F. G. Firschman of Portland, Oregon, was fined $20 last week for allowing the crowd to fill his aisles. As it happened on St. Patrick's day perhaps they might be designated as "Emerald Isles."

"The average motion pictures interfere with the best development of the child," was the question debated by the Patron Teachers' Association of Bandon, Oregon, recently.

Rexburg, Idaho, will have to scrape along in the future with only two picture houses. Manager Foell of the Star has closed the house because of his conclusion that the town is too small for three theaters. He will devote his time to his contracting business.

F. N. Bunn, formerly of Pipestone, Minnesota, is soon to open the Majestic theater in Worthington.

Here's something new. The ushers and doormen of the New Garrick theater in Minneapolis now receive their orders by means of a buzzer system, which eliminates objectionable shouting to each other in the auditorium. In this way the crowds are handled easily and with greater promptness, as the men know all the time just where the vacant seats are located.

Back to the five-cent admission went Manager Richard Wenzel of the Regent theater, Minneapolis, recently, and "he came up smiling." At the end of the first nickel week Mr. Wenzel was well satisfied with the results and states that his price will remain as it is. He shows four and five reels at each performance. His theater is located in the heart of the retail shopping district.

During "Baby Week" in Minneapolis the New Garrick theater celebrated the occasion by acting as the birthplace of four fuzzy kittens, daughters of the house cat. Manager Calvert named them "Marguerite Clark," "Geraldine Farrar," "Mary Pickford" and "Pauline Frederick," but Geraldine and Mary turned out to be gentlemen cats.

Joseph Gottstein, C. H. Schildmiller and Melville Monheimer are the incorporators.

CHICAGO TRADE NEWS

Chicago motion picturedom will shortly be surprised by some great stunts that will be pulled off by the Seaver Amusement Enterprises, which controls the World theater on Randolph street and which is indirectly interested in a number of other motion picture theaters in Peoria and the eastern part of Illinois. Vernon Seaver, the head of this concern, was the first man to operate a real honest to goodness motion picture theater in the loop, the Alcazar. Later he opened and was the first man to have any marked success at the Great Northern Hippodrome, then called the Lyric. Although Mr. Seaver will not divulge the real gist of the stunt, still he intimates that it will be based around that popular comedian, Chaplin.

H. G. Pathe Holah has just returned from a trip to Milwaukee. Mr. Holah has changed the entire personnel of the staff. Mr. Stewart, formerly assistant manager of the Chicago Pathe office, has been placed in charge.

Sam Schiller, the best known feature film man in Chicago, has just produced a new three-reel feature which he expects to market on the state rights basis. It is to be called U. S. War with Mexico. A great lobby has been prepared for this feature and from the number of bookings secured in the Chicago office for this feature, a great success is assured for it.

The Illinois Film Corporation, whose main offices are in Springfield, has opened a branch office in Chicago at the Monadnock building. This office is under the charge of Mr. Brown, the secretary of the concern. Mr. Brown has the supervision of choosing the cast as well as the directors. It is the intention of this concern to market one, two and three-reel pictures based upon educational and sociological plots, as well as a big five and six-reel feature every month. This concern will begin operations within a few weeks.

Morry Salkin, formerly city man for the New Film Corporation, has purchased the Lucille Theater on Chicago avenue and Forty-seventh street. This theater has a seating capacity of about four hundred and is considered one of the cosiest and best money making little theaters in that section. Mr. Salkin has had a wide and varied experience in the motion picture business, and under his capable management there is no doubt that it will prove a huge success.

The latest arrival in the midst of Chicago motion picturedom is none other than the first independent motion picture producer, Sidney M. Golden. Mr. Golden has produced pictures on every program and under a number of brands. One of his notable productions was "Bleeding Hearts," a four-reel master picture for the Universal Company. It has been conceded by critics that this is the greatest picture of its kind ever placed on the market. Mr. Golden will very shortly be with one of the largest producing companies in the west.

The Reliable Feature Film Company of the Schiller building has moved into larger quarters in order to take care of its growing business. The Reliable is under the management of I. Maynard Schwartz and has a number of money makers on its program, among them being the Ordeal and the Christian.

The Harmony Theater on East Forty-third street has been bought by Sidney Stein. Mr. Stein is one of the pioneer theater owners of this town and under his management the Harmony will prove that a lemon with the proper cultivation can be made into a peach.

The Monarch Theater on East Thirty-first street was again opened as a motion picture theater by its former owner, Mr. Zimmerman. Mr. Zimmerman operated this theater, which is an upstairs house, about four years ago, and later leased it out as a dance hall. This theater reopened on Saturday, the 18th.

The Hamburg-Engstrom Company has completed plans for its new plant at 1029 West Adams street. This will be a three-story loft, 135x225, for the exclusive manufacture of lobby displays. The general manager of this concern is Eugene Hamburg, formerly publicity man for the Essanay and United Photoplays Company. This concern has a number of innovations in frames and lobby displays to please the most discriminating.

Mrs. A. Egan Cobb, the cleverest little film saleswoman in motion picturedom, was a visitor in our community. Mrs.

Jack Adolfi, director for the Fox Film Corporation, explaining to Elizabeth Kennedy her part in "A Modern Thelma," in which Vivian Martin is featured. This photograph was made

A peep at Vitagraph's very successful "The Hero of Submarine D," which is founded upon Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "Colton of U. S. N."

Cobb has almost completed arrangements for the release of "The Birth of a Character" and "The Heart of New York" in this territory. These features are marketed under the Claridge Films, Inc., brand, of which Mrs. Cobb is the general manager. Mrs. Cobb has made a visit to exchanges in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago. She has been away from the lights of the Longacre building since the thirteenth and is becoming homesick, so she decided to say au revoir to Chicago on the evening of the 22nd.

The Atlas Educational Film Company, of Mallers building, have just released a one-reel dealing with Uncle Sam's army in action. The marketing plan of this concern is through the churches and schools, but it also no doubt would prove of interest to the general motion picture public.

A. Teitel, who renovates motion picture films, is looking for a downtown location. He was formerly located at 2977 Indiana avenue. It is very likely that his location temporarily will be at the Schillers building.

H. C. Pathe Holah, the pride of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., has a new one out that he springs upon the unsophisticated. It's about a new animal recently captured in the wilds of Cleveland. The name of this animal is the Wow, and it goes something like this—but what's the use, no one can tell it as well ah Holah himself, so ask him to tell it.

The Ernest L. Fantus Company, of 525 South Dearborn street, have just prepared a set of catchy literature and advertising novelties for the motion picture theater. They are very clever and no doubt will prove result-producing wherever they are used.

The Central Film Company, of which Mr. H. A. Spanuth is the general manager, has just bought the current release of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, "One Day," for Illinois and Indiana. It is a picturization of Elinor Glynn's novel of the same name. The leading role is enacted in a very capable manner by Jeanne Iver, under the directorship of Hal Clarendon, formerly with Famous Players and Thanhouser.

D. J. Chatkin of the United Film Service, 17 North Wabash avenue, has recently released a number of money-making productions for the exhibitors of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

"The Combat"

¶ The film manufacturers and the exchangemen depend very largely on the big revenues of the first-run customers—the showmen of the better-class. They rely upon the quick turn-over of the best film productions.

¶ The first-class showman depends almost wholly upon the film manufacturer's best productions. MOTOGRAPHY dominates the field in the exalted position of representative of all that is best in production and presentation.

¶ A selected list of One Thousand Four Hundred Forty-Three of the regular subscribers to MOTOGRAPHY own Seven Thousand Nine Hundred Thirty-six of the motion picture theaters of the United States.

¶ These regular subscribers have been designated by the branch managers of the various film distributors as real showmen and their houses are declared to be the best motion picture theaters in the country.

¶ There is a vast amount of difference between an ordinary exhibitor and a real showman. You belong to one of the two classes—you are one or the other.

¶ MOTOGRAPHY wants to help you attain the showman class. It plans to spend thousands of dollars this year to improve the text of the magazine. It is bound to be of inestimable value to you. We want to swell the ranks of the men who shall rightfully belong to the class who are representing the best films in the best theaters.

Metro Celebrates First Birthday

SUCCESS CROWNS ANNIVERSARY

THIS is a big week with Metro, as the first anniversary of the organization of that sturdy young giant is being celebrated at the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation throughout the United States, in Europe and Australia.

The celebration is a business event made notable by a formal announcement of new and large activities and the setting forth by President Richard A. Rowland of a broad and elastic policy for the new Metro year beginning with the first of April.

The new plans include a rotating star system which has certain elements new to the feature picture business. Metro's first year has been one of remarkable growth from a modest but enthusiastic beginning twelve months ago to a high place among the important factors in the picture business. During the year Metro repeatedly announced and accomplished big things, and the management promises a list of surprises for the coming year.

Metro's first release was "Satan Sanderson," sent forth to the exhibitors on March 29, 1915, following an organization of its manufacturing and selling forces to meet a demand for feature pictures of a high grade that were boxoffice attractions. In a few months the youthful giant was in its full stride, and its success has been one of the sensations of a busy year.

President Rowland, in his announcement on behalf of his associates, says: "Metro started one year ago with everything brand new. We had to organize our manufacturers, our exchanges and our central body all at one time, and we built what we have practically on a general working plan formulated at that time by our group of enthusiastic showmen. I lay special stress upon the fact that they are showmen, and because of this fact they were able to anticipate the public's demand for big feature productions.

"The exchange men knew the wants and the needs of the exhibitors and they have kept in close touch with the central body and the manufacturers. This brought together a winning combination, and as a result, Metro made good from the start. Metro's growth has been a healthy growth along sound and safe lines. As a result, Metro at the end of a year occupies an enviable place in the industry and its pictures are being exhibited throughout the world.

"The credit rests with no one individual, but is the result of the combined efforts of our enthusiastic family of showmen. We have had harmony within and have not had to spend our time and energy in battling with one another.

"In respect to our future, we can promise as many surprises for the next year as during the year just closing, and we can definitely set down these few facts for consideration by those who may be interested:

"Metro will make more feature pictures than before, but it will not arrange to release two features weekly for the sole purpose of being big or of endeavoring to impress anybody. Metro will have a real business reason for presenting its pictures, and will continue to keep its organization so elastic that it will release the type of pictures that the exhibitors require to make their theaters profitable.

"Metro will put out one-reel, two-reel and five-reel productions in keeping with the requirements of its exhibitors. Metro has adopted a rotating star system which assures pictures with stars of real boxoffice drawing power, so that exhibitors will not only have good pictures, but pictures with real selling power to the public.

"In order to round out and complete this plan, Harold Lockwood, May Allison and Viola Dana have just been added to Metro's list of stars. Our regular list of feature personages now includes Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Mme. Petrova, Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Mabel Taliaferro, Lionel Barrymore and Marguerite Snow, Hamilton Revelle, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Mary Miles Minter. These do not include the stars in the special pictures.

"There will be more pictures with these and several other stars yet to be announced, in order that the public may see their favorites with a proper frequency in productions worthy of their importance in the world of pictures.

"The air today is full of rumors of great combinations and it may not be amiss to set forth Metro's position. We have no interest in any of these rumored combinations. Metro is in a position to go in or stay out, as it pleases. We are in the business not only because we find it profitable, but because we like it, and although others may have a desire to sell out, Metro sees no reason, and has no desire, for such a course.

"I can scarcely close without a word of hearty thanks to our many friends for their kindly co-operation, and we hope to merit a continuation of their confidence."

Metro celebrates the reaching of the first milestone by the launching of a country-wide newspaper advertising campaign, which will embrace the smaller cities first and include the larger cities in its later placing of copy. A "family dinner" at the Hotel Astor, a Metro birthday celebration at the New York theater, and other events will mark the beginning of the new year's work. Among the first big things to be done in the new year are the Bushman series of fourteen episodes, which will begin after the completion of Mr. Bushman's new feature picture, and the new Metro Travelogue pictures, which are now nearly ready for their first bow before the public.

Helen Turns Her Ankle

In spite of the fact that the entire mental influence of the whole "Girl and the Game" company was against any bad luck in the making of the thirteenth chapter of the series, and in spite of the fact that not many people now consider thirteen really unlucky, Helen Holmes re-sprained a weak ankle in the episode tagged with that much-abused little number.

The Signal company was working on one of its usual thrillers. All went well until almost the final scene. But when the fair Helen had to leap from the top of a passenger coach to the roof of a swiftly hiking box car, the accident occurred.

"The Sky's the Salary Limit"

NEWS FROM MUTUAL CAMPS

JOHN R. FREULER, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who has been in Chicago conferring with S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, declares "the sky is the limit" for motion picture star salaries. Messrs. Freuler and Hutchinson are arranging for presentation of "Whispering Smith," which is to be made to follow "The Girl and the Game."

The astonishing salary of $670,000 for one year's work to be paid to Charles Chaplin has put new point to the often raised salary question that not a few of the motion picture magnates are beginning to ask themselves and each other. Every important film concern now has at least several stars earning more in a week than the average annual income of the American working man.

"The services of motion picture stars are bought and paid for at prices controlled precisely the same as the services of anybody else. Competitive demand and apparent supply are just as truly the controlling factors in star prices as in the prices of wheat," said President Freuler.

"Of course," continued Mr. Freuler, with just the tinge of a smile, "there are such things as 'corners' in stars as well as in wheat. A star may have a 'natural monopoly' on something that the film maker holds extremely desirable.

"That in a sense is what governed the perhaps unusual figures which we handled in the Chaplin negotiations.

"Mr. Chaplin has been able to get this salary of $670,000 because of our conviction that we could pay him that much and make considerably more. The same considerations govern the salaries of every other star in the business.

"Working clear down to the well known 'final analysis' we have very little to say about what any motion picture star shall get. The public decides that for us. The popularity of the star makes the public demand for that star. The competition between the film producers for the stars when the public demand brings up the salaries in very direct ratio to that public demand.

"It is not at all a flight of imagination to say that it is altogether possible that a few years hence might see some star drawing a couple of million dollars a year for appearing in the films. If any star could give reasonable promise that by paying such a salary a fair profit might be made, the salary would be paid today.

"Expenditures mean absolutely nothing taken alone. It is only their relation to gross income and net revenue that counts.

"The public, stirred up by clever newspaper presentation of interesting figures, gets a very exaggerated notion of for what a motion picture star is paid. The motion picture patron sits in his ten-cent seat and sees Chaplin inhaling spaghetti and says, 'So he gets $670,000 a year for that.' But the patron does not consider that at the very same time perhaps five hundred audiences just as great are seeing Chaplin pictures and paying their dimes for the chance. That is what Chaplin is really paid for—for getting those five hundred or a thousand audiences together at 10 or 25 cents a head.

"The star has to make money, the manufacturer has to make money, the distributor has to make money, the exhibitor has to make money—and the public has to be pleased. If you can please the public enough you can have anything that it is within the power of the public to give. The public is willing and generous.

"Picture stars are worth a just share of the profits that their employers get out of the star's abilities plus his investment. They will always be able to collect that."

Versatile Burr McIntosh in "My Partner"

Burr McIntosh, lecturer, writer, photographer, actor and promoter, who is starring in the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "My Partner," declares that he has decided to give up trying to save his country by lecturing in connection with peace propaganda and that he is going to retire to private life and produce motion pictures in which he shall play the role of western and southern gentlemen.

"My Partner," in which Mr. McIntosh plays the famous old role of "Joe Saunders," shows the actor at his best. One reason is because "Joe Saunders" has been one of his favorite characters for years, and another is that he actually lived and suffered the role while the picture was being made.

"Bartley Campbell, the author of 'My Partner,' was a friend of mine," said Mr. McIntosh. "It was for sentimental reasons partly, then, that I entered into the picturization of the play. His son was quite determined that I should do so. In photoplays I want to produce some highly finished products. The usual hasty production of pictures is responsible for much atrocious stuff that gets on the market."

Helen Holmes in "Whispering Smith"

The Signal Film Company, after its completion of "The Girl and the Game" series, is to produce "Whispering Smith," from the story by Frank H. Spearman. Helen Holmes will be the star and her husband, Director James P. McGowan, will carry the title role. The remainder of the cast will be essentially that seen in "The Girl and the Game" string of railroad thrillers.

Mr. McGowan will direct the filming. He has already purchased a number of fine saddle horses for the quaint production, which is, by the way, another railroad drama, and what Helen Holmes can do to a railroad is too well known to require comment.

BIG EXHIBITORS' JUBILEE

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest Holds Its Annual Exposition First Week in May

The vigorous and progressive section of the country known as "the great Northwest" is going to take off its hat to the motion picture industry the first week in May, when the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest will hold its annual jubilee and exposition in Minneapolis.

Hundreds of theater managers and their families will be in the Mill City on May 2, 3, 4 and 5 and there will be one continual round of entertainment for them from the night of the grand opening to the closing, when the attraction will be a grand ball in the mammoth National Guard armory. Motion pictures will be made at the armory and about the city each day and there will be a big frolic at the armory every night.

This will be the first time that the Northwest has paid tribute to the business that is keeping hundreds of thousands of dollars in circulation there each week and is employing an army of men and women. The exposition will attract hundreds of picture fans from all parts of the twelve Northwest states. More than 100 booths will contain the exhibits of manufacturers and dealers in films from every large center.

Special entertainment is being provided for the public as well as the visiting showmen. Governor Burnquist of Minnesota will set the wheels of the "expo" in motion the opening night. The second night will be featured by a frolic at one of the big Minneapolis theaters. A banquet will be the main attraction the third night and on the closing night some of the world's greatest film actors and actresses will dance on the spacious armory floor.

This will be the public's first opportunity to obtain first-hand information on how the pictures are made and projected on the screen. Pictures will be taken at the armory each day and feature pictures will be exhibited in two model theaters every hour.

The film exposition will offer something entirely new in this part of the country and plans are being made in Minneapolis to welcome one of the largest crowds that city has entertained in many years.

The officers of this live and progressive association of the Northwest are as follows: James Gilosky, president; V. B. Valleau, vice-president; D. W. Chamberlain, secretary; C. E. Van Duzee, treasurer. Executive Committee: D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; Frank E. Nemec, St. Cloud; J. W. Gilosky, St. Paul; H. P. Greene, Minneapolis. Vice Presidents: Jay E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak.; J. M. Freeman, Hillsboro, N. Dak.; J. E. Boyle, Dubuque, Iowa; V. B. Valleau, Albert Lea, Minn.; Mrs. Myrtle Vinton, Bridger, Mont.

APRIL HORSLEY PRODUCTIONS

"The Love Liar" and "The Conscience of John David" Are Two Important Features of the Coming Month

The feature releases for the month of April from the Horsley studios are "The Leopard's Bride" and "The Conscience of John David," scheduled for distribution, respectively, April 13 and April 24. These will appear as Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition.

The former production is of an Indian story by Theodosia Harris. An elaborate production has been given the play, which is enacted by an especially fine cast. The leading roles fall to Margaret Gibson and William Clifford. The other principal parts are interpreted by Brooklyn Keller, Nan Christy, Frederick Montague, Fred Goodwins, Edward Gordon and Paul Machette. The Bostock leopards also play some lively parts.

"The Conscience of John David" marks the reappearance of Crane Wilbur in another play of his own creation. In subject it is psychological. The treatment given the theme takes the story away from beaten paths and makes it of uncommon interest.

By reason of the locale, which for a good part of the play is in fashionable circles, the settings of the picture are pretentious and interesting. Mr. Wilbur plays the title role and is ably supported by Mae Gaston, the attractive new Horsley leading woman; Alice Rinaldo, Frederick Montague, John Oaker, Louis Durham and Franics Raymond. An entire Pullman train will be used in the production.

Now that the Willard-Moran bout is a much discussed subject, the Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for April 7 is very timely. The picture is a comedy of the prize ring and is entitled "The Winning Punch." George Ovey is featured. The principal set-to, involving George Ovey and George George, five feet and six feet three inches, respectively, is the funniest part of the entertainment.

His portrayal of the heavy character in "A Law unto Himself" having been so satisfactory, Louis Durham, the ex-National League pitcher, has been retained by David Horsley to enact similar parts in future productions.

Dorothy Is Eighteen

Dorothy Gish, the buoyant Fine Arts star, is getting old.

On March 18 she celebrated her eighteenth birthday.

She did not, of course, celebrate alone, for a large number of her friends remembered the day and presented the youthful leading lady with all sorts of gifts, some of which are suggested in the picture. When she went to her dressing room the morning of the event,

Here are some of the gifts Dorothy Gish received from her friends on her eighteenth birthday, but she bought an automobile for herself.

Miss Gish found the door locked. Not being able to locate the key or anyone who knew its whereabouts, it is said, she called a prop man to break in the door. Then she found the gifts in the flower-showered dressing room. For her own present Miss Gish purchased a five-passenger Hupmobile.

Speaking of things Fine Arts, "Sold for Marriage" has been completed, with Lillian Gish in the stellar role. The play contains some spectacular storm scenes.

Norma Talmadge is still at work on her third Fine Arts play, a story of the underworld. Ralph Lewis and Eugene Pallette play the important roles with the only girl in the cast.

As It Looks From Here

DAME RUMOR has got herself in bad with most of the film magnates who have paid any attention to her at all. For several weeks this busybody, who has been forcing herself upon the motion picture men ever since the industry was an infant, has been responsible for wild stories regarding mergers which have grown so that now the world is told that nearly all of the important companies in the business soon will be one. And the heads of most of these companies are peeved.

Last week MOTOGRAPHY commented editorially on these stories. New York papers followed suit with the "facts." Then the news services took up the cry with the result that the Chicago Tribune this week published an article on page one under this one-column headline:

YANKEE $40,000,000 MOVIE MERGER TO RULE FILM WORLD

PARAMOUNT, UNIVERSAL, GENERAL, MUTUAL, V. L. S. E. AND METRO IN IT. SIGN MARY PICKFORD.

The day before the newspapers throughout the country had published a story to the effect that Mary Pickford had been signed by Benjamin B. Hampton, vice-president of the American Tobacco Company, representing a group of capitalists who have been interested in motion picture merger plans. The story went on to state that Miss Pickford would finish two pictures she had promised to do for Famous Players. And it also stated that her salary would be $500,000 a year.

In spite of the fact that it is stated on Chicago authority that "little Mary" will be seen hereafter on the V. L. S. E. program, Adolph Zukor declares that his famous star, in his opinion, is still with Famous Players.

What effect this reported affiliation of V. L. S. E. with other organizations will have upon the future of the parent concern, the General, remains to be seen. George Kleine, before returning to New York after a brief stay in Chicago, would neither affirm nor deny the story.

As for Mutual, when John R. Freuler, president of that company, was seen in the Chicago exchange offices where he called for a conference with S. S. Hutchinson, president of American, he did not attempt to conceal his resentment at the publication "of any such story." Mr. Freuler had been in Milwaukee and had but a short time in which to make the "century" for New York, but he took the opportunity to deny emphatically that there was any truth in the story as far as Mutual is concerned.

The recently announced Metro policy and a paragraph from the anniversay story of this concern published in this issue should set the waiting world right on Metro's position. This is the paragraph:

The air today is full of rumors of great combinations and it may not be amiss to set forth Metro's position. We have no interest in any of these rumored combinations. Metro is in a position to go in or stay out, as it pleases. We are in the business not only because we find it profitable, but because we like it, and although others may have a desire to sell out, Metro sees no reason, and has no desire, for such a course.

This is quoted from President Rowland's own statement and should be sufficient comment on the situation.

For several weeks there have been stories to the effect that V. L. S. E., General, Paramount and Metro were to consolidate. For many months there have been rumors that Paramount and Metro were to join forces. It also has been said that General, V. L. S. E., and Paramount were to unite. More recently Wall street let it be known on "authority" that H. E. Aitken was organizing a monster motion picture combination and it was not denied that Triangle was to be the foundation for this move.

AND now upon the heels of Dame Rumor comes this story which is given out as fact.

William Randolph Hearst, for years a leader in the publishing field and more recently an important factor in the film industry, is branching out. His picture organization, the International Film Service, is to operate its own exchanges in all of the large cities of the United States. Branches are being organized and big plans are announced. For example, the next serial which will be released in conjunction with the Hearst newspapers will be put out, it is said, not through the Pathe exchanges as heretofore, but by the International Film Service. This serial, which is to be of fifteen chapters, will be called "The Mysteries of Myra," and was written by Herewood Carrington and Charles Goddard. The Hearst newspapers will publish the novel and the Whartons are producing the pictures. Besides this serial the new exchange organization will book features and shorter films in addition to the news pictures which in the future will be released under the title of the Hearst Newsfilm.

So much for the news and rumors of mergers and changes in organizations. The exhibitor may jump at conclusions but if he would rest easy he will await developments.

WITH the convention of Northwest exhibitors set for the first week in May in Minneapolis, the Twin Cities theater men are kept busy with meetings to arrange for these sessions. Several business meetings have been held recently and the co-operation between the St. Paul and Minneapolis theater men presages a record breaking gathering. At a meeting in the West hotel, Minneapolis, James Gilosky, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, presided and the following men were among the speakers: James E. Keough, D. C. McClellan, Dave Rodgers, W. A. Steffes, Harry Green, Henry P. Greene, Thomas Hamlin, J. B. Reisman, and Charles Ellsworth. Another meeting was held in St. Paul, and this, too, was presided over by President Gilosky. In connection with May convention there will be a trade show in the Kenwood armory, Minneapolis, and it is said space is being snapped up.

CHICAGO is working hard to raise its share of the Actors' Fund money. The publicity committee met for luncheon this week and arranged for a comprehensive campaign.

THE House Committee on Education still has under consideration the Hughes censorship bill, and the present prospect is that it will be some time before the measure is completed for reporting to the House. When the House started to begin its work at 11 o'clock instead of 12 o'clock each day last week, the committee decided to defer consideration of the measure until there was more time. As indicated in Motography, even if reported at the present time, there appears but little prospect of action at this session. The Democrats in caucus last week decided upon a legislative program, and it did not include the consideration of the censorship bill. In view of this, it will take strong pressure to bring the measure forward, as it is conceded that it is one that cannot be disposed of in the House without extended debate.

IT seems fitting that Motography should take this opportunity to wish Metro and all those associated with this young organization many happy returns of the day. President Rowland especially deserves much praise for the successful manner in which he has directed Metro's business.

Richard Travers in McGuirk Play

"Charlie" McGuirk is back with Essanay, this time in the work that pleases him most—photoplay writing. For a long time this young newspaper and magazine writer has been writing motion picture plays, but it has only been recently that he has been devoting all of his time to this work. While he has declined, so far, to join any staff, believing he can do better work and obtain better results by working independently, Essanay seems to be keeping him busy with several stories that are already "on the floor." His next release, "The Lightbearer," will be seen on April 8, with Richard Travers as the star.

Charles J. McGuirk.

When "Mack" decided to return to the production end of motion picture work, Essanay was a natural goal. He had been with this company twice before, working in the advertising department under the direction of Victor Eubank. During this time he had put in much time studying production and this helped him so much in the making of his plays that now he is working with a view to becoming an author-producer. He feels that this is the goal the photoplay writer should seek. Besides this, he is acquainted with all the Essanay producers and stars and seems to know just the sort of plays this company desires.

Previous to photoplay work McGuirk had worked on newspapers in various parts of the country; had roughed it in the west and had studied life from all angles. His specialty in the newspaper field was feature writing, and this naturally led to magazine work. Following considerable experience in the photoplay field, he was called upon to inaugurate a motion picture department for the Chicago Examiner, and this led to his return to Essanay.

"The Lightbearer," the next McGuirk play to appear, is the story of a red-blooded young minister, played by Richard C. Travers, who, when all other methods fail, cleans up a slum district and makes the denizens God-fearing men and women—by his fists. It is a striking picturization of a slum district of a great city, but is lifted out of the sordid by the beautiful love of the young pastor for a girl of the tenements, who has risen pure as a lily from the muck and slime amid the dens of vice. The play is of striking interest, with intense action and dramatic situations.

Star Organizes Bowlers

Lucille Lee Stewart, Vitagraph star, now at the Bay Shore studios of that company, is an unusual athletics enthusiast. Sports of all kinds meet with her approval, but those of the winter season are her favorites. When the weather is too cold to permit of sleigh-riding, skating, tobogganing, and other snowy pastimes, Miss Stewart turns her spare time and energy to bowling.

She has organized a bowling club among her studio mates, and, while not the best bowler on her team, she makes them all work hard to keep up to her. Good-natured rivalry exists, but it's all in the game of getting the best out of life, and keeps the Vitagraphers full of vim. And of this latter quality they have much need for Director Ralph W. Ince is making some wonderful pictures at Bay Shore, and this means hard work as well as fame for all. Among Miss Stewart's bowling recruits are: Mr. and Mrs. John Robertson, Shirley Moore, Jessie Miller, Huntley Gordon, William Lytell, Jr., Director Ince and several non-professional folks who live in the suburb for relaxation and pleasure and find both in athletic sports.

Essanay Studios Can't Burn

With the opening of its new studio, which is now in full running order, Essanay has established a fire-prevention system which makes the danger of fire almost negligible. The system extends not only to its new studio, but throughout its two other studios.

The new studio itself is practicably fireproof, being built entirely of brick and steel and concrete.

A fire squad has been established and thoroughly drilled to answer at the first alarm, in order that action may be taken before it would be possible for a city fire company to begin work. A system of electric bells in all departments will send the alarm to any part of the vast building at a moment's notice.

The building is equipped with up-to-date patent fire extinguishers and chemicals, which are ready for immediate use. Standpipes have also been established throughout all departments, with hundreds of feet of hose, and capable of throwing a stream of more than one hundred feet.

Mass Meeting Against Censorship

On the first Sunday in April there will be held a monster mass meeting of motion picture men at the Pitt theater in Pittsburgh for the purpose of protesting against censorship. This meeting will be the opening gun in a state-wide campaign directed particularly against the censors of Pennsylvania.

The speakers will be J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; W. W. Irwin, of V. L. S. E.; W. Stephen Bush; William A. Johnson, and James E. Hindman, attorney for the campaign committee. The meeting is held under the auspices of the Screen Club of Pittsburgh.

Photoplay Crowns Career

BY TOM BRET

(This remarkable story, written in Mr. Bret's super-fanciful and elaborate style, relates how Fate found fame and fortune for a celebrity whose appearance in "Salvation Joan," a splendid seven-reel Vitagraph feature, is one of the events in recent film history. A beautiful American girl who had won fame on Broadway, Edna May, married an English millionaire and smiled at all offers to return to the drama until the photoplay finally captured her.)

WHEN soft footsteps and hushed voices in a home in Syracuse, N. Y., accompanied the coming to earth of a tiny body that encased the sweet soul of Edna May, Fate smiled kindly upon the scene, for seldom has little life grown to greater success than did this baby.

Edno May in "Salvation Joan."

Lithe as a fawn, the girl grew to her teens, and with the gathering years came a lovely form and magnificent intellect, which were accentuated by a charming character, in which the personality of pure heart and perfect mind shone forth like a jewel in the sun.

What could be more fitting in all the world, then, than that the public should view the treasure?

In due time, in fact, the public claimed her and she went upon the stage, where her appearance before the footlights was instantly the forerunner of a most attractive romance. She at first struggled forth in comparative obscurity, in much the same way that every diamond secures its polish, but finally New York, the gateway to world fame, bid her welcome.

It seems like yesterday, so vividly does the picture of her triumph return. Bills had been pasted all about the great city, announcing the opening of comic opera in the Casino theater, but none contained her name. Programs were handed out as the first nighters came to the initial performance of the "Belle of New York," but for all that they contained, Edna May might never have existed.

It was an audience dressed in all the past grandeur of Gotham. Their ears were attuned for a merry melange of melody and their eyes were focused for the coming spectacle. The orchestra leader, with rapid swing of the baton, had set their nerves atingle with enlivening strains and posed for a moment for the opening chorus as eighteen hundred pleasure seekers leaned forward expectantly. There was a harmonious crash of brass and strings and up went the curtain.

"The Belle of New York" made its opening bid for popularity amid a profusion of girls and gorgeous paraphernalia and a rare recollection of songs and laughter.

And yet, strange to say, among it all one figure shone out above the glamor. She was a girl with a simple dress and a pretty face, the personification of light and grace. Wherever she drifted upon the stage, the eyes of the throng were upon her, and when she sang and spoke, the flash of fame burst asunder with a demonstration so wonderful that it flares brightly even to this very day. Recognition came with such unanimous spontaneity that the little lady was quite as much dazed as the spectators were dazzled, while George W. Lederer, for whom the people found a star, wept with joy. The next day the billboards bore aloft in glaring lines the name of Edna May, the press printed pages about her, and the adoring public sang her praises. And for years the star of her triumph shone on high, until she met Oscar Lewishon, a wealthy gentleman who convinced her that he loved her better than all the world, and she entered into marriage with him with marked reciprocal devotion.

At the time of her wedding, all the famous theatrical producers of the world tried to get her to play in one last new production before she left the stage, but so content was she in the affection of a good husband and a good home that she refused all these offers. The only time since leaving the stage that she appeared in person in public was at a charity benefit in London, at the request of Queen Mary. On this occasion Londoners were so eager to see the celebrated star that the streets on either side of the theater for four blocks were jammed with cabs and automobiles.

The fact, then, that the maid of Syracuse, who has graced the affairs of royalty, has just completed her enactment of the title role of "Salvation Joan," a great big splendid Vitagraph production, is indeed a notable event in filmland, and those who have seen the photoplay will bear witness to the fact that she is as sweet and as captivating as when she first won the hearts of the multitude.

And for the second time in her life, the light of fame which from friendly Fate first shone upon the girl of Syracuse will shine again around the world.

MOTOGRAPHY IN WAR

Yankee Camera Man Capturing War Films with Bulgarian Army Has Thrilling Experiences but Hangs to Motography

The American film war correspondent is playing an important part in the European war, due in the main to the fact that pictures give to this nation's public the most vivid and accurate idea of true conditions in the warring countries and bring them to realize just what war really means to those who participate in it.

A. K. Dawson reading Motography in Siberia.

One of these intrepid Yankee camera men has become a sort of favorite in Germany and Servia. His name is Albert K. Dawson, hailing originally from Stamford, Connecticut, and representing the American Correspondent Film Company.

"And now again," says the Continental Times of Berlin in its issue of February 16, "Mr. Dawson appears in Berlin, tanned and weather beaten, but husky and healthy to look at, having just returned from a very severe and trying journey through the Balkans."

Even under the danger and hardships of campaigns at the front Mr. Dawson keeps in touch with his contemporaries in the film industry. It is needless to say that he manages to have Motography forwarded to him and peruses it with avidity. The pictures he has sent prove that, if it requires any proof.

A. K. Dawson, American Correspondence Film man at the frigid front with the Bulgarian army. He's a "crack shot" and knows what to read, too.

Mr. Dawson tells many weird and thrilling tales of his experiences. He saw Austrian soldiers captured by Servia who had been obliged to live for two months on four loaves of bread each, and in the severe winter weather in the mountains their toes had been completely frozen off. For his own protection while traveling with the Bulgarian army Mr. Dawson wears a Bulgarian peasant costume of sheepskin.

"Big Four" Is Enough

"Come and see 'The Havoc' today. It's a fine new Big Four production featuring," etc.

That's about all an exhibitor in Raton, New Mexico, says in his advertisements. He doesn't tell people where to go to see Big Four features because he says he has 'em educated so they know. When he says, "Big Four," they know it means one particular picture house, and they come.

It is just another example of a "trade name" becoming a household word through thousands spent in national and local advertising and through a product that has a powerful human appeal.

Gaumont Cast Selected

Miss Gertrude McCoy now knows exactly who will act in her support in "The Isle of Love," which is to be filmed at Gaumont's winter studio at Jacksonville, Florida.

Earl O. Schenck will have the role of a young sea captain. Robert Clugston will enact a wealthy man of the world. Iva Shepard will portray the fishing village belle. Charles E. Travis is cast for the part of a theatrical manager. W. J. Butler has a part that smells of the sea, that of the captain of a schooner.

MOTOGRAPHY

Vol. XV CHICAGO, APRIL 8, 1916 No. 15

The Liquor Interests Protest

THE publicity department of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of America is sending broadcast a reprinted editorial from Mida's "Criterion" entitled, "How About the Movies?" The punch of the editorial is in its last paragraph—"What are we going to do about the Movie Menace?" Along with this belligerent challenge the publicity department has the assurance to send a letter declaring, "We are making no war on the moving picture business, and we ask that they make no war on us, but simply give us a square deal." And as an appeal of brotherhood in a common cause, "The same people who are fighting our interests have appeared before legislative bodies in behalf of a censorship such as would destroy the value of many of the best films. These people, too, have made a concerted effort in behalf of the Sunday closing of all moving picture theaters."

We are glad the liquor interests are making no war on our business. The prospect of attack by the widely popular and highly esteemed exponents of booze is quite disconcerting to our feeble industry. We are, in a manner of speaking, frightened by the very thought.

The particular grievance of the liquor interests is that the pictures persist in showing booze as the basis for all the divorces, wife-beating, plundering, burglary, murder, business fraud and other irregularities demanded by a portrayal of real life. Liquor is generally shown as the source of crime. Why? demands the Criterion editor. Why not show women and children the bright side of booze? See how father is jollied up by a few shots of eye-opener! How much better is brother's humor when he contains a number of Scotches!

Possibly there is a tiny touch of truth in the liquor men's plaint. We hesitate to condemn any cause without deep and careful consideration—and this is a question we are not disposed to spend time with in research. Everybody knows that the best of men may take a drink, while some highly efficient crooks are teetotalers.

But that is beside the question. Drink itself may or may not be popular; but the subject of drink is decidedly unpopular, in bad taste, and regarded with general disfavor.

The most powerful and dignified newspapers in the world cannot espouse the liquor cause editorially without losing caste. However large may be the statistics of liquor consumption, however loudly the liquor interests may cry "hypocrites" at their accusers, what remains is fact: The friend of liquor is regarded with suspicion, while the crusades against alcohol, so long as they are conducted with reason and dignity, are popular. We say this merely from observation and without prejudice.

The present method of handling liquor in pictures, the method the Criterion objects to, is the proper one, we are sure. No one is protesting, so far is we know, except the distillers and brewers themselves. The public demands some sort of a goat if it is to be regaled with scenes of violence and treachery, and liquor is convenient and popular as a blame-taker. We cannot see any good reason why it should not be so used. As between the possibility of harming the liquor industry and the greater possibility of making liquor attractive to the younger generation by showing its more cheerful side, commend us by all means to the former danger.

Pictures have enough troubles already in defending their wholly legitimate scenes, without running the risk of public condemnation by making liquor more attractive just to please its purveyors. We will have to take the chances of war with the interests the Criterion represents.

Picture theaters have already done more than any other one thing in the world to cut down individual liquor consumption by offering a wholesome substitute. Because father can take the whole family to a good show for the price of three shots of whiskey, and does just that, the barkeepers are already down on the picture business. When the wholesalers are hit in their tenderest spot by the film director's tendency to show rum as the root of all evil, they naturally cry out. Their protests may be disregarded with advantage—or possibly even used to show the good that pictures do.

The liquor people say by innuendo that the very producers, directors, writers and players who are responsible for these deplorable cruelties to innocent liquor are not averse themselves to taking a drink on the invitation of a friend. That, we are certain, is a calumny. At least we are sure they could not be accused of waiting for such an invitation. And even if it were true (for the sake of argument, of course) that any of them knew something about it, that, it seems to us, does not make them less competent to depict properly the ethics of the situation. The liquor interests are trying to convey the impression that they are being defamed by their own customers. After all, who would be better judges?

The Player

WHO seeks the ways of publication and gains the peoples' admiration; who makes the maker come across, and grows more affluent than the boss? The player. Time was, not long ago, when nobody knew a player. Picture fans identified them as "that Biograph girl" or "the handsome fellow that plays in Vitagraph pictures." Nowadays it is a shrewd producer whose personal profits for the year promise to equal his best star's salary. When it costs more than a million a year for two players, the film producing business is evidently no place for a man of modest resources.

One of the greatest of all directors used to say that special talent at fabulous prices was unnecessary. He could, and did, make stars out of whatever material was at hand. It is one of the jokes of fate that some of those players who get enormous salaries today are his graduates.

When an employer advertises an employee as the best in the world, he has to make good to the employee. Publicity accomplishes many things; but the most curious of its achievements is the way it increases the value of human talent.

A good player unadvertised is worth, we will say for argument, a hundred dollars a week. Advertised until the public demands him, as it demands Ivory soap and Heinz's pickles, he becomes worth, apparently, not merely two or three times, but ten or twenty times as much. It is not reasonable to suppose he is ten or twenty times better than before. Not he, but his publicity is worth the difference. But HE gets it; the press agent and the trade papers and the other publicity agencies who made him great continue to draw their modest rate.

The condition is peculiar; but there is no help for it. The people positively must have Jack Jones and Pulsatilla Brown, because everybody talks about them, and you see their names in all the papers. Even Jack and Pulsatilla themselves are helpless, or practically so. If they are already getting a thousand a week, another producer offers them two thousand and a bungalow, hoping to cash in the advertising their former employers have paid for. Before they are fairly settled and the new publicity campaign about them, bigger than ever, has more than started, producer number three offers them five thousand a week and a steam yacht.

There is no human reason on earth why they should refuse these voluntary tenders of worldly goods.

So the game progresses, and nothing can stop it except a combination of producers—and it would have to be a pretty tight and powerful combination. There is nothing extraordinary or unnatural about the condition. A good prophet might have figured it out when the picture business first started, though we do not remember that any did.

Apparently a handful of stars are destined to grab off more than their share of the revenue derived from film selling. A few more would absorb it all. Whither, as the old-fashioned writers say, are we drifting?

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

EACH week I receive several questions that can be answered best through the correspondence between individuals. For example, the following:

7.—Can you tell me if there are any motion picture theaters for rent?

Undoubtedly there are many houses which can be had. Also there are many opportunities for new theaters in various parts of the country. Perhaps some of my readers would like to get in touch with this prospective buyer. His name and address are on file in the offices of MOTOGRAPHY and will be sent to anyone desirous of offering him a theater.

While on this subject, I would like to state that in nearly every community there is an opportunity for a man desirous of getting into the presentation end of motion pictures. If there is not a suitable house in your town or in your neighborhood, and you are big enough to get into this business properly, there is no reason why you should not be able to find the right backing at home. Your banker is interested in your success, for your good fortune adds to his. But when you do start, start right. The old days are gone in the picture business, and real theaters are being built every day for the presentation of the output of the studios. And if you read between the lines you will know that he is a wise man who builds his house against the coming of even the biggest motion picture spectacles. You know that in the past the smaller exhibitor has had to bow to the big theater owner when the big features have been booked, for the reason that he was not equipped for large orchestras and heavy effects. The builder now is looking ahead and preparing to bid against the theaters for these money-getting spectacles.

8.—What kind of music should I have in a 400-seat house?

This is a difficult question to answer, as I am unable to visit the house and I do not know how much money this exhibitor has to spend. Besides, I am rather an enthusiast on good music, and perhaps my ideas do not jibe with those of other theater men. However, being one of the common folks when it comes down to motion pictures, I believe that if I were to present pictures in a 400-seat house again, I would get the best 'cellist and the best harpist in the town and try and drill into their minds my own ideas on showing photoplays. This sort of music is most pleasing to all classes of theatergoers. The harp and 'cello go well together, and with effects that can be installed for little money, make a combination that does not wear on the nerves of the spectators. I believe that the days of the piano and traps are gone. There are few left and they seem to be driving persons out of the theaters rather than drawing them in. If you prefer the piano, select a concert or baby grand in preference to an upright. I don't need to tell you why. Listen and compare them. Personally, I am fond of an organ, and if you have money enough to spend for the right sort of an instrument, you will have success with this music, granted you can engage a real organist, one who is able to interpret the picture with proper study. It is well to have a singer whenever possible, but be sure you get a singer who can help swell the box office receipts. In my new Rialto theater I am going to give much of my time to the music, but I realize that this theater is on one of the busiest corners in the world, and probably yours isn't.

9.—Why do you prefer girls at the ticket windows rather than experienced box office men?

When I read this question I wondered if it had been prompted by some man replaced by a girl. I wondered, also, if I had been responsible for his removal. I hope not, but if I am guilty, I believe I was justified in my course. All of us love a pretty face. A smiling girl in a box office sends the patron into the theater in good humor, and he is willing and ready to accept your show in the spirit in which you seem to be presenting it. That means much for your success. Send them in smiling and send them home smiling, and they'll send others to your smile show. But don't replace your box office man with a girl until you get one you are sure will smile.

10.—What are your views on censorship? Should the exhibitor be for it?

The exhibitor shouldn't worry his head about censorship. I don't. I am opposed to it, of course, because it is unfair, an insult to the intelligence of the patrons who make your theater possible, and it is unconstitutional. But the exhibitor shouldn't worry about it as far as running his house is concerned. If he has any time to think about censorship, he can aid by going to his congressman and asking his aid in the fight against bills of this kind. But every exhibitor should be his own censor. This has been said many times before, but I want to impress it upon the minds of all my readers. Don't show a picture in your theater that you would not like to have your wife or daughter or mother see, and you won't have to worry about cut-outs ordered by censors. Keep your shows clean. You don't like filth in films any more than you like filth in food. Don't have it. You may have made a little money with smut pictures, but in doing so it's an even bet you injured the good will of your theater. Let's all get together on this. This will be more effective, even, than censorship. If you quit buying smut shows, the studios will stop making them.

11.—Where can I get Shakespeare plays or films of this order so that I may play up my theater as a home for educationals and clean plays for children?

Perhaps some of my readers would like to answer this question. A man who wants to improve his shows and make his house a place for women and children should get all of the assistance we can give him.

FALSTAFF FUN FORCED MARKET

Jolly Novelty Replaces Violence in Film Comedies Profitably and Raises the Class of Photoplay Fun

It is now about a year since Edwin Thanhouser launched one of his new ideas, in the form of the Falstaff brand of comedy. It was at that time announced that these single-reelers would represent the direct line of legitimate comedy, in contrast to the more strenuous action of the comedies in vogue.

It was pointed out by Mr. Thanhouser that attention would be given first to story, as that was the most conspicuous missing element of rapid-fire funny films. To this end, the genius of Lloyd Lonergan, author of the "Million Dollar Mystery," was put into play; also Phil Lonergan, his able younger brother.

Then the "wizard of New Rochelle" signed up Riley Chamberlin to appear in Falstaffs exclusively, and soon after that Louise Emerald Bates, the blonde Ziegfeld beauty, who is now known as "The Falstaff Girl." Claude Cooper, funmaster, was made an acting director, and Walter Hiers, the fat comedian, was engaged to foil Chamberlin. Claude Cooper then reached out for a fun partner, and finally landed Frank E. McNish, the famous old eccentric comedian. While all of this was being done, the Falstaff output was doubled to two a week, and William A. Howell was added to the directing staff.

The original Falstaff director is Arthur Ellery, and his company remained in New Rochelle when it came time to go to Florida. Ellery's grasp of legitimate comedy values makes him easily the most consistent performer in his line. Frances Keyes is his chief comedy character, and her versatility will be amply exhibited in a forthcoming release entitled "Pansy Post. Protean Player."

Under the present release schedule, the two Falstaffs per week have established their following, but it is expected that new additions will be made to the staff which will put them over with still more vim and smash.

PREMO POLICY SUCCESSFUL

Showing of Big Stage Stars in Roles Befitting Them Wins High Favor—"The Woman of It" Next Feature Release

The Premo Film Corporation, whose next production, "The Woman of It," will shortly be released, made a decided stand some months ago, when its first feature, "The Master Hand," appeared.

The organizers of the Premo Film Corporation believed that the features which were in demand today were those which exploited big stage stars in plays that are adaptable to their personalities, at the same time embodying screen requisites.

Following the idea, Nat Goodwin was shown in the very sort of part for which he was best known. Cyril Maude was pictured in a character that outgrumped "Grumpy," Adele Plood, famed as "Everywoman," was shown in the "Devil's Toy" in an allegorical part such as her millions of followers expected of her. Seen with her in that same production was Edwin Stevens in the characterization of "The Devil," for which he was in the past most widely known.

In the current release, "The Woman of It," Ethel Clayton, Carlyle Blackwell, supported by Paul McAllister and other stars, are in parts that are made for them.

The zero weather at Saranac Lake, where some outdoor scenes of "The Woman of It" were taken, proved to be so strenuous that it was necessary for Miss Clayton to return to New York, and the other stars acquired severe doses of chilblains.

W. A. S. Douglas, director of production for Pathe, is at the Balboa studios, Long Beach, Cal.

LEON GAUMONT IN AMERICA

Head of French Firm Now in New York to Meet Officials of Mutual Film Corporation and Visit Plants

Leon Gaumont, head of the great motion picture company which bears his name, Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, is paying his first visit to America since the outbreak of European hostilities. Since his last trip to this country, the Gaumont company has become a manufacturer of Mutual pictures. It is principally to meet President John R. Freuler and other officials of the Mutual Film Corporation that Mr. Gaumont is making his present trip. While here he will also inspect the Gaumont winter studios at Jacksonville, Florida.

"The expansion of the Mutual program has been particularly gratifying to me," says Mr. Gaumont. "In addition to the cordial reception given our three and five-reel productions, we are meeting with gratifying success with our scenic series, 'See America First,' which also has an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer upon the same reel. The Mutual Weekly is also manufactured at the Gaumont laboratories. All these are released through Mutual.

"Conditions have changed materially in the motion picture industry since my last trip to America, and I am glad of the opportunity to study the present transition era at first hand."

Reginald C. Bromhead, who is associated with the English branch of the Gaumont company, in an accounting capacity, has accompanied Leon Gaumont on his present visit to America.

The Bluebird Grows

Booking of the Bluebird features have increased so rapidly in the last month that I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago branch, had to double their space. They now occupy more than half of the third floor at 109 North Dearborn street.

The Bluebird Company of Chicago has added some very valuable salesmen, among whom are I. R. Parnass, recently with the World Film Corporation, C. H. Miller of the Central Film Company, and P. Dunas of the V. L. S. E.

Louise Lovely, in "Tangled Hearts," will start the third Bluebird month with a society problem play in which she is supported by Agnes Vernon and Marjorie Ellison, Lon Chaney, Haywood Mack and Jay Belasco.

Tyrone Power, in "John Needham's Double," makes his debut as a Bluebird star in April. The play was used to first introduce the late E. S. Willard to American theatergoers. The Smalleys directed.

Violet Mersereau joins the Bluebird family to appear as star in the release for April 17—"The Great Experiment."

The feature released April 24 will be "The Gay Lord Waring" with J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular star.

Richard Travers in Vaudeville

Another example of the stage drawing on the screen for talent will be seen when Richard C. Travers, Essanay leading man, appears in vaudeville. He is booked for twenty weeks. His "act" will consist of a monologue concerning pictures. The Palace Theater in Chicago will be the scene of his oratorical debut.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

New York's Newest Theater

WHAT promises to be one of America's most ambitious theaters and one of her superphotoplay houses will open in New York on Saturday, April 15.

It is located on the site of the former Hammerstein theater at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue and it will be known as the Rialto.

This new photoplay house, which will occupy probably the most costly plot of real estate in America devoted to that purpose, is being erected by the Rialto Theater Corporation and expresses in concrete form the life dream of the vice president, secretary and managing director of the company, S. L. Rothapfel, who was probably the first American to recognize that haphazard exhibitions of moving pictures at nominal prices by no means represent the entertainment values of the motion picture. The presence of the fine structure his company is erecting on such a spot at the very "top of the world" is eloquent confirmation of this view, following Rothapfel's demonstrations at the Regent Theater uptown, which first presented pictures with good music and expensive soloists, at the Strand, which he inaugurated, and at the Knickerbocker Theater, of which he is now the director. As conductor of the "First Aid to Theater Men" department, Mr. Rothapfel is well known to MOTOGRAPHY readers.

The Rialto is the first large theater in this country erected exclusively for the presentation of motion pictures. The faith of its founders is eloquently demonstrated by the absence of a stage or any provision that would permit of the installation of one should occasion arise to change the policy of the house. Where the latter would ordinarily be located, there is a permanent decoration in the form of a colonade. Its marble stairs afford an effective spot for soloists, while one of the panels of the colonade contains the picture screen.

Concealed about this permanent decoration is the mechanism of a very large organ. Its size may be estimated from the fact that a single gong contained in its interior is 21 feet high and weighs 800 pounds. This instrument is being built by the Austin Organ Company, of Hartford, Conn. Daily organ recitals are promised and leading organists have been engaged for this purpose.

In another respect the Rialto will outclass any theater in the world. This is in its lighting equipment.

The huge colonnade which replaces the stage at the Rialto Theater, New York, said to be the world's finest motion picture house. This is a permanent decoration with the screen occupying the center panel of the pergola. Photograph taken especially for Motography.

In this particular even such temples of art as the Metropolitan Opera House are outclassed and great amusement institutions like the Hippodrome are discounted. Director Rothapfel entertains secret plans for carrying his lighting effects into the audience, instead of confining them to a stage and in this connection has installed a system with a greater number of dimming units than any other theater in America.

The architect of the Rialto is Thomas W. Lamb. No attempt has been made to achieve a very decorative exterior, and the latter has the good taste of simplicity. The interior combines that quality with chaste beauty. The cost of the enterprise is roughly stated at $1,250,000.

Theater Man Defeats Criticism

HERE is an interesting story of how one courageous exhibitor met the criticism of his house and a certain picture he exhibited there. And when the smoke cleared he had improved the standing of his theater and made money doing it.

Along with several thousand other appreciating exhibitors William J. Goetz, owner and manager of the Alhambra Theater at Middletown, N. J., booked and presented "Inspiration."

"Inspiration," featuring Miss Audrey Munson, famous artist's model, is one of the season's screen successes from the Thanhouser studios. In Middletown it drew about two thousand admissions. However, it also drew down on the picture, on Miss Munson, the Alhambra Theater and Mr. Goetz the extreme disapproval of a number of probably well meaning but certainly misinformed.

Mr. Goetz chose the simple, direct means of vindication. Being very sure of his ground and very sure of the propriety and art merit of "Inspiration" he plunged into print with a challenge and announced that he would put the picture "on trial before the public." He booked "Inspiration" for a return and proceeded to advertise the fact with generous space in the Middletown newspapers.

The next step was to engage Miss Munson to appear in person at the theater, to pose before the audience as she did at the Thanhouser studios when this Mutual Masterpicture was made. This also was announced in clear bold advertisements to the people of Middletown. The newspapers gave the Alhambra the editorial co-operation due in the situation by fairly presenting the facts and the news. Copy prepared for the case by the Mutual publicity service went into both the news columns and the advertising columns of the papers.

Aiming directly at those who had sought to stir up sentiment against the theater and the photoplay, Mr. Goetz issued special invitations to the members of the club particularly active in the matter and gave a special screening of the picture for the city officials.

The judgment of this critical audience vindicated the picture.

Then playing both matinee and evening performances, with Miss Munson appearing on the stage before each showing of the picture, the Alhambra proceeded to take in 3,000 paid admissions. This is considerable business to be done in an eight-hundred seat house in a city of less than thirty thousand population.

Perhaps the most important aspect of the proceedings has been the salutary effect on the agitators of Middletown and the standing of the Alhambra.

Billie Burke Causes Manager's Arrest

In making her film debut at the Columbia Theater in Portland, Oregon, Billie Burke unwittingly caused the arrest of Manager E. T. Myrick on the charge of overcrowding his house.

Mr. Myrick denied the charge and explained that although the incomparable Billie had drawn long lines of folks to the Columbia's doors waiting for seats, everything possible was done to prevent overcrowding. His ushers were instructed to keep the aisles and exits clear and admissions were allowed only at the time of an equal number of exits. These ushers, by the way, are attractive young women, and are unusually efficient.

"Blondes, brunettes and redheads." E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia Theater, Portland, Oregon, designed his ushers' costumes himself.

Manager Myrick runs Triangle plays exclusively.

Rochester Theater Originates Great Plan

John J. Farren, of the Rochester (N. Y.) Theater Company, and manager of the Victoria Theater in that city, sends to the Forum an account of a great publicity plan and one which is bound to make his theater a very vital part of the social life of the city.

It came in answer to the question put to the Keystone Company as to whether it would give the Rochester girl receiving the most votes in a contest a chance to appear in one of the Keystone productions. The Keystone Company not only welcomed the prospect of securing new talent, but goes still further and offers to pay the fare of the lucky winner to one of the Keystone studios, where she will be given a chance to demonstrate her ability in one of the new plays, and will pay her fare home when the trial is over. If she proves that she has ability for the work, the Keystone Company will give her a contract for one year, with a salary befitting the position.

And so now the Victoria contest is on. Girls must apply by letter and photograph for entrance and the number will be limited to fifty. Then comes a week of voting, by ballot in boxes at the theater. Each admission ticket bears the voting coupon and a display of the photographs of the entrants aids the voter who has an eye for beauty.

At the end of the week the ten girls receiving the highest number of votes will continue in the contest until May 8, when the winner will be announced. All the girls entering this race to become a film star must be eighteen years of age. Nearly all of Rochester's feminine beauty is now eagerly interested in the unique affair.

Wants Shakespeare Plays

M. B. Turner of Greenwood, Ark., writes Motography that he is having difficulty locating exchanges which can supply Shakespeare plays and material in the same class. "The demand for this kind of a picture seems very limited in a small town," Mr. Turner writes, "but I am endeavoring to run something of this character for the benefit of the school, in order to try to get the people here to look upon the picture show as an educational institution. I would prefer to have you refer my letter to producers or their exchanges for reply. Material should not be over $1 per reel."

Treat Public Very Courteously

By Frank Stehle

Manager Bijou Theater, Altoona, Pa.

I do not believe in changing film service frequently. When we get a service that is satisfactory and the exchange men treat us fairly, we stick with them. We don't have time to be continually complaining to the exchange, as their men know how to do business with the right kind of people.

We broke into the picture business about four years ago. Our policies have always been to treat the public very courteously and with the best of good breeding, give them a good show and a clean house. We don't have time to worry about what the other fellow is doing, and by letting our competitors go their way we have enjoyed a prosperous business. Our house seats but 350 people, but is located on the main business street of Altoona.

"Dollars and the Woman" Barred

PARTS OF "NE'ER-DO-WELL" MAY BE ENACTED

THE astute Pennsylvania Board of Censors has barred "Dollars and the Woman."

And V-L-S-E has already carried the matter up into the courts. That company, through William M. Patch, manager-director of the Pitt Theater of Pittsburgh, is also planning a campaign to prevent "The Ne'er-Do-Well" from meeting a similar censorial fate.

"Dollars and the Woman" is a six-reel Lubin feature released on March 20 through V-L-S-E. It is said the play is exceptional in its complete absence of any suggestion other than that which is elevating and in accord with the conduct of representative good men and women.

When asked for the reasons through which they reached their decision to barr the film from exhibition in Pennsylvania the board made no response. As it is the custom with that as well as other boards to designate certain portions of the film as being unfit for exhibition, it is supposed in this instance that the inquisitors considered the whole production unworthy, a conclusion which is difficult to understand from the reports of what the picture is.

As stated by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V-L-S-E, censorship boards are in many cases becoming the unconscious instruments of their own destruction. The case in question is a good example of this.

In the past, says Mr. Irwin, Pennsylvania's censors have distinguished themselves as worthy leaders in the army of misguided intolerants. In the case of "Dollars and the Woman," however, they appear to have fairly outdone all their previous efforts in this direction, and touched the very climax of absurdity.

"It is conceivable that prurient minds may quickly seize upon the least hint of passionate suggestion, be it ever so delicately conveyed by printed page or picture, and on this sub-structure of foreshadowed evil build up a temple for the worship of vice. But of what calibre must the mind be that finds in perfectly normal views of every day life depicting the domestic struggles and joys of an every day couple, untarnished by one touch of suggestive coloring, a dramatic vehicle to be condemned from a moral standpoint? It would be interesting to know just what the censor critics discovered in this photoplay to awaken their destructive instincts."

The newspaper reviewers who attended the private showing of "Dollars and the Woman," had no objection to register against the film. On the contrary, the consensus of opinion was that the picture was remarkable for its freedom from sensationalism, sensual suggestion or scenes of physical violence, and yet possessed the power of enlisting the sympathy of the spectators by virtue of its cleverly shaded touches of pathos and gripping appeal to the better side of human nature.

It is a story without a villain, the character who might be expected to occupy that position showing, in common with the other principals, real nobility. These principals are Dan Hilyer, a young inventor, his wife, Madge and Arthur Crewe, wealthy man and former rival, as the leading characters. Hilyer falling into financial difficulties, goes to California in the endeavor to dispose of the rights of a new invention to a company on the coast. During his absence Madge tastes the bitterness of poverty. A child is born, and Crewe assists her by paying hospital expenses. Hilyer returns with plenty of funds, to find that her painful experiences owing to lack of money have exercised a miserly influence on Madge's mind. Trouble between the pair results, which is further intensified by Hilyer's discovery of Crewe's kindness to Madge during his absence, and the husband's misinterpretation of his former rival's motives. Hilyer accuses his wife of unfaithfulness, but Crewe interposes, and convinces him that she is a magnificent woman, worthy of his fullest trust.

May Enact Parts of "Ne'er-Do-Well"

William M. Patch, manager-director of the Pitt Theater of Pittsburg, who recently created a sensation in motion picture circles by his evasion of the decree of the Pennsylvania censors which ordered the elimination of the most thrilling scene in the "Battle Cry of Peace"—the shooting of two daughters by a mother rather than allow them to fall into the hands of the drunken enemy—by presenting the scene with living characters, is continuing his battle against the tyranny of the board.

Mr. Patch has warned the censors of what they may expect if they attempt to alter "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which is the next of the V-L-S-E subjects, which Mr. Patch will present following the run of "The Battle Cry of Peace."

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" was exhibited for the first time in public at the Rialto Theater, Brooklyn, last week and proved to be a drawing card of unusual power. It was favorably criticised by the newspaper reviewers and praised by all who saw it. Up to the present time, no objections on moral or aesthetic grounds have been voiced against the feature in any quarter. But Mr. Patch is aware of the fact that because a picture has been accorded a clean bill of health in other sections is no indicator that it will meet the same treatment at the hands of the Pennsylvania censors.

"Where these people are concerned it is always best to be ready for the worst," says Mr. Patch. "So in case they should establish a still greater record for inefficiency and prudery than they have gained in the past, I will handle 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' as I did 'The Battle Cry'—by engaging talent to act any scenes that might chance to be eliminated. I know just where to obtain people capable of filling the necessary roles, and if their services are required they will be on the spot ready to develop the action as scheduled in the scenario."

Big Four's April Releases

There are some unique features scheduled in the list of V. L. S. E. releases for the coming month.

Of particular interest to exhibitors is "Salvation Joan," the vehicle chosen by Edna May, "The Belle of New York," for her farewell appearance before the public. The story of Miss May's romantic career is told in another part of this issue. The Lubin Company also offers a drama of unusual interest in April, starring Nance O'Neil in "The Fires of St. John," adapted from Herman Sudermann's work by Alfred Hickman. Selig's contribution will be "The Cycle of Fate," with Bessie Eyton in the principal role.

"Salvation Joan," to appear April 10, is a seven-reel picture starring Miss May and will bring back memories to thousands of the "Belle of New York," in which Miss May, as the winsome Salvation Army lass, won international fame.

The story is in itself of sufficient strength to insure the picture's success. It also affords Miss May an opportunity to furnish a delicately shaded comparison between the luxurious, butterfly life of a society girl, and the stern career which awaits her, when joining the ranks of the Salvation Army, she plunges into the stormy current of the underworld.

The preceding week, Vitagraph will present "The Vital Question," directed by S. Rankin Drew. Virginia Pearson, Charles Kent and Anders Randolf supply the leading roles in this picture. The feature propounds for solution, the problem of a woman's right to realize her dreams and visions, to live as she deems it best, and the bestowal of love according to the dictates of her heart.

Nance O'Neil, as Marika in "The Fires of St. John," released April 10, is cast for a part particularly well suited to the talents of this famous actress. The scene of the play is laid in Pennsylvania, some twenty-five years ago, and introduces Vogel, a prosperous farmer, to whose keeping is entrusted George, the only son, then a four year old child, of his dead brother.

A drama of startling realism is presented by the Selig Company in another April 3 release. It is entitled "The Cycle of Fate," and features Bessie Eyton, with Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman as co-stars. Marshal Neilan, who wrote and directed the scenario, also plays an important role in the feature.

On April 24 the Vitagraph presents Dorothy Kelly in "The Law Decides," with a cast which includes Harry Morey, Leah Baird, and Bobby Connelly. The crux of the plot rests on the question of whether a man's wife or mother possesses the strongest claim to his affections.

New V. L. S. E. Men

Gordon Laurence, formerly manager of publicity in the V-L-S-E'-S Cleveland office, has moved to the Chicago office, where he will conduct a press campaign covering the Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Chicago divisions.

S. D. Parmelee is the latest recruit enlisted in the Big Four's Cleveland sales brigade. Mr. Parmelee comes to the V-L-S-E from the Pathe Company in that city. The portion of Indiana covered by the Chicago branch office will hereafter be handled by R. S. Shrader, who was transferred from Cleveland, where he worked under the Abel administration. A. G. Gallos, Mr. Shrader's predecessor in office, has been assigned to Chicago's central district. The central section was previously covered by H. O'Brien, who is no longer connected with the V-L-S-E.

A change of territories has been negotiated by L. C. Hartsock and M. S. McCaffrey, the former assuming charge of Iowa, while the latter will travel through Northwestern Illinois.

S. E. Bestor, a recent Chicago office acquisition, will attend to the sales wants of the Windy City's southern district. The former incumbent, Edward Cohen, has been transferred to the Michigan block. The western and northern districts of Chicago are in the hands of I. Natkin and Charles Filkins, in the order named. F. W. Redfield still has charge of Wisconsin.

W. B. Nelson has been added to the sales force of the Dallas office.

New Fire Preventer

A new safety device has recently been introduced on the market by a concern known as the Loney Safety System, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street, New York. This invention practically eliminates the danger from film fires in projection machines.

It is an electrical apparatus which can be fitted to any make or style of machine. By a system of magnets this device prevents fire which might be caused by the heat from the concentrated arc light from reaching the film magazines. Automatically the arc is extinguished, the auditorium lights are turned on, and the slides in the booth are lowered. Thus not more than two feet of the film is destroyed, and, what is more importnat, the audience is spared the apprehension which would follow knowledge of the accident.

The construction of this device is simple and has been proved effective. A trigger-like contrivance controls knives fitted into the metal housings attached to the feeding and receiving magazines. This trigger is held in place by a string highly sensitive to heat. The moment the film becomes ignited, the trigger is released and the action detailed above takes place.

The Loney Safety System has been tested by the Board of Electrical Underwriters of New York and has been pronounced highly satisfactory.

George Kleine Men Meet

The western representatives of the George Kleine organization assembled in convention in the Kleine Chicago offices, 166 North State street, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, March 25, 26 and 27, for the purpose of considering the forthcoming motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke, the international stage favorite, is being starred. Mr. Kleine himself presided over the sessions and outlined in detail for his hearers the work that has already been done on the Rupert Hughes picture novel, explaining the lavish expenditures that have already been made and pointing out that it is his ambition to make "Gloria's Romance" the greatest production that the public has ever seen—bar none.

The various managers reported intense interest among exhibitors over the forthcoming Billie Burke picture, shown by hundreds of applications for bookings that have been received, despite the fact that, at the time the managers departed from their home offices, the title and release date of the picture—May 22—was unknown. All the largest and best theaters the country over are sure to vie with one another for "first run" showings of the picture, now that a definite title and release date have been decided upon, and May 22 is sure to be a banner day for picture fans everywhere.

After several of the early chapters of the forthcoming novel had been screened in the Kleine projection rooms, the managers were unanimous in their opinion that a new high record in motion picture novels has been attained.

Films Are Best Teachers

BY WILLIAM N. SELIG

President of the Selig Polyscope Company.

THE educational side of cinematography is assuming great importance and we are devoting a great deal of attention to the educational quality of the films.

I believe that sooner or later there will be motion picture machines installed in every school building in this country, and why not? Can the boards of education in this enlightened nation afford to be long without this equipment? Seemingly not, for already many of our foremost institutions of learning are equipped with motion picture apparatus which are proving vital aids in teaching.

I anticipate motion picture courses of study before so very long. Then it will be a pleasure instead of a duty for the small boy to go to school. Botany, natural history, geography, history, literature and other studies can, with proper films, be taught more thoroughly by motion pictures than by books. In time, I firmly believe, the camera will be the essential for these and other study courses, with the dry text books considered as minor adjuncts.

The history of the United States can be taught with films correctly picturizing the lives of our great men, and the epochs of our history.

The habits of wild animals, their habitats, and their histories can also be convincingly studied on the screen as can the growth of plants and flowers.

There are unusual opportunities for teaching United States history. These days, the producer takes every care to see that his atmosphere is historically correct. In "The Crisis," for example, we spent weeks studying proper costuming of the early sixties. We sent to Washington, D. C., for copies of newspapers published in the late fifties and early sixties so that when it was necessary to show a newspaper on the screen, that newspaper would be a publication really published at the time of the action of the story. We searched the city of Chicago for the old-fashioned glass globes appropriate to fifty years ago and finally we found just seven of these old-time lighting fixtures in the second largest city in the United States. These are just small items but they go to prove the pains taken by the motion picture manufacturer and producer to make pictures correct to the minutest detail.

We were not satisfied with preparing artificial sets in imitation of historical scenes called for in the Churchill historical novel. A special company of players were sent to St. Louis, where the old arsenal, the old slave market, and the old southern homes, mentioned in "The Crisis" were filmed. We also will send a company of players to Vicksburg, Mississippi, to film battle scenes on historic ground.

Productions carrying a good story but nevertheless inculcating historical lessons, thus teaching love of country, are to become more numerous, in my estimation. These productions are worthy of presentation in all institutions of learning.

"Cleanliness is next to Godliness." The old adage is applicable to motion pictures. Productions must be clean and should carry good moral lessons. In my estimation the greatest menace to the future of the motion picture art today is not the censor, nor the mediocre pictureplay, but the so-called "daring" picture. Manufacturers who insist on releasing unclean or "startling and daring" productions are not only a menace to the motion picture art but they are menacing to civic honesty and to morality.

Let us strive for clean, worthy pictures; let us pay more attention to the educational side of the work, and motion pictures will become more and more artistic and the business more sound.

Sherlock Holmes Solves Mystery

The world's greatest detective has solved "The Strange Case of Mary Page," Essanay's solution-defying mystery in fifteen episodes has puzzled many since its inception and now in the later parts its followers are no nearer the answer. So the most famous sleuth was called in and with customary dispatch he—Sherlock Holmes—found the key.

William Gillette, who is filming "Sherlock Holmes" in seven reels at the Essanay studio, was asked lightly if he could solve "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

"I have been asked, Watson," he said, "to find the answer to this mystery. A 'strange case' truly describes it."

"Yes, my dear Holmes, quite puzzling."

Whereupon, Sherlock Holmes read the story of the photoplay and saw several of the late episodes. An evening of study and he had the solution.

"Right!" agreed Henry B. Walthall, Edna Mayo and Director Hayden, the only persons other than the author who know the answer.

It is odd to note that Essanay gets scores of letters daily from followers of the play with suggested answers, but that Mr. Gillette has furnished the only correct solution.

"The Salamander" at Sing Sing

Under the auspices of the Welfare League, and by the courtesy of B. S. Moss, the big five-reel "The Salamander" was shown at Sing Sing prison last Sunday, and the inmates took to the treat most enthusiastically.

Bedecked in rich and variegated posters of "The Salamander" the front of the chapel took on the appearance of a picture house, and in this connection is related an amusing incident. One of the inmates complained that "The Salamander" was a good picture, but it didn't show everything that was on the posters; namely, "that big animal which crawled through a fire scene."

Lewis Lubin Director

Within the past twelvemonth Edgar Lewis, the powerful photodrama director now with the Lubin company, has produced "The Littlest Rebel," "Northern Lights," "Captain Swift," "The Thief," "Samson," "A Gilded Fool," "The Plunderer," "The Nigger," "The Bondman," "The Great Divide" and "Souls in Bondage." This tremendous year's work gives an idea of the working methods of this unusual director.

Mr. Lewis is now producing special features for the Lubin company. He is at present hard at work in the oil fields of West Virginia, with Miss Nance O'Neil and a large company. They are filming there some of the scenes of "The Toilers," a coming V-L-S-E production.

Mr. Lewis' life has been unique and full of adventure. He was shanghaied to England, according to the story, and there, though but a small boy, he gained experience in a great many lines of theatrical work. He rose from a circus chore-boy to a theatrical director.

He started his picture career with the Solax company and later directed for Reliance and Fox, for whom were made many of the productions mentioned in the first paragraph. Mr. Lewis is now under a long-time contract with the "L" in V-L-S-E.

Pittsburgh in War on Censors

A convention to be held at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, April 2, will be a feature of the present campaign waged by Pittsburgh motion picture men against censorship. James McAleer heads the managing committee and among those present will be Joseph W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., Inc., and many western photoplay producers. The convention is objecting particularly to the censorship which depends on the personal likes and dislikes of a few men and women appointed on local boards. Theater men point out the unfairness of allowing the personal opinion of these few to injure the productions in which so much money has been invested.

Lorimore New Colonial Head

The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation is to be congratulated on having secured the services of Alec Lorimore as president. Mr. Lorimore says he can put this company on its feet again. The Colonial sank in two years from a million dollar corporation to an almost bankrupt one but the new president hopes to be able to stem the adverse tide. He firmly believes that the secret of success is constancy and diligence of purpose, and follows this motto rigidly in his daily work.

Lobby Music for Crowds

Part of the music program of the Colonial theater, Chicago, at a recent performance, was given in the lobby of the theater. The reason for this unusual occurrence was that there were so many people waiting to get into the house to see W. S. Hart in "The Aryan," and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Habit of Happiness," that the management sent its soloists to entertain them while they waited.

Alcazar Books "Unwritten Law"

Messrs. Belasco and Davis have booked Edwin Milton Royle's "The Unwritten Law," produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation, for the Alcazar theater, San Francisco, at advanced prices, during the week beginning April 17. For this time the management had to cancel the booking for a stage attraction. Arrangements are being made to augment the orchestra and put out special advertising.

Four New Triangle Plays

The studios at the Fine Arts corner of Triangle are at work preparing four new productions, each with a very popular personage as its shining light.

Mae Marsh and Robert Harron are busy in the concluding scenes of "The Little Apache." When this is completed they will continue in a new co-starring vehicle under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

Lillian Gish who has completed her performance in "Sold for Marriage," will be directed in her next play by Allan Dwan.

Douglas Fairbanks is at work on a new play with Director William Christy Cabanne.

And Norma Talmadge and the popular Fine Arts children will soon complete a new drama by Bernard McConville under the tutelage of co-directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

Important Issue Decided

Ruling that the introduction of motion pictures into the theatrical field had so revolutionized the producing world as to place the films on an entirely new basis, Supreme Court Justice Cohalan has denied the application of Robert Walton Goelet, owner of the Knickerbocker Theater, for an injunction restraining the Triangle Film Company from presenting a continuous motion picture show at his theater at admission prices of 25 and 50 cents. The Triangle Company is a sub-lessee of the theater.

As a result of the decision, until the action for a permanent injunction comes to trial, the Triangle Company cannot be restrained from continuing motion pictures at the Knickerbocker under the present scale of admission prices.

Theater Pass Sold

At the Elks' annual carnival in Danville, Va., an interesting contest was held among motion picture exhibitors, in that each of the exhibitors from that town presented to the Elks a season pass to the organization, to be auctioned off. It was one of the livest events of the carnival.

George M. Mann, manager of the Paramount Exchange at Washington, had the honor of having his pass bring the highest bid, for his was bid to $5, while the others brought $2.05, $2.20 and $2.30, respectively. The Paramount pass was for the Paramount theater, running exclusively Paramount productions.

May Release Announced

"At Piney Ridge" will come out on the V-L-S-E program in May from the Selig studios.

This feature is founded on the stage production of the same name and stars Fritzi Brunette and Al. W. Filson. The cast also includes Lwo Pierson, Edward J. Piel, Frank Clark, Vivian Reed and Lillian Hayward.

The story unthreads itself from among the Blue Ridge mountains. It was prepared from the stage version by Robert Daly.

L. J. Bamberger, manager of the V. L. S. E. Sales Promotion Department, has left for his home in Indianapolis, where he will undergo an operation. His condition, although necessitating immediate surgical attention, is said not to be serious, and his speedy recovery and early return to work is expected.

Uniform Copyright Laws Urged

ISSUE BEFORE COMMISSION

AMONG other questions affecting Pan-America, which the International High Commission, composed of representatives of the governments of the United States and the South American nations, will take up when that body meets at Buenos Aires, April 3 to 15, will be the problem of uniform copyright laws for literary and artistic productions, in which motion pictures are included.

Paul H. Cromelin, of the Cosmofotofilm Company, has prepared for the commission a statement on behalf of the industry respecting this question and it has been ordered by the Motion Picture Board of Trade at whose request Mr. Cromelin prepared the statement. W. G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury, is chairman of the United States section of the commission which sailed on March 8 on the U. S. S. Tennessee for Buenos Aires.

The United States representatives requested that Mr. Cromelin's statement be printed, and will bring it before the convention at Buenos Aires. The principal matter to be discussed with regard to copyright is the desirability of reaffirming the principles embodied in the Fourth International American Conference Convention on Literary and Artistic Copyright, signed at Buenos Aires on August 11, 1910.

The reaffirmation of these principles is urged by Mr. Cromelin, and in particular the ratification as soon as possible of the convention of 1910 by those South American governments which have not yet ratified it. After detailing the extraordinary growth of the motion picture industry in the United States, Mr. Cromelin points out that, as relations with our Pan-American neighbors develop, the South American market will be more and more cultivated by North American manufacturers, and that this would undoubtedly require "that the best in literature and story in those respective countries be eventually produced in the form of motion pictures."

In this connection, Mr. Cromelin urges that certain amendments to the convention of 1910 are highly desirable, so far as the picture industry is concerned.

The chief of these has to do with the question of copyright registration, which, because of its lack of uniformity, operates as a menace to the manufacturer. That is, a manufacturer may make a picture of a story, which originated in one of the countries signatory to the convention of 1910. Under the terms of Article 3 of that convention:

"The acknowledgment of a copyright obtained in one state, in conformity with its laws, shall produce its effects of full right in the other states without the necessity of complying with any other formality, provided always there shall appear in the work a statement that indicates the reservation of the property right."

This means that citizens of those countries, without having to register in the United States, are entitled to all the benefits of our copyright law; and the manufacturer may be innocently infringing a copyright of a work by a South American, and be liable to damages therefor.

There is no way for a manufacturer to tell from what may be a typewritten scenario of an unlawfully typed copy of the work offered him that it is a work in which copyright subsists.

Quoting Section 25 of the Copyright Law of the United States regarding damages recoverable in the case of an innocent infringement, Mr. Cromelin remarks that "even with the limitations made by our law the consequences of an infringement may be very, very serious.

"It is not this alone, however, but the remedies which the copyright owner may have in damages when the motion picture is brought into his own country or into the other countries of the Union, which makes it serious for the manufacturer or his assignee.

"In many of these countries the damages assessed are not limited and although a manufacturer was quite innocent of the fact that he was using another person's copyrighted property, he would be compelled to pay dearly for it and in addition have his property confiscated.

"We believe the convention should be amended in a way to provide for a system of registration and an exchange by the various nations adhering to the Pan-American convention from time to time of a complete list of copyright registrations filed with them, these to be published in a manner similar to that followed by the Register of Copyrights at Washington under the name of 'Copyright Entry Books.'"

Mr. Cromelin then endorses an amendment to Article 3 of the convention, as proposed by the Victor Talking Machine Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and the Columbia Graphophone Company.

The amendment states: "And provided that no copyright owner shall be entitled to enforce any claim for infringement of his copyrighted work in a signatory state occurring prior to the filing of an entry of such copyright in the copyright office of such signatory state by the copyright office of the signatory state in which such copyright was originally granted, and the copyright office of each signatory state shall be required to forward to the copyright offices of each of the other signatory states, each month a complete list of copyright registrations effected during the preceding month."

This amendment is believed to be necessary "in order to avoid international legal difficulties, involving, necessarily, great expense and possible damages."

"In conclusion," says Mr. Cromelin's statement, "we commend to your serious consideration the clauses in the United States Copyright Law as amended by Act of August 24, 1912, relating to motion pictures.

"We believe that if there is uncertainty on the part of the representatives of other Pan-American countries as to the kind of internal legislation they should originate in their respective countries covering the copyrighting of motion pictures; they might well make use of the experience we have gained and adopt and make a part of their copyright law the good feature of our law to the extent this could possibly be done. This would be a strong move in the direction of uniformity of laws respecting an important division of the law relating to copyright and would of necessity in the last analysis prove of benefit to all concerned."

PICTOGRAPHS ARE POPULAR

Paramount Receives Many Letters of Favorable Comment on Visualization Idea from All Over Country

The Paramount Pictures Corporation is receiving a great number of favorable comments upon the latest idea in the motion picture industry—that of visualizing thought upon the screen.

For months before there was an attempt to take the thoughts of eminent physicians, psychologists and great men of the country, and have them talk on vital subjects of the day, and then leave their ideas visualized on the screen, through the medium of Paramount Pictographs, men standing at the very top of the industry said, "It can't be done," and the idea was all wrong.

Determined to do something new, and to bring the motion picture industry one big step ahead, particularly along lines of education, and to instruct by means of a medium that was pleasing, based upon the theory on which the most successful kindergartens in the world have been conducted, President William W. Hodkinson, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, decided that in spite of skeptics, to further this movement.

Not only Mr. Hodkinson, but his entire pictograph organization are particularly happy these days. From every quarter of the country, it is said, there come nothing but favorable remarks.

HORKHEIMER IN DANGER

President and General Manager of Balboa Feature Films Has Narrow Escape While Directing Aeroplane Flight

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa feature films, nearly lost his head recently—really, not figuratively.

Here's how the near-inquisition occurred:

It was during an aerial race between Aviators Christoferson and Daugherty at Long Beach, California. Mr. Horkheimer was directing the flight.

A Balboa truck, with a motion picture camera mounted on it, stood a short distance in front of the artificial birds. On it were Mr. Horkheimer, Roland Groom, the cameraman, and the chauffeur. When the gun announced that the race was on, the truck shot out at a forty-mile-an-hour clip. On came the fliers at sixty.

For some reason, Christoferson's forward planes did not work properly and his machine failed to rise as rapidly as it should have done. Overtaking the truck in a few seconds, the birdman sailed over it, not a foot above the top of the camera. Although the men ducked, they did not believe at the moment that it would save them.

The beach was lined with spectators. All held their breath, for it looked as if a tragedy was certain to be enacted. Even while he bent low, the cameraman did not neglect to "grind," thereby obtaining one of the most realistic close-ups of an aeroplane flight ever recorded on celluloid. It will be included in a forthcoming Balboa release and, as such, give those "out in front" the same sort of a thrill which went through Mr. Horkheimer and his assistants when they thought their time had come.

Balboa's next continued film story will star Jackie Saunders. This will be her initial appearance in a serial, although she has been featured in more than fifty multiple reelers. Work on the new production will begin immediately. A special company has been sent west to support Miss Saunders.

READY FOR BIG TRADE SHOW

Atlanta Enthusiastic Over Prospect of Seeing and Meeting Screen Stars at Affair Late This Month

Those in charge of the affair have announced that everything is in readiness for the Southern Motion Picture Trades Exposition, which is to be held at Atlanta, Ga., March 27, 28, 29.

Virtually every film and accessory concern in the country will be represented. It will be one of the most pretentious conventions of the year.

The promoters propose to make the grand ball, with which the exposition will be closed on Saturday, March 29, the most lavish occasion of its kind ever staged outside the bigger film centers of the north and east.

Many of the screen's best known artists will dance with guests, and the grand march will be led by picture stars of national repute. All business affairs will have been wound up and set aside and the night will be given over to the characteristic merry-making that has distinguished film balls of the northern cities.

A group of Atlanta picture men are behind the movement. Picture men throughout the south are giving them hearty co-operation and the event will bring hundreds of out-of-town motion picture enthusiasts and tradesmen.

The mysteries of the film industry will be exploited to the public. There will be displays showing the interesting secrets of the laboratory, where the raw film is transformed from yellow, empty strips, into ribbons of silent drama. The myriad "tricks of the trade," the mysteries of "stunt" photography, will be exposed for the delectation of an uninitiated public.

The executive department of the affair has been assured of the appearance of a number of screen stars.

Neuralgia played a part in "The Crisis" last week. The production, being made at the Selig Chicago studios, was held up for a day when Thomas Santschi was suffering from the pangs of this well known face tormentor.

$150,000 Addition to Lasky Studios

FINE LABORATORY NEARLY READY

RAPIDLY nearing completion at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, California, is a steel and concrete building costing $150,000, which will contain one of the most modern and best equipped film laboratories in the country, and a theater for private exhibitions.

Designed by Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Lasky company, with the assistance of Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, the laboratory when finished within the next few weeks will represent the latest word in studio construction of this sort. A special representative of the Eastman Kodak Company made the trip from Rochester, N. Y., to the coast to assist in the arrangement of the machinery and give his advice as to the plan of lay-out.

It is said that when in operation the laboratory will have a capacity for turning out 500,000 feet of perfect film every week.

A standardization unlike, perhaps, that in force in any other film studio, will go into effect with the opening of the new building, which is only one of a group that has grown to a good sized colony. With the new arrangement, every employee upon entering the building, goes into a large locker room and there changes to his or her laboratory costume of white, with white shoes and white gloves. The building is so planned that from the negative developing room to the shipping room the film never doubles back on its course, but moves systematically forward. As fast as the work of one department is finished the film is sent directly to the next stage of its operation.

For the testing of each positive before it is shipped to the distributing company, a number of small projecting machines have been installed, presided over by a competent inspector. In the basement of the building the huge filtering plants are located. In the drying rooms the filtered air changes every minute and a half, while in the remainder of the building washed and cleaned air is changed every three minutes. The machinery specially installed was made for the Lasky company.

Although Blanche Sweet is the star of the Lasky production, "The Sowers," based on Henry Seton Merriman's novel of the same name, announcement of the cast that is to appear gives to the feature play practically an "all star" cast. In leading roles in her support are Theodore Roberts, himself a Lasky star in many productions, and Thomas Meighan, who has come rapidly to the front as one of the most popular leading men on the screen. He is soon to be featured in a picture.

The others who have leading parts in the production, which is a most elaborate undertaking on the subject of the Russian peasants' fight for political and industrial freedom, are Ernest Joy, who is remembered for his good work in Miss Sweet's last photoplay, "The Black List," Dick Le Strange, Miss Camille Astor and Horace B. Carpenter.

The association of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and David Belasco in the presentation on the screen of Belasco productions has been in the past two years one of the most interesting movements in the history of the photodrama. Announcement was made this week that other Belasco productions will be done in film versions. With Mae Murray as the star work already has started at the Lasky studios on "Sweet Kitty Bellairs."

At the time when the feature play was young the arrangements entered into between Mr. Belasco and the Lasky company by which the latter concern had the exclusive film rights to his noted productions played no small part in the popularizing of the photoplay throughout the country. Some of these productions on the screen have called forth words of the highest praise. Of all American dramatic producers Mr. Belasco stands at the head as dean of his art, and although the plays are widely known, many of his famous stage achievements have not been seen in years except as revived by stock companies.

Now the Lasky company has recorded for all time the story of these great plays and the strong and original dramatic situations which they contain. On the screen they have been seen within the past two years by hundreds of thousands of persons throughout the country, to whom Mr. Belasco's name is a by-word but from whom, while the plays were presented in dramatic form, conditions of great distances from the larger cities kept them away from the very small towns. Also, in the score of years Mr. Belasco has maintained his place among American producers, several generations of theatergoers have come and gone.

The production of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," in which Mae Murray is the star, will be James Young's first directed picture for the Lasky company. The cast includes Tom Forman, James Neill, Horace B. Carpenter, Bob Gray and other members of the Lasky all star company.

Among other plays that have come from Mr. Belasco's theaters and which have been picturized by the Lasky company are "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Woman," "The Governor's Lady," "The Case of Becky," "The Rose of the Rancho," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Fighting Hope."

MERCHANTS PRAISE MINUSA

Business Men's League of St. Louis Co-operate With Film Concern in Making "Get Together" Meeting a Success.

The Business Men's League of St. Louis on Wednesday, March 8, had a "get-together meeting" and at this time showed pictures of the progress of the city. They are making a special effort to increase the membership of this organization to five thousand men.

The banquet was held in the south dining room of the Planters Hotel and owing to the fact that a large volume of light enters through the many large windows along each side, it was necessary to get a special screen to show the views of the city's progress.

The Minusa Cine Products Company co-operated with the Business Men's League in helping them obtain a satisfactory screen surface and Minusa came in for many words of praise for its assistance and interest in the welfare and progress of the Fourth City.

Clarence V. Howard, president of the Commonwealth Steel Company, recently placed an order with the Minusa Cine Products Company for a Minusa Gold Fibre screen for his private theater on his beautiful country estate, near Clayton, Mo.

Mr. Howard recently electrified the business interests of the country by announcing that the wages of every employe of the Commonwealth Steel Company would be raised ten per cent. He mentioned this move on his part was prompted by reason of the fact that when he was a boy working for the Union Pacific, Jay Gould announced that every employe should be given a ten per cent increase in salary.

Mr. Howard very happily proclaimed he had been long looking forward to the day when he could likewise favor his own men.

V. R. Carrick, general manager of the Interstate Film Company of Philadelphia, has placed an order with the Minusa Cine Products Company of St. Louis for a Minusa Gold Fibre screen to be placed in his projection room.

As Mr. Garrick's theater is one of the most important in Philadelphia for the exhibitors to congregate and see the latest releases, he desires to present these in the best manner possible, and he felt that his pictures were losing a great deal of their detail and beauty when shown on the ordinary cloth screen.

BORDER "WAR" PICTURES

Intrepid Camera Men of the News Weeklies Were on the Job at Columbus and Are Now After Villa

The raids and skirmishes of the border warfare along the Mexican frontier and the movements of the United States troops in pursuit of the bandit Villa have furnished some exciting experiences for the camera-news hunters and some very interesting and vivid news films for those who are following their own peaceful paths of life far from the scene of trouble.

There are numerous stories regarding film scoops in Mexico and we give here some of the reports of cameramen activity.

L. J. Burrud, Mutual Weekly cameraman, was stationed with a United States cavalry troop at El Paso, Texas, when the word of the raid on Columbus, New Mexico, and the loss of American lives were received. Eager to get to the scene at the earliest possible moment, and as there were no trains for several hours, it is reported that he chartered a locomotive and a record dash was made to Columbus.

Burrud arrived at the devastated border town six hours after the Mexicans had been driven out, but in time to take more than a hundred scenes of the work of the marauders before starting into Mexico with the army. Among the pictures is a panoramic view of the burned and shot riddled dwellings and business houses as well as numerous scenes of the killed and wounded soldiers and civilians, also close-ups of Col. Slocum, and Mrs. Wright, the wife of the American rancher, who was compelled to ride nine days with Villa's band, while it was on its way to attack the New Mexico town.

When the raid was made on Columbus, the Hearst Vitagraph man claims to have been within a short distance of the town filming outside views. Attracted by the echoes of volley firing he hastened to the scene and arrived in time to witness the repulse of the Mexican invaders by the United States cavalry.

The result of his labors on the firing line were displayed in News Pictorial No. 21, released through V. L. S. E. The pictures include views of Columbus as it appeared in flames, victims and invaders as they lay dead and wounded in the streets. Also the cameraman succeeded in obtaining a view of the American troopers in pursuit of the enemy, and an engagement between the opposing forces, when the Mexicans made a temporary stand just across the frontier.

Scenes from the Mexican warfare are also shown in the Selig-Tribune released on March 20 and 23. The Selig-Tribune was one of the first to present news pictorials from the border showing the results of the Columbus raid.

John Boggs and Nicholas McDonald, cameramen on the Selig-Tribune staff, are directing a staff of news photographers along the border where the interest is most intense. News photographers and correspondents representing the Selig-Tribune are also with the expeditionary forces against Villa and his bandits.

The intrepid film news sleuths from the Universal and Pathe camps are also very much on the job in capturing pictures of events as they happen along the border.

Kendall Evans, representing the Eagle Film Company of Chicago, has gone to the border for a big war feature which, if it comes up to expectations, will be released through the offices of George A. Magie, in the Mallers Building, Chicago.

THAT UNIVERSAL BALL

Motography's Representative Puts O. K. on Affair at Grand Central Palace, New York, in Spite of Friend's Warning

By Thomas C. Kennedy

With so many of the masked and fancifully dressed, the unmasked and the plainly dressed, who attended the Universal bal masque at the Grand Central Palace, New York, giving loose to mirth it would have taken a prodigious effort for even the ailing and dispirited neurotic to remain as one apart from all this merriment. Let it be chronicled here, at the outset, that the Universal bal masque, designed for fun only, was a success.

On my way to the Grand Central Palace I encountered a friend. Informed that a bal masque was the objective point the friend, who was homeward bound, sagely remarked that barring the allowance of considerable latitude in the adornments of the "masquers," bal masques tend to run toward that variety of function aptly termed dull. At the palace that night I found that said latitude prevailed. But whether traceable to the attractive costumes I found something equally important. That was the atmosphere of geniality and solace, recreation and vivacity. Hereafter I will give ear to no person setting forth the requirements for an evening of amusement at a bal masque.

Before the eyes of those seated in the press box, which as it was the only box gave its occupants a rather exclusive feeling, there opened up a wondrous vista every time the band made music for the dancers. All the bizarre splendor of a sultan's palace was there. And when the music stopped there was heard a babble of voices from behind masks whose blankness hid the identity of many, the facial beauty of several, and, were I pessimistic, I might say, unattractiveness of a few. But there was compensation for what the masks denied. Eyes sparkled through the punctured masks, symmetry of shoulders and trimness of ankles were disclosed.

At about midnight the contestants for the prizes offered for the most attractive costumes paraded before the press box. The gentlemen seated therein may have been excellent judges, who knows? At any rate they declared male costumes out of the contest. There was some slight opposition to this, but it did not seem to make much difference.

First prize, which was the sum of thirty dollars, was awarded to Violet Mersereau of Universal; second prize, fifteen dollars, went to Betty Lawson of the Thanhouser Company; and the judges decided upon Edith Roberts of Universal as the winner of the third prize of ten dollars. Nine other awards of five dollars each were made. Included were Mrs. Nat Rothstein, Mrs. H. H. Van Loan and Violet Mack. After the prizes were awarded masks were removed and the dancing continued until an hour, not exactly known, after midnight.

Nearly all the actors, actresses and directors in the Universal's many eastern companies were present, and the members of Universal's executive offices were there. The executives of the Universal in evidence were Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, Joe Brandt, Nat Rothstein, M. H. Hoffman, H. H. Van Loan, Paul Gulick, Bob Doman and Walter Kingsbury. In vain did we look for Ray Cavanaugh among others. Gentlemen connected with the film industry who were seen from the press box were Leon J. Rubinstein, John Grey, Bill Barry, Charles Ver Halen and others whose names were carefully written on the sheet of paper I lost on the way home.

Here's how they looked when the masks came off at the Universal ball.

"LOCAL COLOR" EXPLAINED

Donald Mackenzie Says Realism Is Obtained by Getting as Far Away From Your Subject as Possible

Donald Mackenzie says that "Local Color" is merely a matter of getting as far away from your subject as possible. Mr. Mackenzie says he got the theory from a friend of his, who is a professor of psychology in a New York City college. This professor is of the belief that the director who goes to Bowery for his slum types invariably gets stung. He would cull his from West End avenue. The best wild and wooly westerners would come straight from behind soda fountains and ribbon counters, and his successful ballroom society girls from the refining influence of New York's most exclusive bag factories.

"This isn't so paradoxical as it sounds, for his theory of obtaining types far from their actual stamping-grounds is based on an idea that is simple. The idea came to him while he was spending a week-end at the home of a friend. There were many women in the party, and a baby. One of the women cradled that baby in an arm that seemed to be hollowed by the Divine Carpenter to accommodate America's white hopes. She anticipated the kid's every gurgle with a quick-seeming intuition that made my friend remark something about the beautiful unspoken understanding that existed between the two.

"'Yes, it's lovely, isn't it,' said a young flapper seated nearby, 'too bad she's never had one of her own!' And then, in a flash, he understood. The touching realism of this woman's innumerable tableau with the child was the result of her spinister's idealization of motherhood. She looked like what he expected a solicitous mother should, and interpreting his idea of sentimental motherhood, was infinitely real to him; more real by far than the actual mother, deeply engrossed in another corner of the room on the relative merits of apples and hot water as aids to the muddy complexion.

"It's only natural for people to be what they're not," says my friend, "and the honest-to-goodness thug fixes his scenes because of his natural desire to appear as an arbiter of elegance. He can't realize the worth of his 'natural resources,' and would do infinitely better as a tango-pirate. On the other hand, the Betty fresh from college frequently does the girl-with-a-vermillion-past stuff with infinitely more conviction than her sister of shady reputation because her aloofness, her perspective of the character, gives her a fine sense of the pastel shades the other is too intimate with, too near to see."

Mary "Metro" Minter in Canada

Mary Miles Minter, the very young Metro leading lady, has just returned from a wonderfully good time in Canada.

The little star made a tour of several of the largest cities of the Dominion. She was received and entertained by high officials, cheered by college students and greeted with vehemence by hundreds of children. She gave brief addresses in a large number of photoplay houses and of course received bouquets by armfuls. At the Imperial Theater in Montreal, Miss Minter was presented with a traveling bag by her juvenile admirers.

KEEP SCREEN CLEAN

Universal Executive Declares He'd Clean Streets Before Resorting to Smutty Pictures to Get the Money

By Carl Laemmle.

Certain advocates of proposed laws for the censoring of moving pictures are misrepresenting this company's attitude, and my personal attitude, on the question of suggestive pictures. By using only certain extracts from some of my utterances they are completely twisting my meaning, seeking to make it appear that this company intends to make smutty pictures if the people demand such subjects.

They have quoted the following sentence from an article of which I was the author: "If the demand for them (meaning suggestive pictures) is so overwhelmingly great we will bow to the superior wisdom of the majority."

Taken by itself this sentence seems to damn me utterly. But it should not be separated from the rest of my article, for in it I stated unequivocally that under no consideration would the Universal company make smutty pictures. I even used the phrase that "before the Universal reaches the point where it depends on such pictures for its profits I would strike the street commissioner for a job cleaning the streets."

The fact that this company has produced from twenty to thirty new photoplays every week and has not yet indulged in the practice of making smutty ones ought to be proof enough of our determination to keep the screen clean.

But the censorship advocates ignore all this. They gleefully extract one little sentence from a whole article and circulate it far and wide for the purpose of having new laws enacted to muzzle the screen. If they have their way, they will ruin the amusement of the millions of Americans who patronize moving pictures every day in the week.

Moving picture producers are not bad men, trying to ruin the morals of the people. On the contrary they are just human men with the same sort of red blood in their veins as all other men have. They want only one censor—and, that one the people. They don't want a handful of professional reformers to decide what pictures the people can or cannot see. They know that as long as the pictures please the people, they will thrive; but they also know that as soon as they make pictures which displease or harm the people, the whole structure of the picture business will totter and fall with a smash.

We feel that we have as much right to a free screen as you have to a free press—and for precisely the same reasons. Will you help us get it?

Charlie Chaplin may be the highest salaried man in the universe but here is one person who never heard of him.

Prof. A. C. L. Brown, head of the department of English literature at Northwestern university was having the members of his Shakespeare class compare the bard of Avon with modern writers and dramatists last Saturday. He then asked the names of the favorite authors of the students.

"Charley Chaplin," replied one co-ed.

"I never read any of his works," returned the professor seriously. "What did he write?"

"BIG SALARIES HERE TO STAY"

Richard A. Rowland, President of the Metro Company, Declares That Salaries Should Depend on Drawing Power of Stars

Regarding the question of whether or not sky-high salaries for picture stars is sound business policy, R. A. Rowland, Metro's president, makes some pertinent remarks.

"High salaries, for real motion picture stars, have come to stay. The star is worth his hire in proportion to his earning power as an attraction and the company that fails to recognize a star's value cannot expect to keep him," says Mr. Rowland.

"High salaries are in no sense a sign of loose business methods, or of unsound conditions. On the contrary, I expect to see the high salaries continue because there is every reason why they should.

"I can cheerfully say that we do not in the least begrudge any real star all the money we have paid, are paying and will pay. In spite of contracts we have voluntarily raised salaries that were already high, when we found that pictures in which the stars appeared had an even greater drawing power than we had counted upon.

"I concede that it is often a wrench with some companies to raise a player who has been for some time receiving $50 a week to $1,200 a week or more, but the company that finds out that an actor or an actress is increasing in popularity and therefore in value at the box office, and who fails to give the actor or actress prompt financial recognition cannot hope to hold the player for very long in its service.

"It all lies between the public and the artist. If the artist proves himself before the public he is worth big money, and if he doesn't he isn't.

"For instance, a star like Miss Barrymore receives more money for appearing in Metro pictures than she would derive from similar work on the speaking stage. To begin with she is worth it and her pictures, because of larger revenues, make it possible to pay it.

"I do not look for higher salaries among those who play moderately well, but great talent will always bring great salaries in motion pictures. Every Tom, Dick and Harry in motion pictures will not receive large money but the real artists will get it and they ought to get it."

Mary Dances for Charity

In her appearance, "Herself," at the Hippodrome (New York City) Sunday night concert on March 26, Mary Pickford, who has played silently before millions of film fans, was seen in a new role. While Sousa and his band and the usual bill of events were given, Miss Pickford was the most interesting artist of the evening, for few persons have seen this screen favorite in real life. It is reported that Miss Pickford surprised the theatergoers with a series of dances.

U. S. Films Popular in France

The curtailment in the production of French and Italian motion picture films, owing to conditions created by the war, has caused a considerable increase in the use of American films in France. Reports are to the effect that the French people are delighted with American films.

$7,000 "NE'ER-DO-WELL" WEEK

Heilig Theater of Portland, Oregon, Leased for the Occasion, Breaks Records with the Lesser-V-L-S-E Feature

The Heilig Theater, Portland, Ore., is not a picture theater, but notwithstanding this fact "The Ne'er-Do-Well" has just finished a two weeks' engagement which sets a new record for Portland.

The picture was originally booked to play at the People's Theater, Portland's leading picture house. But after viewing the film, the management recognized "The Ne'er-Do-Well" as one of the big ones that are few and far between, and with the courage to back their judgment leased the Heilig, a stock theater seating 2,000 people, for two weeks.

As a result, the box office receipts reached $7,000 the first week and $6,000 the second week. Unable to continue the engagement on account of advance bookings, the run will resume at this theater at a later date.

The V-L-S-E, which is handling "The Ne'er-Do-Well" by an arrangement with Sol L. Lesser, reports that the picture is meeting with big success throughout the United States.

"NO LOVING IN THIS PARK"

Hazel Dawn and Company of Twelve Famous Players Prevented from Making Picture Love in Baltimore Park

When Hazel Dawn, Irving Cummings and a company of twelve other Famous Players wanted to make love—for a picture, of course—in a Baltimore park under the direction of Frederick Thompson, the president of the city park board said, "No!"

And that official thus placed before a film company another of those inexcusable obstacles that are continually harassing the motion picture industry.

It is putting it softly to say that Director Thompson was indignant, for he and his company had come to Baltimore from New York expressly for the making of the picture they were at that time producing for Famous Players.

The only explanation George W. Williams, the president of the park board, had for his action was just as peculiar as the action itself. "I do not think it is wise to allow pictures of lovemaking or kidnaping to be made in Druid Hill park," he said. "Many people who would see them upon the screen would think they are real and that would not be a very good advertisement for our park."

And as to whether lovemaking (real) would be a good advertisement for a park it would seem depends, by the way, on whether one's viewpoint be that of pompous official, amorous lover or pestered policeman. But in lovemaking (reel) nobody has yet discovered anything to harm even the most innocent little park.

Two "Stars" Sign Up

Ethel Clayton, for the past four years one of the leading feature stars with the Lubin Company, with sixteen big feature productions to her credit, this week became a permanent member of the World-Equitable Corporations and within one hour of signing, was allotted the principal female role in "The Woman of It," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Paul McAllister will appear opposite her and which will be staged at a point somewhat distant from Saranac in the interior of the Catskills and Adirondacks. Miss Clayton's contract with World and Equitable was signed twenty minutes after she arrived in New York from Philadelphia. Miss Clayton can readily be termed a pioneer film player. She graduated from the stage to the screen during the period of the screen's evolution. When Henry B. Harris was in the height of his dramatic triumph, and "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Traveling Salesman," "The Chorus Lady," and "Children of Destiny" were running on Broadway, Ethel Clayton was creating her first impression as a dramatic actress in "The Lion and the Mouse." Later Mr. Harris assigned Miss Clayton to the principal role opposite Wallace Eddinger in "The Making of Bobby Burnitt," and in which she made an excellent personal hit, although the show itself was not a financial success. Later when "The Country Boy" was produced, Miss Clayton was taken from the cast of "Bobby Burnitt" by Mr. Harris and Mr. Selwyn, the author, and given one of the most important roles in what proved to be one of the biggest hits of the season, "The Country Boy." It was while Miss Clayton was playing in "The Country Boy" that she attracted the attention of the film makers and a short while after "The Country Boy" completed its engagement in New York, Miss Clayton made her appearance in the first three-reel production ever made, entitled "When the Earth Trembled," and which sold to a greater extent in point of prints used than any subject of similar length before or since its creation.

Scene from "The Conscience of John David," the Horsley production written by and featuring Crane Wilbur. A five-part feature released as Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe, on April 24.

Carlyle Blackwell, recently seen in a visualization of Samuel Hopkins Adams' "The Clarion," and whose future was rather undetermined owing to the rumors that after his short term agreement with Equitable expired, he would join another concern, set at rest all rumors when he signed a three-year contract with the World Film Corporation for appearance in features of that concern and its ally, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation. Mr. Blackwell, one of the youngest and most widely known of the typical film artists, who created his wide following by reason of his attractive screen personality and his versatility in a multitude of roles during his years of service before the camera, was in great demand.

Genuine Whiskers at Last

There is nothing scarcer on the screen than genuine whiskers.

Hirsute adornment that is bought by the yard and glued onto the villain's grim countenance fools only the villain himself. He usually looks in his store whiskers just about as they feel stuck on his face.

This by way of explanation of why some companies pay extra men five dollars a day for neglecting to shave, and why Director High of the Metro company raided the Russian quarter of New York City recently and gathered up thirty bewhiskered sons of Petrograd for the feature he was working on. He directed them through an interpreter.

And so in "The Kiss of Hate," a story of Russian romance, we may expect to see not only costumes and faces in the mob that reek with local color, but also some genuine Russian whiskers.

Goodwin Troupe Back

A tired but happy crowd of actors and "esses" rolled into New York from Jacksonville, Florida, last week. They were covered with tan and glory and under their arms carried dainty little pet alligators and other souvenirs of the sunny south.

They were headed by the redoubtable Nat Goodwin and bore allegiance to Mirror Films, Inc. In Florida they had directed, acted and photographed one of Goodwin's old successes in record time. There remain only a few scenes to be taken in the Mirror studios at Glendale, Long Island.

Among those of the tired troupe were Flora Finch, Billy Quirk, Estelle Mardo, Mildred Manning, Augustus Phillips, Lina D'Avril, Eddie O'Connor, Charles Brandt and others.

Detail in Productions

Motion picture patrons as well as the motion picture trade are aware all too often of lack of care in handling the detail of a production. The sudden changing of a suit or the wonderfully swift drying of the apparel of someone who has just emerged from a lake, are not very unusual. It is exceptional attention to details which has spelt the success of Edgar Lewis in his "Great Divide" and "The Bondman."

NEW RAVER STUDIO READY

"The Witching Hour," "Alabama," "The Hoosier Doctor," and Other Features, Will Be Made in Fine Long Island Structure

All future Raver Film Corporation productions, such as "The Witching Hour," "Alabama," "The Hoosier Doctor," "As a Man Thinks," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Booths," and the many other Augustus Thomas plays, will be made in the new Raver studios at Rockville Center, Long Island. The studio is but a few short blocks out of the city of Rockville Center, with every necessary natural bit of scenery within easy distance of it.

The studio proper is completely finished with the exception of the installation of lights. The ordinary line of props and scenery is being built and laboratory facilities installed. The studio will consist of several buildings and include a plot of ground covering about five acres.

Beside the indoor studio, a large outside stage is being constructed adjacent to the property room for use in good weather. In the construction of the studio the buildings have been arranged with a view of securing the greatest efficiency. Adjoining and connecting with the studio proper is the property building. On the other side of the property room is the large outdoor stage. On the opposite side of this group is the laboratory, with its tanks, dry rooms, printers' and assembling rooms. Over this is the carpenter shop and scenic department. In addition to this group of buildings there is an extra store room and a garage which will accommodate five automobiles.

While many splendid propositions were offered Mr. Raver in his search for a studio site, this Rockville Center plot appealed to him more strongly because of its many natural advantages. It is but a few minutes' ride from New York City. It is in the center of a country rich with natural scenery and splendid homes. Everything from the busy hum of factory life and active city streets to the quietness of farm and woodlands is conveniently available.

Governor's Son Drafts Contract

As a bonus in connection with their deal, purchasers of state rights on the California Motion Picture Corporation's "The Unwritten Law" are receiving a contract personally drafted by the son of the Hon. Hiram Johnson, governor of California, who attracted much attention during the baptism by fire of Col. Roosevelt's Progressive party at Chicago four years ago.

Archibald M. Johnson, son of Governor Johnson, is connected with the San Francisco law firm of Sullivan, Sullivan & Roche and is general counsel for the California Motion Picture Corporation. For the past month he has been in New York with Alexander Beyfuss, general manager of the company, giving his personal attention to the signing of the contract which he drafted by the various buyers of territory on the big photoplay feature.

Ronald Reed of Peoria, Ill., of the Elite Amateur Actors' Club of Central Illinois, has been engaged by the Barker-Swann Film Company as leading man in "The Brown Mouse," the first play this company will produce at its new Peoria studios.

STRINGER WRITES WORLD STORY

Director Tourneur, House Peters and Arthur Stringer Combined in Producing Five-Act Detective Play

In these days when weak-kneed stories are only too common, it is with relief that one looks forward to a photoplay plot constructed by an author of proved merit. "The Hand of Peril," the World Film release for March 27, gives promise of leaving nothing to be desired in the way of strength of story.

The play is from the convincing typewriter of Arthur Stringer, an author, whose work is always chock full of vivid interest and who is frequently seen between the covers of the leading magazines. He is especially strong in the construction of detective stories, and "The Hand of Peril" is an example of his finest work.

Not only does the authorship of this coming film appear to be of the one hundred point caliber, but the cast and the director uphold this unusual standard. House Peters will play the lead, and it is common knowledge that Mr. Peters is particularly strong in the portrayal of detective roles. Maurice Tourneur, who handles psychology and tricky incidents better than any other element in film making, will direct the play. This triangle of author, star and director should make an ideal picture.

The strong cast has been working for seven weeks in the Paragon studio. Mr. Tourneur has given free play to his genius for the intricate and delicate phases of story-making and the plot, which concerns itself with government agents and a band of criminals, is full of suspense and novel climaxes. A tracing desk, used by counterfeiters, a transparent wall through which the criminals see without being seen, and other new devices mark the unfolding of the story.

There are five acts and more than three hundred scenes in this striking detective film.

KEENAN BACK WITH TRIANGLE

Noted Actor Again With Ince and De Wolf Hopper Is Also Active in New Griffith Features

Frank Keenan, noted for his screen work in "The Coward," is to be seen again in Triangle productions after a vacation of six weeks. He has a long contract and "The Stepping Stone" is the first of a series of frequent releases which will come from the Ince corner of Triangle.

"The Stepping Stone" gives Keenan the role of a powerful financier. His leading lady will be Mary Boland, who played opposite John Drew for several years. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan and is so strong that it is possible that a stage adaptation will be made later on.

De Wolf Hopper has also returned to Triangle screens. "Sunshine Dad" is his new vehicle, Griffith-supervised. In this play Hopper will be Adonis Evergreen, the principal sufferer from the complications arising from the theft of a diamond band from a Hindoo shrine. Jewel Carmen has an important part in the support.

"Peggy," the well-known Ince feature with Billie Burke, is still going strong as it is said that even the Scotchmen are paying to see it.

"WAIT," SAYS SELZNICK

President of New Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation Promises Revelation on Return from Short Trip

With the announcement that the motion picture industry was rapidly evolving into a race between the producer, the exchanges and the exhibitor, to see which could lose the most money, Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the new Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, left New York last week for Cleveland and Pittsburgh to complete the final negotiations which he promises will result in the organization of the first assured film success in the business. When interviewed just before his departure, Mr. Selznick said:

"Wait until I get back. There are a lot of men giving interviews just now on how to make money in the motion picture business. Most of them could give better interviews on how to lose money in the motion picture business. I am not going to add to their kind of talk just now, but on my return from this western trip I shall be in a position not only to talk about it but to show the way and the only way to make money for producer, exchange, and exhibitor.

"All I can say just now is that our plans are rapidly maturing to the perfection of organization that will make the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation absolutely a sure-fire proposition. We have already secured under contract a half-dozen of the most brilliant scenario writers in the profession, to prepare scripts for Miss Young. Each of these will be written solely with Miss Young's personality and style in mind and each, before our acceptance, will undergo a scrutiny that cannot fail to spot the least sign of weakness in the story before it is put into work at the studio.

"Our advertising matter will be a revelation to the industry. We intend to issue lithographs and other forms of illustrated matter prepared by artists whose names are synonymous with the highest form of the illustrative art.

"One of the sad things about the production of feature pictures today is the fact that the exhibitor handling a regular program from one producing concern must buy three pieces of pictorial cheese to obtain one slice of cake. When the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation's output begins each picture will be cake. If the exhibitor wants a side order of cheese, he will have to buy it elsewhere."

Fox Shows Growth

The arrival of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in England and the immediate opening under his direction of a chain of offices in England and Scotland, means that this film company attains a new stage of its expansion into the world markets.

Entry into the British market makes the sixth country to be invaded by William Fox in less than twenty-four months. His big corporation is now operating in Australia, England, Scotland, Canada, Brazil, Argentine and is reaching out in still other directions.

Thus do motion pictures furnish parallels to the old gold camps of the West and to the boom cities that grew up overnight and became permanent when pioneers struck oil in the middle-West.

HOLMES WRITES "NEAR DRAMA"

Travelogue Expert Turns Out Play With Real Hero and Heroine, a Comedian and Any Number of Villains.

Burton Holmes has written a "near-drama" in his eighth release on March 27, for the Paramount Pictures Corporation, for there is a hero, a heroine, a comedian and several villains, and they are all real people and everything that occurs is as real as the daily lives they all lead in the forests of Arizona. Fire fighting is a profession—a life work, and a very exciting and dangerous profession it is.

The hero of Mr. Holmes' drama is the forest ranger who lives with his wife, the heroine, in a little camp in the Arizona forest. The comedian is his assistant, the Indian ranger, the villains are the careless campers who set the fire, and out of these human elements with the assistance of a few horses, burrows and helpers, Mr. Holmes has woven the thread of his story.

Pictorially, this reel is most interesting, scenes are taken of and in the ranger's lookout tower, high above the trees. Here are seen the clever devices for getting the exact location of a distant fire and the methods for telephoning near-by stations and mobilizing the little army of fire-fighters.

Then the camp of the villains is shown with the fatal fire smoldering in the foreground; the villains break camp and with a careless kick the arch-villain spreads the embers of the dying fire over the ground and they depart, leaving the scattered firebrands to get in their deadly work.

The fire spreads—the ranger, high perched in his tower, sees the smoke; he telephones another ranger at another lookout tower many miles away and between them they can put a finger on the exact spot where the villains' campfire has grown to a vigorous and rapidly spreading blaze.

No time to lose—horses are saddled, implements seized, and from several different lookout towers the little band of brave men, having kissed their respective wives good-bye, are galloping wildly toward the central goal—the fire. To watch them on the screen, as Mr. Holmes watched them in real life, fighting fire, their faces blistered, their clothes scorching, their throats, noses and eyes raw with the heat and the smoke—even to see that on the screen makes one realize what the dangers must be and what sort of stuff the rangers must be made of.

After the fire has been brought under control, the relief arrives and water cools the parched throats and food refreshes the tired bodies and soon each ranger "hikes" for his own cozy camp and to watch for another fire.

How heavy their hearts must be sometimes when they ride to that kind of a fire and wonder, as they ride, whether they will ever come back to the little woman each one of them has waiting for him somewhere.

The Paramount-Burton Holmes seventh release on March 20 is not only different from any Paramount Travel Picture ever shown, but is different from any pictures ever shown by any one, for, by using his peculiar "Speedo" camera Mr. Holmes makes the most ordinary and every-day scenes into screamingly funny farce-comedies and yet, underlying the comicality of it all, there is still the informative element and the easily traceable every detail of what was actually occurring when the "Speedo" took the picture.

For instance, the antics of a canal boat jumping up and down through a series of five or six locks, very much as a fat puppy would rush up and down stairs would be very amusing, but no matter how amusing it might be, Burton Holmes' audiences would see every detail of the opening and closing of the lock gates, the boat entering each lock, the flooding of the next lock, and all the other details of how a boat or ship "comes down stairs."

Whatever else he does, Mr. Holmes may be depended upon to show his fellow-travelers the very things that he and his camera saw, but sometimes the most interesting events, if shown as they actually occurred, would take an entire evening to show each event, hence the invention of the "Speedo" camera, which is truthful in its portrayal of every detail, but certainly makes everything "go some."

San Francisco was never celebrated as being particularly "slow," so Burton Holmes has selected the sights and scenes in and around that lively city as a fitting opportunity to introduce his "Speedo."

"Defense" Film Honored

It seems that there is at least one town in the United States that thinks enough of the importance of motion pictures to turn out with its mayor and prominent citizens to welcome it as it would the governor or a senator.

Report comes from Meridan, New York, that when "Defense or Tribute" was shown at the Poli theater there the mayor and other local dignitaries spoke on "Preparedness" as a part of the evening's program, and hundreds of the citizens turned out to the event. It is also said that a number of the merchants decorated their stores with flags in order to aid in carrying out the spirit of patriotism stirred up by the film.

"Defense or Tribute" was produced by the Public Service Film Company.

A bit of lovemaking from Essanay's "The Unknown," with Marguerite Clayton and Richard Travers.

WHO WROTE SHAKESPEARE?

This Is Momentous Question in Chicago Court and President William N. Selig is the Anxious Questioner

Who wrote Shakespeare?

The question has been submitted in Chicago to Judge Tuthill in the form of a prosaic bill in chancery.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is a keen student of the works of Shakespeare. Mr. Selig has directed his bill against Colonel George Fabyan and the Riverbank Company, of which Mr. Fabyan is president.

The Riverbank Company, according to the bill, is preparing to publish cipher translations proving that the Bard of Verulam is also the Bard of Avon. Mr. Selig declares that inasmuch as he is preparing to exhibit motion pictorial presentations of the Shakespeare plays, the translations will harm his business.

Judge Tuthill, in the Chicago courts, granted a temporary injunction restraining the publication of the books.

"William N. Selig respectfully represents that he has for more than twenty years past been one of a large number of persons believing and relying on the authenticity of the authorship of William Shakespeare. The bardolator points out that on April 23 will fall the tercentenary celebration of Shakespeare's works which celebration he will commemorate by producing Shakespeare's photoplays.

"The Riverbank company, the bill proceeds, purposes to publish translations of Shakespeare's and Bacon's work by use of the 'Biliterial Cipher' which Sir Francis Bacon invented in Paris in his early youth and published in certain of his works, which cipher when applied to Shakespeare's works tells the 'marvelous' story of the lives of Bacon, Queen Elizabeth, and other Elizabethan celebrities and also furnishes the complete history of the 'New Atlantis,' a hitherto unfinished work of Lord Bacon."

If the cipher translations are published, Mr. Selig's business will be impaired and "the fame of Shakespeare as author of all said works will be shattered."

Then comes another appeal to the court:

"Your orator prays that he may have an adjudication that William Shakespeare is the author of all the tragedies, comedies, plays and sonnets which heretofore have been attributed to him; that the publication of the secret story discovered in said works by the application of secret ciphers found in the works of Francis Bacon be declared illegal and improper, and that the doing of each and all of said illegal and improper acts may be enjoined."

The law firm representing Mr. Selig filed a bond sufficient, in the court's opinion, to cover possible damage to the defendants. At a later date, the judge will listen to arguments which possibly will include the reading verbatim of hundreds of books on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy.

The charge has been made against Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police of Chicago, that he permitted exhibitions of "cut-outs" in his possession as head of the city film censorship department. The major has refused to make any statement anent the complaint.

NEW BALBOA SERIAL

Jackie Saunders Will Be Starred in "The Grip of Evil" Which Is to Be Released by Pathe

Balboa's forthcoming continued screen story will be called "The Grip of Evil," and Jackie Saunders has been cast for the stellar role. On completion the piece is to be released by Pathe, which has handled all of the Long Beach "house of serials" big productions, such as "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," and "The Red Circle."

Work is now under way on "The Grip of Evil," with Director Harry Harvey in charge of the production. His company includes two new featured film players brought out specially from New York to support Miss Saunders. One of them is Roland Bottomley, leading man of wide experience; the other Marie Empress, a "heavy" of renown.

The basic idea for "The Grip of Evil" was supplied by LaMonte Waldron, a New York newspaperman. The continuity is being developed by Douglas Bronston. He is at the Balboa studio now and on the job. This production will consist of a series of fourteen stories of two reels each. Each installment will be complete in itself, with a common strand of interest pervading all.

Like all former Balboa continued stories, "The Grip of Evil" promises to be a distinct novelty; for in each episode Jackie Saunders will enact a different type of woman. She is already well known for her versatility. But this production will give her powers greater scope than ever and enable her to demonstrate the fitness of the appellation recently given her—"the Maude Adams of the screen."

While in New York recently Miss Saunders acquired a new wardrobe consisting of a score of complete changes. All of the gowns, suits and dresses were designed and made especially for her by Frances. They will be used exclusively in "The Grip of Evil." One novel thing about this sartorial feature is that Miss Saunders will first be photographed in each outfit and included in Pathe's Weekly for fourteen weeks in advance of the opening of the production's release.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of Balboa, who has just returned from New York, is exercising a general supervisory eye over the production of "The Grip of Evil." W. A. S. Douglas, Pathe's director of productions, is also watching the filming of the piece. Joseph Brotherton is in charge of the camera work. Having photographed "Who Pays?" and "Neal of the Navy," he is particularly well qualified.

"The Grip of Evil" will mark Jackie Saunders' debut as a serial star. Their appearance in continued stories has done much to establish such favorites as Lillian Lorraine, Ruth Roland, Pearl White and others with film audiences. Because of the variety of characters Miss Saunders will interpret, she should emerge at the top of the list, since nothing like "The Grip of Evil" has yet been filmed. Each story raises a big question in the spectator's mind. The Balboa girl is going to propound fourteen posers—entertaining, but none the less puzzling.

Refuse to Shorten Films

To the disappointment of a large delegation of actors and actresses who do turns between films at motion picture theaters, a legislative committee has reported unfavorably on a bill to limit the time a film may be shown continuously to thirty minutes, with a ten-minute intermission. It was also voted by the committee to reject a bill providing that tickets to photo-plays shall not be sold after the seats are occupied. More than 300 stage folk crowded the committee rooms at the hearing, the proponents of the first bill being marshalled by Representative Sandy Chapman, himself an actor. An organizer for the White Rats claimed that the bill would help the theatrical unemployed, stage hands and movers, as well as actors and actresses, by making more turns necessary.

White Has "See America First"

The popular Gaumont scenic series, "See America First," is now being handled by C. M. White, assistant to F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont company. The release of March 19 shows entertaining views of San Francisco, Cal. "See America First" is a split reel with Harry Palmer's animated cartoons, which are also the product of the Gaumont laboratories at Flushing, N. Y. March 19, Mr. Palmer will devote his part of the reel to a humorous skit on Charlie Chaplin, the latest Mutual recruit. It will be called "Preparedness."

"Dixie's Finest Theater"

BY H. A. STEWART

A FINE example of the high plane of development which has been reached by the motion picture industry is found in the beautiful new Orpheum theater recently opened at Huntington, West Virginia. The Ince-Triangle "Peggy" was the "housewarming" production.

This theater is not only one of the finest in Dixie but is a marvel of photoplay house architecture. It is unusual in itself to find a $170,000 theater, seating 1,600 people, in a town with a population of 42,000. The Orpheum Theater company, which has conceived and constructed this exemplary photoplay house, is composed of Dr. George C. Kolb, the owner of a string of theaters in Ohio, F. A. Gartlein and G. C. Sullivan. The latter men are well known in Huntington business circles.

Construction

The building is constructed of steel, brick, concrete, terra cotta, and equipped with a complete sprinkler system, thus eliminating any danger from fire.

The entrance is in the center of the building and there is a store room on either side, extending back forty feet from the street. The front part of the building is three stories high, and the second and third floors, over the store rooms and lobby, are laid out for high-class apartments. The theater entrance itself has an attractive marquise extending to the curb.

The entrance and lobby to the Orpheum is finished entirely with marble, terra cotta and ornamental plaster in keeping with both the exterior and interior of the building. The lobby and foyer are brilliantly illuminated, and in addition to their beauty, are so spacious that large crowds may enter and exit from the theater without confusion or inconvenience. On the right side of the foyer is a retiring room for ladies, with a maid in attendance.

Excellent Seating Plan

There are more than sixteen hundred high-grade opera chairs. The arrangement of the seats is such that a free circulation of air passes between the backs of the chairs. The seats are also arranged so that every seat has what is termed a perfect "sight line" on the stage.

The management of the Orpheum has arranged forty autoboxes, handsomely carpeted, containing ten chairs each, which may be reserved in person or by telephone for any performance, thus insuring a seat to those who wish to come at any hour and especially those who wish to entertain their friends, parties, and societies, who can attend in a body and will have seats together, thus adding immensely to their pleasure.

The building is arranged with a complete heating and ventilating equipment, which furnishes a large volume of fresh air taken into the system at a point above the roof, where the air is free from dust and odors. From the fresh air intake, the air is drawn over coils, heated by steam to the proper temperature. The fresh air, after being heated in winter and cooled in summer, is delivered to the auditorium through steel ducts and registers. The vitiated air from the auditorium is exhausted through registers and flues and discharged above the building. An attic, twelve feet in height, between the ceiling and the roof also improves the ventilation.

The Orpheum, in advertising, uses this slogan, two essentials for success, "Fresh air and good pictures." They have both.

The Orpheum management has installed the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, claimed to be one of the finest musical instruments in the world. It is entirely controlled by one musician, combining the full symphony orchestra with the organ. The instrument installed in the Orpheum was designed especially for this theater, and is similar to the one which at the Panama-Pacific Exposition received the gold medal of honor. Some of the wonderful effects contained in this organ are, thunder, wind, rain, cannon, surf, horses trotting, various whistles, tambourines, triangles, etc. It also contains beautiful organ tones, church chimes, human voice effects, flutes, violins, harps, cellos, etc., and represents an investment of $10,000.00.

Scenic Equipment

The asbestos curtain of the Orpheum represents the maximum of protection and in design of decorative treatment offers a wide departure from the conventional through the chaste, simple but highly effective design of Verus T. Ritter, the architect of the theater.

The stage setting follows a design originally conceived for the Strand Theater, St. Paul, Minnesota. Starting with the orchestra pit, the effect of a terraced yard is carried out consistently with appropriate landscaping and floral treatment. The color tone of the scenic treatment is the warm mellow tones of Autumn which affords a pleasing background for the flowers and shrubs that are used as accessories.

The ensemble effect of the setting is that of an estate, a large cyclorama drop, showing in perspective the opposite shore of a body of water; the outlines of a church in the far distance affords the background of the setting. On each side of the stage cottages are shown, with pillars and balcony effects. In the rear of the stage a pergola effect is carried out and between the columns of the center part of the pergola is provided the setting for the picture screen. When the picture screen is raised the view of the back drop is unobstructed. When the screen is lowered a most delightful setting for the photo-plays is provided, one that enhances their artistic effect, and increases their pleasing quality.

Paula Shay and Mignon Anderson in the new Ivan production, "The City of Illusion."

Stage set for a big scene in the Vogue comedy, "Devilish Business," directed by Rube Miller. Mr. Miller, the central figure seated in the foreground, is shown in conference with the studio manager and the assistant director. In this subject, Rube Miller has attained wonderful results by means of clever photography, showing magic disappearing acts, with certain figures replaced by others in the wink of an eye. Mr. Miller, who has an important role in this comedy, is supported by Arthur Moon, Madge Kirby and Alice Neice.

The lighting contributes most importantly to the effectiveness of the setting. Red, amber, and blue lights are liberally employed to create the atmospheric effects necessary to bring out to the smallest extent the beauty and general effectiveness of the scene.

Another departure is provided in that, even though the pictures are being shown, the cyclorama scene in the rear is lit up with the mellow light of moonlight without disturbing in the least the quality and effectiveness of the photo-plays and at the same time rendering an indescribable charm to the photo-play presentment.

Projection

The success of a motion picture house is attained through the high quality of its picture projection. This department has received very careful consideration. However good the photographic quality of a film may be, imperfect projection will render it worthless. If pictures jump and flicker, they fail of purpose. Realizing that only the highest possible grade of projection will suffice, the management of the Orpheum has installed two of the latest projection motion picture machines on the market. They are the Baird, which machines are heavily built, so as to insure stability and avoid vibration. It is claimed by the manufacturers that the Baird is one motion picture machine which absolutely eliminates flicker, thereby producing clear, bright, and well defined pictures.

Another very important feature of this projection is the fact that it is absolutely fire proof. When in operation the film is entirely enclosed, making it so that if there should be an ignition, it would be impossible to burn. To produce the desired results there must always be perfect harmony between the screen and the light which is thrown upon it. Exhaustive and costly experiments have been made to perfect the screen. A new discovery has recently been made and the problem solved. A new screen has been invented which produces a soft satin finish. It eliminates the hard glarish metallic effect and brings forth a picture soft and velvety in every detail. On account of the effect produced, it was decided to install the new screen Satin Gold Fiber. The Orpheum is equipped with this screen which is said to be the only projection surface yet invented which will receive the light projected upon it, absorb the contrary and jarring rays, from a perfectly neutral light, and reflect to the audience a picture which is even in tone, irrespective of what angle it is viewed from, and which is velvety in its softness.

The operating room is much larger than is usually provided, but to provide the proper comfort, convenience and ventilation, the architect has designed a room in the balcony which is absolutely fireproof, properly ventilated and in charge of an expert.

The Orpheum will show Triangle, V. L. S. E. and Mutual productions.

"THE BOOB WEEKLY" SHOWN

R. L. Goldberg's Cartoon, a Travesty on News Weeklies, Will Soon Be Released by Pathe.

Comedies predominated at Pathe's regular Monday afternoon press showing at the New York exchange projection room. And taking the lead over some particularly good one reel subjects shortly to be released by Pathe "The Boob Weekly," an animated cartoon by R. L. Goldberg, moved to boisterous laughter the reviewers who through the performance of their daily tasks have become more or less impervious to the wiles of the cartoonist, the antics of strenuous comedians, and the emotionalism of the dramatist.

The purpose of "The Boob Weekly" is to amuse, to move to laughter, and to say that it fulfills its mission seems a strangely mild way of expressing a real fact. The manner in which "The Boob Weekly" realizes its intent deserves more eloquent description. But a Goldberg cartoon would gain nothing by our enthusiasm. One can only say that this single reel picture is ever so funny, and well worth the exhibitor's consideration.

If the Goldberg cartoons to follow are as comical as "The Boob Weekly" then the Pathe Exchanges will probably find that their cartoon releases hold charms for the exhibitors. "The Boob Weekly" will be one of the first Goldberg pictures which Pathe will release.

To give an account of the different incidents which make this picture a sure-fire laugh producer, would be tiresome alike to writer and reader, so no attempt will here be made to recount just what made us laugh and what did not. The picture is a burlesque on news weeklies. There is humor in its originality and the very extravagance of Goldberg's characters and the names he gives them reaches its own ludicrous heights. "The Boob Weekly" found a mighty responsive audience Monday. The fickle public will be heard from in the near future, and we feel that the decision will be favorable, emphatically so.

Winnifred Greenwood "De Luxe"

It has not been a great number of years since Winnifred Greenwood, the winsome American Mutual star, first appeared in the dramatic profession. But in the space of a few years she has achieved a record attainment. She has appeared as more than 1,000 different girls, different in thought, background, expression and purpose. Miss Greenwood is now co-starring with Frank Ritchie at the head of a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition company organized at the American Film Company's Santa Barbara studios. Miss Greenwood began her professional career with musical comedy. She had an exceptionally good voice. The stock stage next claimed the soft voiced, pink cheeked, gray eyed girl. She traveled with a repertoire company, playing "Sapho," "Camille," and all the "old timers." She also headed a road company for two years, previous to joining the cohorts of the screen players.

Winifred Greenwood.

The greater part of her career as a player for the celluloid drama has been with the American Film Company. She is so generous, so willing to do any task which is set before her, so eager to be of assistance to those about her, that she is a great favorite with the studio folk.

She is a great out-of-doors person, with a propensity for playing tennis and golf. She handles a canoe, a horse or the rolling waves of the surf with equal ease. Another hobby is tramping. In her wardrobe are found heavy English tramping boots, tweeds and mannish hats.

Miss Greenwood plays both the piano and the mandolin. These two accomplishments, with her remarkable voice, make her a very welcome guest. She is as generous with these as she is with other possessions and with her time.

Vitagraphers Eat Beefsteak

A Vitagraph beefsteak party was held in Castle Cave recently and all the guests proclaimed the event "vivid, vivacious and vigorous," whatever that combination means. The following were among the notables present:

Beyfuss Back to Coast

Alexander E. Beyfuss, general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, passed through Chicago a few days ago, en route from New York to San Francisco, after having spent more than a month in the East in the interests of his firm, marketing "The Unwritten Law" on a states rights basis.

Mr. Beyfuss has gone to the coast for the purpose of laying out his sales campaign on the second "Better-than-Program" picture, which his company is making and plans to release some time in May. The forthcoming feature is entitled "The Woman Who Dared." The story is by C. N. and A. M. Williamson and has been especially written for Beatriz Michelena, the star of "The Unwritten Law," who will also have the leading role in the new release.

New Ivan Productions

"The City of Illusion" is a new and ambitious feature to be released in April by the Ivan Feature Film company.

An all-star cast was assembled for this production by Director Abramson and for some of the scenes the entire cast was taken to Richmond, Virginia, and to Washington. At the latter city the exterior of the palatial mansion of Saurez Mujica, ambassador to Chile, was utilized.

"The City of Illusion" will recall the dainty Mignon Anderson to the screen. She is well-known from having for several years played important roles with Thanhouser. Bradley Barker, formerly Olga Petrova's leading man, plays the male lead and Paula Shay, Joseph Burke and Willard Case are also in the cast.

The Ivan production, "Forbidden Fruit," has been passed by the Chicago Board of Censors.

Pollard Works Fast

Harry Pollard, all in one week, recently captured pictures of the U. S. Pacific battle fleet headed for Mexican waters, a Mexican bull fight, the International Exposition, several interiors and exteriors. He also chartered a yacht to take him to some of the islands in the Pacific to complete the exteriors for "The Pearl of Paradise," the Pollard Photo Play Corporation's first feature, starring Margarita Fischer.

Fairbanks at a New One

Douglas Fairbanks, the prominent Triangle star, is at work on a new Fne Arts comedy, somewhat on the style of his recent release, "His Picture in the Papers." A number of the scenes are laid at the seashore, and the costumes that the beach girls wear in these scenes are of the "advanced" style.

Bessie Love has the role of a poor little slum girl in the play.

Irving Bachelor, the writer, has found it necessary to resign from the board of directors of the Mirror Films, Incorporated, on account of his numerous literary engagements which he feels do not leave him time for a faithful performance of his duties on the board.

THREE-STAR FILM IN APRIL

"Who Killed Simon Baird" to Be Equitable's First Triple-Lead Production; Will Be Ready in a Few Weeks

The first three-star production to be created by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation will characterize the World Film program early in April, when Muriel Ostriche, Edna Wallace Hopper and Charles J. Ross will appear in Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf's virile dramatic concoction, "Who Killed Simon Baird?"

This will be Miss Ostriche's third appearance with Equitable, her former vehicles, "A Daughter of the Sea" and "A Circus Romance," having firmly established her, while Charles J. Ross is now a seasoned player, having appeared in several productions for Equitable, including "The Senator."

Edna Wallace Hopper is debuting in "Who Killed Simon Baird," but before being contracted for by Equitable, or before she would accept the present engagement, Miss Hopper spent several days at the Equitable studio and proved by means of exhaustive tests that her features were adapted to screen work.

Gail Kane, Equiable's leading star, has arranged for the syndication of a ten chapter series of articles entitled: "How to Become a Motion Picture Actress," and which will appear in several hundred newspapers throughout the country. The stories were written by Miss Kane in collaboration with a well known author and Miss Kane's own personal experiences form the basis upon which the articles were written.

CITIES BUSY ON ACTORS' FUND

Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Boston Are Now "Deadly Rivals" in Raising Benefit Coin For Players' Endowment

A splendid spirit of rivalry is being developed among the various cities engaged in working in the motion picture campaign for the benefit of the Actor's Fund of America. The object of the latter, as is well known, is to collect $500,000 in fifteen weeks to endow the Actor's Fund. Boston has just joined in the race already begun by Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Mayor Curley is honorary chairman of the Boston campaign, with Mr. Moe Mark in active charge. Mr. Mark is proprietor of the Strand Theater in Lynn, Mass., and will carry the campaign into that city. In Boston a number of social affairs for the benefit of the fund have already been held.

The Philadelphia campaign committee has held a big meeting and the personnel of the organization is now complete. Here are a few of the names:

Mayor Smith is honorary chairman. Sigmund Lubin and Ira Lowry represent the film manufacturers; J. C. Smith, F. Day, I. Buxbaum, J. C. Clark and Reynolds Schwalbe the film exchange men. J. L. Covington, of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is publicity manager. Stanley Mastbaum, J. McCready and W. Burbank, theater owners, are also committee members.

Among other committees being appointed by this general organization, Mr. Burbank, who is president of a printing establishment, was made chairman for benevolent organizations and Mr. McCready chairman for baseball associations. Mr. McCready is Connie Mack's representative. It is anticipated that Philadelphia will contest strongly with Chicago, Pittsburgh and Boston to make the largest contribution to the campaign fund.

One of the best schemes yet devised for the raising of additions to the Actor's fund has come from Howard Estabrook of the Wharton studios at Ithaca, New York. He has announced a scenario contest among the students of Cornell University and the proceeds will go to the fund. The winning scenario will be produced at the Wharton studios in April. Chairman Goldfish of the Motion Picture Campaign, has received word that the scenario plan is to be used in other cities for the benefit of the fund.

Mayor George J. Harb of Columbus, Ohio, has accepted the honorary chairmanship of the committee in his city, and it is reported that the Pittsburgh Screen Club has enlisted a large number of girls in a ticket selling campaign.

In all it is said that more than 500 mayors are acting as honorary chairmen on the committees working in the motion picture end of the campaign.

Los Angeles has already sent in $5,000 and the Vitagraph players in the studio at San Antonio, Texas, have contributed $109. Thomas A. Edison has donated a $250 check. These are only examples of the wide response to the campaign.

BIG NEW INCE PRODUCTION

Methods of Distribution for "He Who Returned," Colossal "Peace" Production, Have Not Yet Been Determined

Thomas Ince's big new peace spectacle, "He Who Returned," has aroused a great deal of anticipation in motion picture circles.

The majority of the inquiries regarding the production seek enlightenment in regard to the methods to be employed in its distribution. Mr. Ince has not, as yet, reached a decision in this matter, although he and Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, are conferring daily concerning the big question of distribution of so large a production. A decision is promised for the coming week.

The musical accompaniment is being prepared by Victor L. Schertzinger with the same care which characterized his beautiful scores for other Triangle-Kay Bee subjects. The score for "He Who Returned" is said to contain selected parts from more than forty different standard musical compositions. Mr. Schertzinger has viewed the production twenty times for the purpose of fitting the music to the play with the greatest effect.

TRIANGLE WORKS HUMMING

President Aitken Gets Interesting Peeks at Forthcoming Productions—Many Favorite Stars Hard at Work

ACCORDING to H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, who has just paid a visit to the coast, the present activity in the Griffith, Ince and Sennet studios, is something cyclonic. The following glimpses of forthcoming plays would seem to bear out that statement.

The Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree production of the classic "Macbeth" is already completed. "The Ayran," "The Beggar of Cawnpore," "Sunshine Dad" and "The Habit of Happiness" are already percolating to the exhibitors.

The latter is the latest Douglas Fairbanks vehicle, directed by Allan Dwan. "Sunshine Dad" features De Wolf Hopper for the second time as a Griffith star with the principals who supported him in "Don Quixote," his screen debut. Fay Tincher will be his foil. William S. Hart leaves, for the time, his western characters in "The Aryan," as the scenes are placed back in the sixteenth century. "The Beggar of Cawnpore" stars H. B. Warner, who in this Sullivan play has a role far removed from one of the matinee-idol type.

At the Keystone studios Mack Sennett has placed Joe Jackson, the tramp cyclist, in "Gypsy Joe," a typical Sennett laugh-getter. With him is featured little Betty Marsh, who appeared with him in his first picture, "A Modern Enoch Arden." The completion of the picture was said to have been delayed several times owing to injuries to members of the cast during some of the rough-and-tumble stunts.

David Wark Griffith himself directed the forthcoming Mae Marsh release, "Hoodoo Ann." The little star is a great favorite wth the big director since "The Birth of a Nation" days, but a long seige of illness has kept her from work until very recently. With Miss Marsh is featured "Bobby" Harron, and in the other principal roles will be found Mildred Harris, Pearl Elmore, Wilbur Higby, Loyola O'Connor, William H. Brown, Charles Lee and Anne Hernandez. In the play Miss Marsh is an orphan asylum heroine who at last marries a fine and fiery young artist.

Bessie Love, who gave glimpses of great ability in "Acquitted" and other productions, is the star in "The Good Bad-Man," which is to be the next Douglas Fairbanks vehicle. In this play it is said that Fairbanks will have to be a regular bucking broncho rider.

"The Children in the House" is to be the title of the new Norma Talmadge feature. In this play all the little Fine Arts juveniles will have delightful roles.

At Ince's Culver City studios H. B. Warner has commenced work in a new Triangle-Kay Bee feature by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which he will be starred with Enid Markey. William Collier, the comedian, is playing the part of an inebriate at Inceville, where he is working opposite Clara Williams in a new Triangle-Kay Bee picture.

Ince is also working William H. Thompson, the veteran character actor, in "Civilization's Child," an original story by the forceful and prolific writer, C. Gardner Sullivan. Anna Lehr co-stars with Thompson in this production. The latter will be remembered for his great work in the Billie Burke vehicle, "Peggy."

In April Triangle will release two new five-reel Douglas Fairbanks comedies; reappearances of Frank Keenan and De Wolf Hopper, and new features containing the work of William S. Hart, Jane Grey, and Lillian and Dorothy Gish. Mack Sennett will turn loose ten Keystone comedies. The April program also includes William Desmond in "Waifs" and Owen Moore and Dorothy Gish in "Little Meena's Romance." The latter picture brings a quaint new realm into photoplays—the life among the Pennsylvania Dutch.

The Chicago board of censors have refused a permit for the showing of the Claridge film, "The Heart of New York." The reason given was that the picture deals entirely with white slavery and corruption connections of police and the underworld.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page"

Episode 10, "The Clew," Essanay Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE various tricks of politicians are exposed in this chapter of the serial featuring Edna Mayo and Henry B. Walthall. Also Dave Pollock (Sidney Ainsworth) and Phillip Langdon (Walthall) are contrasted as campaign speakers, to the credit of Langdon. The mayor of the little town is on the witness stand, and his testimony is very sensational. He recalls the time when Pollock and Langdon were rival candidates for congress. Langdon, it appears, has little difficulty in winning the attention and sympathy of an audience, while the people depart, yawning, from Pollock's dramatic address. Therefore Pollock tries other means to win his cause, and his first effort is to get Langdon out of the way.

The mayor exposes Pollock's vain efforts to bribe Langdon, and the attempt to ruin his reputation, by means of a photograph, taken through a trick, of Langdon in company with a woman of doubtful reputation. This photograph reaches Mary Page. In an attempt to warn Langdon of the plots against him, Mary falls into the enemy's power and is kidnaped. Bound and locked in a room, she manages to telephone to Langdon, and there is a daring rescue. The witness insists that he refused to have anything to do with the plot against Mary.

At the conclusion of the testimony a message reaches Langdon from his detective stating that he has made an important discovery. He has overheard a conversation between members of a gang discussing trouble one of them had with Pollock the night before the murder. One of the men states that he knows Mary Page is not guilty of the murder. This is a clever foreshadowing of events for the next installment.

In interest, acting and photography, chapter ten ranks among the best of the episodes in this fascinating serial.

"The Girl and the Game"

"Helen's Race Against Time," Chapter 14 of the Signal Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE is a different atmosphere in this installment of the serial from that of the other chapters. Helen has returned to her own home, after the dangers of her railroad career. With the money from her share of Superstition Mine, she is again able to take her former place in society. So in this chapter, in the beginning at least, instead of the camp life, we have tennis games, parties, and love-making. Helen is now engaged to Storm, with whom she has gone through so many perils. At least she is engaged to him for a little while. Then she gives a party, inviting Seagrue, at her uncle's request, for Seagrue is the son of Rhinelander's sister. And at the party, Storm is rude to Seagrue, so Helen gives him back his ring.

But after the first reel, with its background of delightful scenery, there is another thrilling rescue for Helen to perform, for she has to save a train from being wrecked. One of those careless operators forgot to deliver a message to a passing train, and as a result a collision is due to occur at the next junction. Storm, Spike and the other guests are on one of the trains, the local, so Helen and Seagrue set out in Helen's automobile to overtake the local. They race with the train, finally running their car across the trains before it, but the engineer thinks they are amusing themselves and will not stop. Then Helen speeds her car to a bridge under which the train will pass. Then, from this bridge, Helen boards the local and uncouples the passenger coach. And at the junction, a few rods distant, the regular passenger train goes between the two sections of the local, just avoiding a crash. So all are saved, but as Seagrue had not proved a very daring aid in the rescue, Helen turns again to Storm.

The race and the other incidents are well managed, and well photographed, and the installment is up to the usual standard.

"The Cycle of Fate"

Selig Drama Released Through V. L. S. E. April 3 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

BESSIE EYTON'S playing is the most attractive feature of this offering. She has not a very long role; she has no scenes of great emotion to portray. But she manages to "put across" charm without affectation in several scenes in a manner decidedly worth noting.

The early part of the play deals with the love and marriage of a sea captain and the daughter of a fisherman in a little seacoast village. The settings include a number of ocean views of unusual beauty. Then, a year later, the young man's ship is wrecked and he is drowned. Shortly afterward, his young wife gives birth to twins, a boy and a girl, and dies. Each of the babies carries a peculiar birthmark on its hand. The children are cared for by their grandfather. The little boy and girl who acted the roles of the twins when about eight years old, deserve mention. They are "real kids." Then the boy runs away and joins a circus.

The next episode of the play introduces us to the twins, grownup. The boy, Joe (Wheeler Oakman), is a burglar just out of prison. The pictures showing his life and his associates introduce us to a number of scenes of low life and to so many criminals of one sort or another that it is with difficulty we follow the thread of the story. The important characters, we discover, are Sid Aldrich, a gang leader, played by Lewis Cody, Boss Kipper (Al Filson), Detective Treem (Fred Hearn), and Mame O'Malley (Marion Warner). Joe loves Mame, who is persuading him to "go straight." Later a Dr. Burton (Marshal Neilan) becomes interested in Joe and through him Joe learns that Mame has tuberculosis and must be taken away from the city. So there is a temptation with Joe to go back to his old life in order to get money for Mame.

Joe's twin sister, Maybelle (Bessie Eyton), is introduced as the school teacher in the sea coast village. The threads of the plot become interwoven when Sid Aldrich, the gang leader, escaping arrest, arrives in the village and is attracted by the charm of the little teacher. Maybelle soon falls in love and is persuaded to elope with him. Aldrich takes her to the city, to the resort of Boss Kipper. There she is drugged, but Joe, who happens to have seen her, recognizes the peculiar birthmark. So she is rescued before any harm comes to her, and with the aid of Doctor Burton she obtains a secretarial position in the city. Then the boss and Aldrich plan to ruin Joe, but after a series of adventures he outwits them and leaves for the west with Mame. And of course the doctor has fallen in love with Maybelle.

The play is entirely one of incident. The characters are in the main well drawn types, but there is no character development. And as an adventure play, the drama suffers from too much material. There are too many characters, too many threads of plot. The main idea, the reuniting of the brother and sister by means of the peculiar mark, is overshadowed by the other incidents.

The photography of the play is good, especially the sea views already mentioned and the short scenes of city street. Marshall Neilan wrote and directed the play. The cast also includes William Machin, Edith Johnson, Frank Clark.

"The Devil, the Servant and the Man"

A Three-Reel Selig Drama Released April 3. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A DREAM is used in this play to awaken the conscience of an erring husband. Dreams play a large part in many photoplays, but we are not always told just why the dreamer had the particular fancy. In this play we know: he went to two plays in one day, to "The Devil," in the afternoon, to "The Servant in the House" in the evening, and the combination resulted in his dream.

Guy Oliver is cast as Franklyn Foster, a surgeon, in this play which Frank Beal directed. Kathlyn Williams is Alice, his wife, and little Jean Fraser plays an important role as their baby. Lillian Hayward is Thelma Gordon, an adventuress. Foster meets Thelma first when she sends for the best surgeon in town to treat her pet dog, injured by an automobile. The noted surgeon, believing that caring for dogs is beneath his skill, is very brusque with Thelma and she resolves to make him fall in love with her. When, a little while later, she reads that Foster has gone into the mountains for a rest, the villainess still pursues him, and arrives at the cabin, with her maid, in the midst of a snowstorm. They are snowbound for several days, and Thelma succeeds in her plan of fascinating Foster.

When they return to the city, Foster neglects his wife to spend his time with Thelma. Then, the evening after he had seen the two plays mentioned, he returns home to find a note from Alice expressing her rebellion against his neglect. He falls asleep and the devil appears in his dream and tells him that his wife is finding amusement without him. Then, after he has been properly frightened, the "Servant" comes to him and reveals the truth, that Alice is loyal to him and is grieving over his conduct. Instead of spending the evening in a gay party, she has fallen asleep over her book, awaiting his return. Then the man wakes up, and there is a happy reconcilation in which the baby plays a part.

The story is not convincing. Foster's infatuation for Thelma is out of key with his character as first presented. Kathlyn Williams as the neglected wife fills the requirements of the role, but has little opportunity for variety of expression. Her scenes with the little girl are pretty. There is good photography in the play, the snow scenes in the mountains being especially beautiful.

"Revelation"

Five-Reel American Mutual Masterpicture. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

UNDER this title, the Sudermann play, "Magda," or "Heimat," is presented, with Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude in the principal roles. As a picture play, it is well presented, but in its emotionalism and in its standards of conduct, it is distinctly of a past generation. The foreign settings, however, aid the play, and we can understand events and the mental attitude of the players in this atmosphere, when we would not accept them in more modern surroundings.

"Magda" was a play of very great appeal, the story of a woman who fought for fame, was beaten for a time, and in the end won both fame and love. The emphasis was placed on the sorrow which came to her, and the audience could enjoy itself weeping over her. It is doubtful whether Miss Crawley's Magda will win many tears from a modern audience. Such emotional temperaments are no longer in style.

The story of the play holds the interest. Although the daughter who leaves home is no longer a curiosity and fathers do not have heart failure because of it, still Magda was a rebel in her time, and rebels are always interesting. And Magda must have a good bit of spirit and determination. If this phase of her character had been emphasized, instead of the emotional, weaker side of her nature, the play would have been more pleasant and interesting.

Magda, who has left home against her father's wishes to study music, is having a hard time in Paris, when the story opens. Then she meets Von Kellar, whom she had known in her home town in Germany, and for a time they are happy together. But Von Kellar begins to tire of Magda and when his father's death calls him home, and he comes into his fortune, he forgets her. Several months later, Magda's child is born, and she now has herself and baby to support. Through the aid of D'Arcy, an operatic manager, Magda becomes a great singer.

These events are unknown to Von Kellar, and to Magda's father and sister, who are shown in their village home. Her father has forbidden Magda's name to be mentioned in the home, and they know nothing of the girl until she arrives as a celebrity in her home town. There she is the guest of honor at the governor's reception and meets Von Kellar. And later she goes to her own home, where she is received, although her father is still suspicious of her and her career.

The father's suspicions are verified when he overhears Magda's denunciation of Von Kellar, when the latter calls upon her. The father insists that Von Kellar marry his daughter, but Magda refuses when Von Kellar specifies that the existence of the child be kept a secret. There is a very dramatic scene, at the end of which the father, overcome by Magda's rebellion, falls dead.

The play ends more cheerfully when, sometime later, Magda, Von Kellar and the baby are reconciled in Paris.

The role of Magda is acted very emotionally from the first scene to the last. While the dramatic, tragic bearing might suit her as a famous singer, it becomes almost monotonous when used throughout. For this reason the play lacks emphasis.

There are a number of dramatic scenes in the play, and the story is clearly told. Arthur Maude, who played Von Kellar, has depicted the character skillfully. Nell Franzen is pleasing as the young sister of Magda. William Carroll, as the father, is convincing, although he has allowed certain mannerisms to become too prominent. Sylvia Ashton, Robert Klein and Jack Farrell have prominent roles.

"I Will Repay"

Three-Reel Essanay Drama Released March 25 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a gruesome but interesting little play. It is presented as a mystery story, and there are a number of effective scenes. The attention is held throughout the play, and the element of suspense is well managed.

The play begins with a short scene between two brothers, in which we learn that the young son of one is to be kept in ignorance of the fact that there is a taint of insanity in his mother's family. And there is one room in the home into which the youngster is never allowed.

Then the story proper begins when the boy, Ralph, is grown up and is called home from college by the death of his father. Complications arise later when the young man wins the love of Virginia Harding, whom his uncle also loves. The older man has in his possession a journal which will explain to the boy the taint in his heredity. He yields to the temptation and shows the book to his nephew, previously tearing out a page which, we are led to suppose, changes the meaning of the text. Ralph is horrified and leaves, without an explanation to Virginia, for a hunting lodge in the woods. There he waits in terror, expecting to become insane.

In the meantime the uncle repents of his crime and tells the truth to Virginia. She learns the location of Ralph's retreat and she and her mother arrive in time to save the boy from becoming insane through his own fears. The uncle meets his punishment when he goes to the fatal room and is locked in the cell.

The weakness of the play lies in the fact that, while interest in the play is aroused, it is not satisfied. We are not shown the missing pages of the journal. If the story that the boy's mother was insane was a lie, what was the mystery of which he was to know nothing? The answer to these questions in which the early scenes of the play aroused interest is not apparent.

John Junior as Ralph has a role calling for more dramatic force than his recent previous parts and he handles it capably. Marguerite Clayton is successful in her portrayal of the girl, while Edward Arnold is well cast as the uncle.

A LITTLE story which cannot be taken too seriously is the theme of this play in which Carl LeVinness has directed Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. Vosburgh is William Wentworth, a young farmer who needs one thousand dollars to meet a payment on his farm. Vivian Rich is Mary Morrison, a rich girl whose property is held in trust for her until she is married. She wishes to control her own fortune at once, and to do this offers William the necessary thousand dollars if he will marry her. He does, and pays for the farm. And Mary begins to spend her inheritance. Although the marriage is one in name only, William is in love with the girl, and wishes to save her from the results of her own extravagance. He and her guardian therefore lead her to think that she has lost her fortune.

William, however, is not a good business man, it seems, for he loses his farm to loan sharks. Then when he and Mary are both reduced to working in a restaurant, the same one, in the city, they become very good friends. William knows that Mary has not lost her fortune, and after a time he goes to her guardian and suggests that she has been taught her lesson. The plot is revealed to her, and although she is angry for a time, in the end she purchases the farm and offers William the position of manager of her affairs.

While there are a number of pretty scenes in the play, and the roles are well played, a more plausible story is needed. The characters and settings merit a better plot.

"The Heart of Paula"

Pallas-Paramount Romance of Mexico with Lenore Ulrich. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE most impressive feature of the Pallas Company's latest offering is its charming photographic effects. At all times one is struck by the beauty of the pictures and the romance which tells of a Mexican girl's love for an American engineer and the villanious schemes of a jealous revolutionist leader. Mexico is an ideal location for the setting of a melodramatic romance, and in "The Heart of Paula" Mexico is brought to the screen in all its natural glory by the cameraman's skill in appropriately lighting his characters and scenes.

In addition to its splendid photography "The Heart of Paula" has Lenore Ulrich in a role for which she is admirably suited. Miss Ulrich is a convincing Mexican maid in appearance and she is interesting in her romantic love scenes with Forrest Stanley, who gives a good performance as Bruce McLean, the American who goes to war-torn Mexico as substitute for his brother-in-law so that his sister may be spared the worry and perhaps her husband, who is an engineer commissioned to investigate some mine property.

"The Heart of Paula" is an enjoyable romance, one which is pleasant all through. It depends little on its dramatic situations, and that is to the advantage of the whole, for they are for the most part of familiar mould and the suspense created by them is mild of nature. Ever so much more interesting are the scenes showing Paula and Bruce meeting for the first time, their romantic flirtation and secret meetings and Paula's jealousy when she sees her lover kiss his sister and believes him already married.

Two endings, a tragic and a happy one, were made for "The Heart of Paula." At the press review both were shown and it was for those invited to judge which would be used when the picture will be the feature at the Strand next week. It has been decided to end "The Heart of Paula" happily, but this does not affect other exhibitors, who, we understand, will have the opportunity to make their choice.

The tragic ending shows the girl, who promised herself to the vicious Emiliano that Bruce may be saved from execution by his soldiers, dead from a self-inflicted wound. In the other ending, Bruce after reaching the border enlists the aid of some American cowboys and returns to Piedro Blanco in time to rescue Paula. The former is perhaps the stronger of the two, it is well presented and touches a dramatic note more effectively than any of the other situations in the play, but when the aversion of audiences for "sad endings" is real and decisive the latter ending is the better. The happy ending may be more conventional than the tragic one, but when one considers all things concerned it is the better way to end "The Heart of Paula."

Howard Davies is good in the heavy role. He does not look exactly as one would expect a person named Emiliano Pacheco to look, but he acts the part. Velma Lefler, Jack Livingstone and Herbert Standing are in the cast.

"The Haunted Manor"

A Five-Part Gaumont-Mutual Masterpicture. Released Week of April 1. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IVA SHEPARD, who is featured in this picture, gives a good account of herself as Zoe Trevor, the adventuress. The story in which she figures, however, would be more valuable were it not so indistinctly presented in parts. Lack of thorough explanation of certain motives and acts is the cause of this shortcoming. The author, C. A. Nelson, has written a story which is capable of a little better manipulation.

A very genuine Indian atmosphere pervades the scenes transpiring in the country of the Rajah and the director has handled the other sets with realism in view. The action is sustained evenly and here and there is a scene of good dramatic strength, the whole making an offering of good entertaining qualities.

Earl Schenck makes a very dashing American lover. Others in the cast are Henry Pemberton, Gertrude Robinson, William H. Hopkins and Olive Trevor.

Zoe Trevor, an American adventuress living in contented luxury as the favorite of an Indian Rajah, meets a vigorous, clean-minded young American artist whose presence inspires better things in her. Before long the two find themselves in love. Zoe, thinking the Rajah has been spying upon her, knifes the form behind a drapery. The eavesdropper, however, happens to be a servant, and the Rajah tells Zoe that unless she marries him at once she will be tried for murder.

Zoe and Pitcairn escape from the country, later to meet in America and become married. The artist knows nothing of his wife's past. Zoe, mortified over her shortcomings, makes it appear that she has been killed and leaves her husband to one more worthy, in the person of Edith Stone. Then comes a battle of wits between Edith and her rival, Celeste, for the affections of Pitcairn.

The supposedly dead wife is hiding at her old manor, awaiting a chance to get out of the country. When the Rajah arrives, bent on revenge, Zoe comes out of her concealment in order to save her husband from violence. After the guilt of the designing Celeste, Pitcairn's model, has been established and the trouble that she creates straightened out, the husband and wife are again united.

"Big Jim Garrity"

Robert Edeson and Eleanor Woodruff in Gold Rooster Play. Reviewed by T. C. Kennedy

FOUNDED on the A. H. Woods play of the same name, "Big Jim Garrity" is a picture wherein one can find much to admire. The story which centers about a man of the fighting type is melodramatic and a bit unreal in places, but it is not a conventional melodrama. There is a movement to the story, an interest in the action and a thrill to Jim's fight with the drug seller which lift the picture far above that which is conventional in melodramatic offerings.

As a stage play "Big Jim Garrity" did not last long on Broadway, but it was tried under unusual conditions. An unsuccessful attempt to give Broadway shows at popular prices was made with this play. But whether or not "Big Jim Garrity" failed as a stage play has no bearing on "Big Jim Garrity" the picture, for the screen as a medium for melodrama is far superior to the stage.

Robert Edeson is just the right kind of a Jim Garrity. Garrity is the owner and operator of a mine in Georgia. He is a man of physical and mental power. Hugh Malone, who sells cocaine to the workmen, is warned that his practice will bring trouble on himself by Garrity, so Malone hits upon a plan to put Jim out of the way. The plot fails. As a result of it Malone shoots and kills a young boy named Craigen, who comes from New York.

Malone accuses Garrity, who is convicted and imprisoned. When he learns that his mother is dying, Garrity escapes, and, encouraged by his friends, he leaves the country. There is a lapse of a few years in which Garrity has become wealthy in South America. Malone and his associate Dawson are living in New York, where they sell cocaine to wealthy young ladies. Unwittingly, Sylvia Craigen, sister of the murdered boy and the daughter of an influential banker, becomes a victom of Malone's cure for nervousness.

Garrity returns to America and is introduced into the Craigen home. He is attracted to Sylvia and his determination to marry her is realized. On the day of the wedding Garrity discovers that Sylvia is addicted to the use of cocaine. In searching for the man who supplies her with the drug he meets Malone. The latter causes Garrity's arrest as an escaped convict, but Big Jim eludes the detectives and forces Malone to confess. Garrity is then released and Sylvia's promise to cease using the drug assures his happiness.

The picture was produced by George Fitzmaurice with his customary skill in putting force into the situations and elaborate scenic effects. Eleanor Woodruff is a well known screen actress and in the past she has rendered many good performances but probably she has never equaled her impressive portrayal of Sylvia Craigen. This part has its difficulties but Miss Woodruff turns them into opportunities. The scene where Garrity discovers that Sylvia is addicted to drugs is powerfully enacted by Mr. Edeson and Miss Woodruff. There are some fine comedy touches in the reception scene. Praise for these scenes, and they honestly deserve praise, should be divided about equally between Mr. Fitzmaurice and Mr. Edeson.

"The Two-Edged Sword"

V. L. S. E. Blue Ribbon Feature Released March 27
Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

GEORGE D. BAKER is the producer of "The Two-Edged Sword," a Blue Ribbon feature in which Edith Storey gives an admirable characterization of Mary Brooks. Mary is a country girl, having always lived on a farm with her parents and brother. The brother, a handsome, attractive type, falls ardently in love with a coquettish young woman who masquerades as a miss in order to have some fun with Jed while she is spending her vacation at the Brooks farm.

Jed is inconsolable when he learns that she is a married woman and he kills himself. This blow fires Mary with the desire for revenge upon the heartless Dorothy Allen. She prepares herself to earn a living in the city, and some few years after Jed's death she is given an opportunity to enter the Allen home as secretary to Dorothy's author husband.

She leaves nothing undone to make Dorothy jealous. She begins by pretending to care greatly for Gordon. From this point on one thing leads to another until Dorothy commands her husband to discharge Mary. But Mary's revenge has led her on until now she is really in love with Gordon and he in love with her, so they find it best to part. Thus the girl's weapon of revenge inflicts a double wound, for the end finds her suffering the pangs of a love which cannot hope for fulfillment.

This theme has depth and the authors, E. V. Brewster and L. C. Russell, have given it treatment that is worthy of the material and the production which Vitagraph has supplied. The story is of excellent construction. This is so of the play in the first three reels in particular. There is constant movement and continuity in the development of character and theme. A story of such material and construction as this is the only foundation upon which a picture up to the standard of "The Two-Edged Sword" can be built.

But as admirable as the play is, it in no way surpasses the direction of Mr. Baker or Edith Storey's acting. In the handling of the situations the director has shown an appreciation of dramatic and artistic effect no less brilliant than in his selection of settings. The backgrounds are realistic and in many cases strikingly beautiful, but not to the extent that they detract from the action.

The Mary Brooks of Miss Storey entitles her to the highest praise. Josephine Earle as Dorothy is splendid in all save the scene where her husband admits that he loves Mary, which she over-acts. Robert Gaillard as Gordon Allen and Evart Overton as Jed do a great deal with their parts. Logan Paul, Marion Henry and Mrs. Nellie Anderson are the other prominent members of the cast.

"The Sowers"

Lasky-Paramount Story of Political Intrigue
Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

OF the feature productions recently released there have been many examples of superior photography but the quality of photography of "The Sowers" places it in a class of its own. The photography is so remarkably fine that we feel that we will readily be excused for giving the technical end of "The Sowers" first mention over the story, direction and acting, as exceedingly good as are those artistic efforts. In this production the characters appear to stand out from the settings, the scenes have such depth and richness of lighting. Rarely does one find exterior and interior scenes so beautiful.

Such photography reveals a production of the best Lasky style and a story of film material well built. "The Sowers" is founded on the novel by Henry Seton Merriman, dealing with Russian political intrigue. It is an absorbing play whose theme is an admirable one for pictures, not only because it requires the screen's scope for the telling but in addition because of the success pictures of this type have already met with. Stories dealing with social revolt have been warmly received by photoplay patrons, as witness Lasky's "The Blacklist."

The adaptation by Marion Fairfax and William C. De Mille's direction permit such players as Blanch Sweet, Thomas Meighan and Theodore Roberts to be seen to advantage. The three players mentioned carry the burden of the acting responsibilities with ease and forceful conviction while the balance of the cast proves entirely adequate.

The story tells of a group of Russian nobles who are the leaders of the Russian League of Freedom, an organization formed to improve the conditions of the oppressed peasants and as it threatened the monarchy it was suppressed. Miss Sweet, as Karin Dolokhof, is a member of the league of which her lover, Prince Paul Alexis, is the leader. The Prince is ordered by the Czar to marry the Princess Tanya. That the league's aims might be realized the Prince and Karin sacrifice their love, and the marriage takes place.

Princess Tanya is in love with Count Strannik, a member of the secret police, but she is anxious to marry Paul on account of his wealth and position. The police spies work well, and they learn that Prince Paul, Karin and her father are the leading spirits of the new movement which is rapidly gaining in strength. Strannik persuades the Princess to betray her husband. This brings about her death and in the end Paul, Karin and her father flee from Russia.

In this picture there are many tense dramatic moments. The beginning of the story is strongly interesting. The opening scenes have a force and while the succeeding scenes do not increase in dramatic power, the interest created in the beginning is maintained. "The Sowers" compares with "The Blacklist" as regards the strength of its story and the production of it is artistically above the average of good feature offerings.

"The Love Liar"

A Five-Part Centaur-Mutual Masterpicture, Released March 27. Reviewed by George W. Graves

AFTER the opening subtitle has informed us in words what a love liar is, this film sets about to depict a love liar of the most pronounced type and one whose subsequent deeds measure up fully with the definition. Crane Wilbur occupies most of the limelight in his portrayal of this masculine social butterfly, perpetually on the wing for new conquest, and treating his broken-hearted victims with sublime indifference.

The theme of the story gives promise of more interest than that aroused by its enactment, but, taken generally, it is consistent and satisfying. There are a number of tense scenes, in the play, notable among these being the furious fight between McCare and the man who is supplanting him in the affections of the dance hall performer.

Each member of the cast is especially well suited to his or her part, making their work harmonious and effective. Fred Goodwins, Lucy Payton, Mae Gaston, Nan Christy and Ella Golden are members of the cast. It is evident that much time and money was spent upon the sets, which are tasteful at all times and elaborate at many.

David McCare, a great violinist, throws over his first love, Margie Gay, for Diana, who in her turn is also cast aside after marriage. The love liar then marries Edna, with whom he has a child. The birth of the latter occasions the mother's death. For her sacrifice she has only the consolation of dying in David's arms after he has been brought from a dance hall by Diana. The latter then takes the child herself.

After being rejected by Arlene, a girl of the dance hall, because his funds are gone, McCare takes to drink and sinks lower and lower. He finally creates a scene in the dance-hall, and kills himself, falling at the feet of Arlene. Although the latter does not love him, she is bribed by Diana to allow McCare to die in her arms. After McCare has expired, poor Diana throws herself upon him, and claims him as her own.

"Sunshine Dad"

De Wolf Hopper in Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

DE WOLF HOPPER'S second screen appearance is in the role of a gay parent whose broad shoulders refuse to be burdened with anything savoring of seriousness. As Alonzo Evergreen, widower and the possessor of a dutiful son, the bulky comedian wins out in the dash for the dashing widow. Mr. Hopper has the support of a good cast which includes Fay Tincher and Chester Withey, but not so with the story. "Sunshine Dad" is amusing but it lacks that elusive something that makes a picture funny.

The story by Chester Withey and Tod Browning is described as an original American comedy. It is a comedy of situations and of these there are perhaps as many which lean toward the French style as anything else when it comes to national characteristics.

"Sunshine Dad" is a mixture of slapstick and straight comedy and though the blending is not of the cleverest, the picture is undeniably entertaining, and that is so of its entire five reels. Mr. Hopper registers many times with his own comedy business. The subtitles are in many cases bright and humorous. The first title takes a knock at the people who read them aloud. A note at the end states that these disconcerting people, to speak of them kindly, "cannot pronounce the Count's name, they can only think it."

"Sunshine Dad" is the story of Alonzo Evergreen. Alonzo, a Thespian, though past the half century mark is a bit wayward and frequently calls upon his loving son for a loan. Alonzo is mightly attracted by the Widow Marrimore, pretty, vivacious and better than either, wealthy. The widow is courted by Count Kotschkoff; he who steals the band of jewels from the neck of Jujab, the god worshipped by a nameless but Orientally revengeful sect.

The jeweled band is given to the widow for safe keeping. Believing it a garter, she wears it appropriately. At the dance the garter slips, and Alonzo finds it. The Mystic Seer and the Doer are on the trail so complications arise speedily and bring with them much trouble for Alonzo. The latter wins the Widow Marrymore when he rescues her from the very jaws of a lion.

Edward Dillon produced the picture. The lion is an important member of the cast and the patience exercised by the director and players, who, we understand, were put to great pains to make Leo act the part of lion and not over-grown taby cat, should feel that they have been well repaid. Jewel Carman, Max Davidson, Raymond Wells and Eugene Pallette are included in the cast.

"Audrey"

Famous Players-Paramount After Mary Johnston's Novel. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

MARY JOHNSTON'S "Audrey" is a story which admits of picturesque treatment and in filming this novel the Famous Players recognized the fact and made artistic use of it. There is in "Audrey" much delightful color of romance and wild nature. Director Vignola, working from a commendably written scenario by Harriet Ford and E. F. Broddington, placed the action in settings of striking beauty and surrounded the players with an appealing atmosphere.

Pauline Frederick is Audrey, the girl who following an Indian incursion is left an orphan; an object of charity in a community where benevolence is extended grudgingly between the moments when meanness is not dealt out with a free hand. This role differs greatly from those which Miss Frederick has hitherto essayed and the star's popularity with screen audiences will suffer no ill effects from the change from adventuress to that of innocent beauty harassed by the gossip and uncharitable deeds of narrow neighbors.

Miss Frederick proves that she can convey the emotions of an Audrey quite as convincingly and effectually as those of a "Zaza." This will come as a surprise to none save, perhaps, those producers who stubbornly hold to the belief that once an adventuress always an adventuress, which is a fallacy. The public does not make such demand, or at least to the extent these producers think, and if the actress wins popularity she must have magnetism and a certain amount of ability to portray characters, which is the answer to any fears regarding her success in a "different" role.

"Audrey" is the story of an orphan girl who is left in care of an old couple by her guardian. The girl is mistreated. Clad in rags, the beautiful Audrey grows up a mere child of nature. She is looked upon with more or less contempt by her neighbors. When she again meets her guardian, the handsome and wealthy Lord Haward, there is immediately felt a strong mutual attraction. The friendship which later exists between Haward and his ward is considered in the light of a liaison. Audrey's denunciation by the minister during public service and the church people's attempt to further humiliate the girl brings Lord Haward to firmly tell these people that they will be accountable to him for a repetition of any such actions, because Audrey is indeed the future Lady Haward.

Charles Waldron's Lord Haward shares the acting honors with the Audrey of Miss Frederick. Mr. Waldron makes his part a very attractive one. Margarete Christians is a pretty and ever pleasing Evelyn. E. Fernandez, Jack Clark, Helen Lindrith and Henry Hallam do well with their parts.

"The Lost Bridegroom"

John Barrymore the Star in Famous Players-Paramount Offering. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

JOHN BARRYMORE'S acting, the delightful settings which characterize all Famous Players productions, and for the quality of its photography "The Lost Bridegroom" is enjoyable entertainment. Mr. Barrymore suffers that dramatic ailment, loss of memory, as a result of a blow on the head, and after disappointing the bride and guests at the moment of his intended marriage he falls in with a band of crooks who instruct him in the art of safe opening. All this Mr. Barrymore does with his usual effectiveness, and he does more. He adds color and spirit to several scenes made up of nothing in particular.

The story is a secondary matter when John Barrymore enacts its leading character. This is the accepted thing with both spectators and producers. Whether the story is conventional of material and construction makes little difference as long as John Barrymore has an opportunity here and there to be the master of the situation. One could hardly say that there is anything novel about this romance, the authorship of which is credited to Willard Mack.

Mr. Barrymore is Bertie Joyce, who fails to appear at Dorothy Hardin's home at the hour his marriage to her is scheduled to take place, or many hours thereafter. But this is through no fault of Bertie's. As far as things of the past are concerned his mind is the blankest of the blank. Bertie, not knowing who or where he is, finds shelter and food in the establishment of Black McQuirk. The latter believes he has a good investment in this gentleman who has every appearance of being wealthy.

But nobody offers rewards for information regarding the star boarder, so McQuirk turns him over to Slim Denny to be instructed in the business of opening safes. Bertie is an apt pupil—a few lessons and he is proficient in the art. Then McQuirk and his band plan a robbery. Madge McQuirk has grown very fond of Bertie and rather than have her father make a crook of him she notifies the police that a certain place is to be broken into that night. They take Bertie to the Hardin home, where another blow on the head brings back his memory.

The supporting cast is praiseworthy. Katherine Harris is Dorothy, June Dale is Madge, and Ida Darling is cast as Dorothy's mother. Hardie Kirkland as McQuirk, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young and Jack Dillon complete a thoroughly good cast. There is realism in the fight Bertie has with his captors in the closing scenes. Mr. Barrymore and one of his antagonists perform a daring tumble down a flight of stairs. The interiors of the bride's home are particularly attractive, with the wedding, or near wedding, the most pretentious.

"The Iron Claw"

Fourth and Fifth Episodes. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

CHAPTERS four and five of "The Iron Claw," entitled "The Name and the Game" and "The Incorrigible Captive," respectively, carry the brisk melodramatic action and remarkably high standard of production promised by the opening episode of this Pathe serial, produced by the Feature Film Corporation from the story by Arthur Stringer. The story, scenarioized by George B. Seitz, is receiving, in addition to the character portrayals by a cast of vastly popular serial players, an elaborately realistic picturization by the producers, who go to great lengths in the attempt to make the scenes striking.

In "The Name and the Game," Legar robs the bank where Golden has large deposits. He determines to do this when he sees a note written to Golden by the Laughing Mask, threatening to rob the vaults unless Golden will better the condition of the tenements he owns. Thus culpability for the audacious robbery falls on the "mysterious wrong-righter," as he is called in one of the titles. Manly, Golden's secretary, sets the police on Legar's trail, but it is due to the Laughing Mask that the funds taken from the vault are returned.

In matters of helping Margery when the vengeful Legar seeks to injure her the Laughing Mask has a formidable rival in the parrot formerly owned by malevolent Iron Claw. That is in the events which "The Incorrigible Captive," chapter the fifth, depicts the parrot rivals the unknown enemy of Legar in aiding Margery. It is the parrot which causes the explosion in Legar's den near the river, causing a flood in the secluded cellar and permitting Manly to escape. And, too, the polly, little knowing the importance of its squawks, repeats the combination of the safe in which Legar had imprisoned Margery. The Laughing Mask is seen in this chapter. He regains the important paper taken from the safe in Golden's home by Legar, and he returns it to Margery.

In these two chapters there is much action—quick action of the kind which has proven the mainstay of continued photoplays. That the cast is made up of players who can center the interest in the important characters is, of course, well known. Also that Pearl White's type of beauty is eminently suited to the screen was never more apparent than in these latest episodes.

It is the sympathy felt for Margery, who Miss White makes so attractive, that will make the dramatic occasions of the story more exciting than the incidents themselves really are. And it is the same with Manly as played by Creighton Hale, the relentless Legar of Sheldon Lewis and the many novel means by which mingled curiosity and sympathy have been worked up for the Laughing Mask, which, more than anything else, are responsible for the wide popularity of the continued photoplay. In the face of these attractions improbable developments fade to mere nothingness.

"Bonds of Deception"

Three-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released April 9 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN INTERESTING story, well told, with a number of pretty scenes, is this American release, in which Thomas Ricketts has directed a cast led by Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood. The plot deals with a young woman who believes her husband is dead, and a man who loves her but who knows that her husband is living, yet is not at liberty to tell her. Without confusion or straining for effect, the complications arising from this situation are effectively handled.

Major Baring's son has been sent west under an assumed name in order that he may break with his evil associates and overcome his evil tendencies. But instead, he gets into trouble in the west and is serving a prison term. His father, sympathizing with his son's young wife, who, with their little girl, is awaiting for Baring's return, orders Allan Gifford, editor of a newspaper, to publish an account of his son's death.

The story begins when Major Baring summons the editor, who was a college chum of his son, and tells him the story. There are several dissolves in this account which tell little that the subtitles do not state, but one, the picture of the imprisoned man in a precarious state of health, prepares us for the outcome of the story.

Believing her husband dead, Mara Baring becomes interested in George White. Both are visiting at a summer resort to which Gifford is sent to recover from overwork. Gifford, knowing that the published statement of young Baring's death was a lie, is alarmed and tries to break up the friendship, with the result that Mara falls in love with the editor.

This state of affairs is as bad as the first, especially as Gifford is in love with Mara. He at once goes to the major, who tells him that since the publication of the story, the son had died and that Mara is free.

The play is prettily photographed. Little Virginia Fordyce, as Mara's daughter, adds to the charm of the story. She acts delightfully and naturally. Dick La Reno is the major, Jack Farrell the son and George Field is George White.

"Then I'll Come Back to You"

World Film-Frohman Offering, Featuring Alice Brady Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

ALICE BRADY, though featured in this production, runs second to Mr. Jack Sherrill. This is principally because Mr. Sherrill has been given a part where he has a little more to do than Miss Brady. We would like to have seen her a little more intense in her likes and dislikes, because she is the more charming when she is very angry or unusually affectionate. She should not conceal her feelings from us so much at times when we are just dying to know which fellow she likes the best.

Young Mr. Sherrill had his work cut out for him, there is no doubt about that. A man who bosses a construction job in the timber regions has got to be a fighter. That is the kind of a part Mr. Sherrill had, and it surely kept him busy chastising trouble-makers around the camp. It was the kind of part that William Farnum would like to get, because it was plentifully sprinkled with fights. Mr. Sherrill being a husky young man, was a most convincing fighter, even in a lumber camp. It seems that his existence in this story is crowded with fights. In the very beginning, as a little boy, he starts the action going by licking another boy. The production ends in a gun fight, and he is obliged to tell the young lady of his heart that he will probably have to have many more fights as long as he is on the construction job.

It is a play of action told amid the glorious Adirondack Mountains with splendid distances and rugged realism. It tells of a little mountain waif who was picked up by a well-to-do family, after the death of his rugged old foster-father. A little girl comes to visit the family, and an attachment springs up. There is a quarrel between the adopted boy and another boy over the little girl. The adopted boy gives the other one a thrashing. Seeing that the little girl dislikes him for fighting, he tells her that he is going away, and when he has made good, will come back to her.

Ten years pass. The lad is seen in charge of a railroad construction camp in the lumber district. By this time the girl has grown to be a very pretty young woman, and is impersonated by Miss Brady, Mr. Sherrill playing the part of the adopted boy grown up. It happens that just before their meeting Miss Brady becomes engaged to another man. And it also happens that he is the villain who is trying to prevent the railroad from being finished on a certain day, and finds that his principal opponent is Jack Sherrill, the young engineer who is putting the road through. One day the young engineer remembers that he said to his childhood sweetheart, "Then I'll come back to you." He visits her and finds that she has remembered him all this time, but he is too late.

The remainder of the picture shows how the young engineer brings to light the evil practices of his rival, and though everything looks hopeless for his love affair with the young lady, things break right for him quite suddenly as the picture ends.

From the time the picture begins, the interest never wanes, but increases according to the skillful construction of the story. The interior scenes are unusually tasty, and the photography is first class all the way through. The acting and directing deserve some credit also. It is a harmonious offering with all departments contributing a proper proportion to an excellent result.

METRO HAPPENINGS

Many and Varied Just Now Are the Activities in the Metro Camps—Incidents and Announcements

CHARLES A. Taylor, a gifted and prolific playwright, who has written more than fifty successful stage plays, including "Yosemite," "Held for Ransom," and other successful dramas, has joined the Metro scenario staff and will devote his talents exclusively to writing for that company. Besides his numerous personal successes on the speaking stage, Mr. Taylor is responsible for the success of a host of other plays. With his fertile imagination and remarkable ingenuity he has been able to suggest and direct startling big scenes for other dramatists, making sensational hits out of plays that otherwise would have bene failures. Many prominent playwrights admit that their early success was due to Mr. Taylor.

Among the first works of Mr. Taylor on the screen, for the Metro company, are "A Corner in Cotton," in which Marguerite Snow is starred, and "What Will People Say?" with Mme. Petrova in the stellar role. He has also served in an advisory capacity on the making of other Metro wonderplays.

Vera Pearce, one of the most striking young models in New York, who has posed for Charles Dana Gibson, Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, J. Campbell Phillips, Harry Watrous, Herbert A. Morgan, and other famous artists, and whose pretty face has graced the leading magazines of the country, has answered the call of motion pictures and is now appearing exclusively in Metro productions. Miss Pearce was last seen with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Man and His Soul," and before that with Julius Steger in "The Blindness of Love."

William Nigh, Metro's versatile director, announces that his next production will be a five-part feature called "Cassidy." Mr. Nigh will not only direct this production, but will be starred in it, besides being the author of the story. Marguerite Snow, the charming and gifted artist, will be co-starred with Mr. Nigh in "Cassidy."

Miss Mabel Taliaferro has just concluded work on "Her Great Price," which the Rolfe Photoplays Inc. made for the etro program. Her next starring vehicle will be "The Snowbird." It is the first time that Miss Taliaferro has appeared in a story dealing with the northland, and in this play she will have to drive a team of six Esquimo dogs.

It has become necessary to build a studio within a studio at the Rolfe-Metro motion picture plant, where Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are at work on the one-reel Metro-Drew comedies. There are usually four or five big feature producing companies at work on the same floor, making Metro productions, and sometimes, when big courtroom or similar scenes are in production, there are from three to five hundred persons on the studio floor. So Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe-Metro studios, has enclosed one corner of the big studio floor especially for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. As funny as Mr. and Mrs. Drew are on the screen, they are even more so while at work. Consequently, they invariably attract so large a crowd around their set, that it is almost impossible for them to work.

O. A. Lund, one of Metro's newest directors, who produced "The Price of Malice," starring Hamilton Revelle, has gone to Port Henry, New York, to make exteriors for "Dorian's Divorce," in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. The company of players appearing in support of Mr. Barrymore is a strong one and includes Grace Valentine, Edgar Davenport, and half a score of prominent stage and screen artists.

Ilean Hume, the pretty and vivacious young girl who has appeared in half a dozen Metro productions, was late for work while working in "The Kiss of Hate," the forthcoming Columbia-Metro wonderplay, in which Ethel Barrymore is starred. Director William High took her to task for holding up more than twenty-five players in the picture. She declared her "husband" was to blame, and as no one knew she was married, therein lies a deep secret of the Metro studios.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Gladys Hulette narrowly escaped injury in a scene for "The Flight of the Duchess" when a rope of sheets, on which she makes her escape, parted and let her fall about twenty feet.

The cast supporting Iva Shepard in "The Haunted Manor," a Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, includes Earl O. Schenck, Henry Pemberton, Gertrude Robinson and Olive Trevor.

In "The Isle of Love," Gertrude McCoy plays the role of a comic opera star who visits a fishing village to study types for her next production. She wins the love of a sea captain away from a village girl. Later the three are shipwrecked and cast on a desert island.

Antonio Moreno, the Vitagraph star, was born in Madrid, Spain. He came to America when fourteen years old.

"The Quality of Faith," Gaumont play featuring Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson, deals with the evolution in the character of a fashionable minister who comes in touch with the laboring classes during a big strike.

Gertrude McCoy, who lately joined the players at the Gaumont-Mutual studios, began her picture career under D. W. Griffith at the Biograph studio. Later she was with Edison.

Scenes taken in one of the big cotton mills of Anniston, Ala., are a feature of the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, "The Quality of Faith," directed by Richard Garrick. Scores of employes of the mill appear in the picture.

Marion Swayne, who created the role of James Montgomery Flagg's "Kitty Cobb," and who played last season with the Gaumont company on the United program, appears in the Thanhouser Mutual Masterpicture, "The Net."

One of the most beautiful summer mansions along the Hudson was used for the castle scenes in "The Flight of the Duchess," Thanhouser Mutual Masterpicture featuring Gladys Hulette.

The cast chosen to support Gertrude McCoy in "The Isle of Love," which Edwin Middleton will produce at the Gaumont Jacksonville studio, includes Earl O. Schenck as a young sea captain, Robert Clugston as a wealthy man of the world, Iva Shepard, the belle of a fishing village; Charles Travis, a theatrical manager, and W. J. Butler, the captain of a schooner.

Helen Gibson is more frightened when watching herself on the screen in the "Hazards of Helen" than when actually doing the stunts.

Ethel Teare's beauty secret: "Plenty of laughs."

"Feathertop," the Gaumont picture featuring Marguerite Courtot, is adapted from the Hawthorne story by Paul M. Bryan. Henry J. Vernot is directing the play.

"The Net," featuring Marion Swayne and Bert DeLaney, deals with the old fishing coast superstition that disaster will come to anyone saving a living thing from the sea. Miss Swayne has an ingenue part, while Ethel Jewett is seen in the heavy role.

Clara Kimball Young has started a new fad, of tinting the finger-nails to harmonize with the color scheme of the gown.

Percy Pembroke is a new leading man with the Kalem "Hazards of Helen" serial.

Rose Melville has received several offers from theatrical managers who wish her to bring "Sis Hopkins" back to the stage.

The "Iron Claw" actors recently gave a thrill to a crowd in New York, when they staged a fight scene on the top of the tower of the thirty-seven-story Park Row building.

It isn't the stunt part of the "Hazards of Helen" serial which worries Helen Gibson. It is the fact that her role of a telegraph operator gives her no opportunity to wear pretty clothes.

"Lady," the collie who plays leading roles in Thanhouser productions, is valued at $2,000.

Louise Bates, lately featured as "The Falstaff Girl," makes her dramatic debut in "The Water Devil," a Thanhouser play in which she has the heavy role.

Kathryn Adams, star in the Mutual Masterpicture, "A Bird of Prey," studied for grand opera before going into pictures.

Harry Revier, consulting director with the Popular Plays and Players, has been in the motion picture business for eighteen years. He worked on the first motion pictures ever made, including the Passion Play and his famous "A Trip to the Moon."

Clara Kimball Young, the winner of so many popularity contests, is in the lead in one being held in Toronto, Canada.

Charles A. Taylor, now on the Metro scenario staff, at one time had fourteen dramas playing in and out of New York. His play, "Yosemite," is still being produced in stock.

"Beauty," the circus horse recently purchased for Helen Gibson in "The Hazards of Helen," is homesick for the sawdust ring, Miss Gibson says.

Harry Edwards, well known as a screen comedy producer, is directing the Ham and Bud Kalem series. William Beaudine, who has been staging them, is directing the Ethel Teare company.

Roy Applegate, who plays the giant, "Goliath," in "The Kiss of Hate," in which Ethel Barrymore stars, weighs 270 pounds and is six feet three inches in height.

P. Thad Volkman, assistant director at the Columbia-Metro studio, presented his wife, Mae De Metz, with a Victrola for her birthday. As he was out of the city that day, working on a picture, he sent a special record of greetings and felicitations.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison make their first appearance in Metro pictures in "The Come-back."

Benjamin Beyer, assistant manager at the Popular Plays and Players studios, is a pipe fancier and has a collection of more than a hundred.

Vera Pearce, who has posed for the most famous artists in the country, is now playing in Metro pictures.

The Lubin company, which has purchased the photoplay rights to the Rex Beach novels, "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde" and "The Iron Trail," invites readers to submit suggestions for an ideal cast for the filming of these stories.

Alice Brady has begun work on a five-reel picture called "Her Great Sacrifice," at the Peerless Fort Lee studios. Travers Vale is directing.

Regarding the reported combination of Mutual, Metro, General, Paramount, V. L. S. E., and Universal, later advices seem to indicate the report is decidedly premature. A number of the companies already have denied that they have even been approached on the subject. However, even these denials may be taken "with a grain of salt." Perhaps a fair statement of what really has occurred would be that negotiations have been entered into looking toward a combination of eight of the leading distributing organizations with their attendant manufacturing facilities. Progress has been made, but no definite combination effected at this writing. It seems to be the consensus of opinion that some combination would be the logical method of cutting down the huge expenditures necessary to produce pictures on the scale now in vogue throughout the United States. Film men, as a rule, are pretty good traders, and also, as a rule, have not been blessed with any too superlative sense of economy. They, however, lately have been compelled to follow more closely the business methods of other industries and are now beginning to know the necessity of eliminating the extravagances that heretofore have obtained.

Mutual Film Corp: Preferred and common have both advanced to sales at 45.

American Film Co. Inc.: Is reported to be earning a larger gross than at any time in the history of the company.

LOUISE OWEN VOGUE "HEAVY"

Louise Alva Owen, vampire (on the screen) is the pretty, brunette girl who plays "heavies" in Vogue comedies under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Miss Owen is the athletic type who would much rather take long walks in the foothills than sit a home doing embroidery or playing with the cat.

Louise Owen.

Prior to her signing up with Vogue, Louise acted important roles in both comedy and drama companies on the Pacific Coast, and is graduated from Broadway, having played in several Winter Garden productions.

Having finished "The Race," starring Victor Moore, George Melford, the Lasky producer, and his assistant, Claude Mitchell, have gone on a vacation.

Henry King, who directed "Little Mary Sunshine," has just finished a western five-reeler, "The Strugglers," in which he played lead, and is beginning "A Message from the Dead," for which some interesting theatrical scenes are being built. He will direct and take the leading role in this, also.

Grace Cunard has added the thirteenth number to her collection of dogs, a white Scotch collie, which she calls "Peg," in honor of her new serial, "Peg o' the Ring," a story of circus life.

For the first time in her career, Edna Maison assisted in directing a picture, "Alias Jane Jones," in which she took the lead. Miss Maison states that she prefers acting to directing, however.

Richard Stanton is working on the eighteenth episode of the "Graft" serial, "The Hidden City of Crime."

Charles Franz has replaced Louis Chaudet as director of the E. and R. Jungle comedies. Mr. Franz has been producing comedies for the past six years, having been with Edison, Selig and Keystone.

Wallace Reid, who played Don Jose in the Lasky production of "Carmen," in which Geraldine Farrar made her first picture appearance, plays the leading man in Miss Farrar's next photoplay, "Maria Rosa," released on the Paramount program May 15.

Under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille, Marie Doro is completing her work in her first Lasky picture. Miss Doro remains on the Paramount program, as she appeared formerly in Famous Players productions.

Blanche Sweet is taking a short vacation in San Diego before beginning her next photoplay production, under William C. DeMille's direction.

Mae Murray, attempting to steer her automobile out of the garage recently, smashed the fender, a few lamps and the running-board.

Lillian Hayward, during a period of six weeks, played an adventuress in "The Devil, the Servant and the Man," a mulatto in "At Piney Ridge," and a society leader in a play as yet unnamed.

Bessie Eyton and Jack Pickford are featured in a light comedy, "A Strange Adventure," a one-reeler written and directer by Marshall Neilan.

In "Pasquale," George Beban's latest play, Myrtle Stedman has a role with a good chance to display her acting ability. Helen Eddy is also doing good work. Others in the cast are Page Peters, Jack Nelson and Nigel deBrullier.

"Derelicts," an American picture which Frank Borzage is directing, contains a mystery plot. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat are in the cast.

Art Acord, Dixie Stratton, Lawrence Peyton and John Prescott have the leading roles in "Margy of the Foothills," a three-reel American feature.

"She Wasn't That Kind of a Girl" is the title of a Vogue comedy which Jack Dillon is producing, with Ruddy McQuire, Russ Powell, Priscilla Dean and Louise Owen in the cast.

Anna Little plays the role of a dance hall girl in the two-reel drama, "The Awakening."

Winnifred Greenwood, Franklin Ritchie, Eugenie Forde, Clarence Burton and Roy Stewart appear in a five-act American Mutual Masterpicture, "None So Blind," which Edward Sloman has directed. An artist's objection to his wife's stage career forms the plot.

Kenneth B. Clarke has written the story of "Silent Selby," a three-part "Mustang," with Anna Little, Jack Richardson and Thomas Chatterton in the cast.

WAR VETERAN AN ACTOR

Lieutenant Victor De Linsky, who was wounded in the Russo-Japanese war, decorated for bravery and given an honorable discharge, has just finished playing an important role in "The Kiss of Hate," a Metro wonderplay of Russian romance and intrigue in which Ethel Barrymore is starred. The lieutenant proved a valuable asset to Director William Nigh, who consulted with him in many matters pertaining to Russian costumes and correct settings.

The lieutenant was born in 1883, and was educated at the National Military Victor De Linsky, Metro.

Academy of Russia. For six years he served in the Imperial Russian cavalry.

Lieutenant De Linsky came to America soon after making his stage debut. He has played heavy leads and character parts for the last year with George Kleine, appearing in such well known productions as "The Social Law," "Tainted Blood," and "A Woman's Mistake." He is a linguist, fencer, rider, and swimmer.

pleted the field work on "April," the five-reel American Masterpicture featuring Helene Rosson. E. Forest Taylor, Harry Von Meter, Louise Lester and Harry McCabe are in the cast. Clifford Howard wrote the play.

Anna Little is busy training her new mount, which is to replace "Ranger," recently killed in an accident.

"The Raiders," starring H. B. Warner, is the first product on the Triangle program from the new studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The scenes include a stage setting which is a replica of the New York Stock Exchange.

"Four Months," a three-reel "Flying A" drama which Director Carl LeViness has completed, is the story of a young millionaire who, having but four months to live, sets out to find someone worthy to inherit his fortune. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat play the leads.

"The No-Good Guy," the Triangle-Kay-Bee feature starring William Collier, introduces William Collier, Jr., to the screen. He plays the role of an office boy.

Marguerite Nichols appears for the first time in a Mutual release in "The Masterpiece," a two-part drama by Nathan P. Oak, directed by Thomas Ricketts. Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorn and Charles Newton play the leading roles.

Since several motion picture exhibitors have been arrested on a charge of overcrowding their theaters when Fanny Ward in the Lasky play, "The Cheat," was being shown, the Lasky company offers to pay all such fines.

An old-fashioned country newspaper office is the principal setting for "The Man from Manhattan," a five-reel drama by J. Edward Hungerford which Jack Halloway is directing. Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell, Jack Prescott, Warren Ellsworth, Perry Banks, Joe Taylor and Charles Wheelock form the cast.

Thirty extras were required for the fight scene in "The Shuffle," an American three-reeler with Edward Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood and George Field in the leading roles.

Robert and Jack Dillon are combining talents for Vogue comedies. Robert writes the comedies which his brother directs.

Manager Crone of the Vogue company has had the outside of the studio repainted, the dressing rooms smartened up, and has established his own office in the midst of things.

Crane Wilbur has a specially equipped car, possessing a complete dressing room, refrigerator and heating plant.

Anita King's transcontinental automobile trip forms the theme of "The Race," in which Victor Moore is starred. Hector Turnbull and Clinton H. Stagg wrote the story.

George Webb was seriously injured in a scene for the "Flying A" film, "The Wayfarers," in a collision between a motorcycle and an automobile. Webb was riding the motorcycle.

Members of the company supporting William H. Thompson in the Triangle-Kay Bee feature in which he is starred captured a twenty-foot shark off the coast of California, where they had gone for scenes for the play, a story of an English fishing village.

The interior of a New York theatrical boarding house is reproduced in the next Triangle-Kay Bee feature in which Raymond B. West is directing Bessie Barriscale and William Desmond.

Especially beautiful interior settings characterize the play featuring Frank Keenan which Charles Giblin is now directing at the Ince Culver City studios. Louise Glaum, Charles Ray, Gertrude Claire and George Fisher appear in the play, written by J. G. Hawks.

Inceville's Indians, one hundred of them, recently entertained a gathering of Shriners in Los Angeles with folk dances, according to a program arranged by their supervisor, W. A. Brooks.

Bessie Love appears as a little slum girl in the next Douglas Fairbanks picture. A. D. Sears and Joseph Singleton have important roles. Roy Somerville wrote the story, which William Christy Cabanne is directing.

Victor L. Schertzinger is writing the music for the Thomas H. Ince feature, "He Who Returned." The score, to date, is longer than that of the average opera and contins forty different themes.

Ashton Dearholt, of the American Film Company, is taking a vacation for the first time in over a year.

Nell Shipman is in Pasadena working on scripts. She expects to complete four photodramas.

Henry King, the Balboa actor-director, has completed a five-reeler, "The Strugglers," in which he played the lead, and has begun another five-reel play, "A Message From the Dead," in which he plays lead and directs.

J. P. McGowan, director of the Helen Holmes company, recently received word of the death of his brother, Lieutenant Thomas E. McGowan, on a European battlefield.

The second producing company at the Signal studios, under Murdock J. MacQuarrie, has completed "Nancy's Birthright," a five-reeler featuring Edythe Sterling. MacQuarrie plays a leading role in the cast, which includes Millard K. Wilson, Norbert A. Myles and V. T. Henderson.

David Kirkland has returned to Universal City as co-director with Robert Leonard. Gladys Brockwell will play leads in his company.

Norma Talmadge is working in a Fine Arts play written by Bernard McConnville. Ralph Lewis and Eugene Pallette have important roles.

Director Lynn Richards is filming an Arabian play at Oxnard, Cal. Myrtle Gonzales is featured as the daughter of an Arabian merchant. Val Paul and Frederick Church are in the cast.

Scenes were taken aboard the steamer "Congress," in Los Angeles harbor, for "The King of Broadway," the Universal play starring Carter De Haven. W. J. Bowman is the director.

The historic Zuni pueblo in Arizona was loaned by the government to the Biograph company for scenes of Indian life in "The Stampede." In the play Charles Perley and Linda Arvidson are shown surrounded by a stampeding herd of cattle.

SOUTHERN NOTES

By William Noble

The photoplay, "Inspiration," has started a protest from the local board of censors at Guthrie, Okla. It was shown in defiance of an order from Chief of Police W. H. Mitchell. The proprietor of the theater showing it has been arrested and will have a trial in the police court.

The Grand theater at Ennis, Texas, one of the best in the southwest, is having an additional story and gallery added, together with boxes. The improvements will cost about $8,000.

Wortham will be the first town in Texas to show the working of the post-office department in motion pictures when, on April 14, a film descriptive of the working of the department in Washington, D. C., in every branch, will be shown.

The New Liberty theater has been opened at Oklahoma City at a cost of about $90,000. The Liberty is strictly modern and up to date and would be a credit to any of the larger cities of the United States. Feature film pictures will be run.

BRITISH TRADE GOSSIP

The Theaters and Music Halls Committee of the London County Council is not in favor of the proposed closing of Sunday motion picture shows. It points out the uplifting influence of the pictures as an entertainment.

The managers of the picture theaters in Doncaster have been unusually successful recently and packed houses have greeted the Famous Players' productions, "Rags," "A Girl of Yesterday" and "Sold," and the Metro plays, "The Vampire" and "The Heart of a Painted Woman."

Copies of "The Diamond From the Sky" serial have just arrived at the Gaumont offices.

Showings of the first chapters of "Stingaree," the romantic serial by E. H. Hornung, have aroused much interest.

Hertfordshire theaters report a great interest in picture serials. "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Broken Coin" and "The Zudora Mystery" are delighting audiences.

Classes are being formed in Glasgow, Scotland, to teach women to operate motion picture machines, thus to take the place of the operators who are called to the front.

Simeon B. Griever, the general manager of the General Feature Film Company, has concluded arrangements whereby his concern will release all Ivan Film Company productions.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Three Friends—Biograph Re-issue—April 3.—Featuring Henry B. Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Jack Dillion, Blanche Sweet and Harry Carey. Joe's marriage comes as a surprise to Tom and Bill, with whom he had sworn that no woman should ever break up the bachelor's club. Tom cannot forgive Joe, and when he is made foreman of the shop he picks a quarrel with Joe and discharges him. The family is on the verge of starvation when Bill comes back to town, and hearding by chance what Tom did, reaches Joe's house in time to avert a tragedy, and thereafter the club meet regularly in Mrs. Joe's parlor instead of Heinie's saloon.

The Fatal Bean—Lubin—April 3.—Featuring Davy Don. Old Hiram Applecore lies dying, but when he gets a whiff of baking beans he begs of Miranda, the cook, for a spoonful of them. At first he is only able to eat the tiniest fraction of the bean, but as the first installment of the food reaches the gastronomic apparatus he revives and at the sixth spoonful he is able to get out of bed and dress. Applecore decides to exploit what he thinks is a great discovery and he and Miranda buy up all the beans in the neighborhood and has her undertake the task of baking beans. He converts the result of Miranda's cooking into pills and then rides into town, disguised as a doctor, sets up a platform and then expounds the value of his discovery. Later, however, he is thrown into jail for practicing without a license and is fed on beans, much to his discomfiture.

The Devil, the Servant and the Man—(Three Reels)—Selig—April 3.—Guy Oliver, Kathlyn Williams and Lillian Hayward featured. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

Under Royal Patronage—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 4.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Bryant Washburn, Thomas Cummerford and E. H. Calvert. Francis, reigning Prince of Hofgarten, writes his nephew Philip that he must marry Stella, Princess of Stretlitzberg. Philip, who has fallen in love with another girl to whom he has never disclosed his royal birth, has a friend, Richard Savage, an American, to pose as himself. Philip marries his sweetheart of humble birth, and they journey to Stretlitzberg, as only eighteen hours remain before he becomes of age. They arrive just as Richard and Stella are to take the vows and then it is that Philip learns his wife is the real princess, she having substituted her friend, Helen Churchill of Philadelphia, in her place. When this is all explained the bishop performs a double ceremony.

The Return of James Jerome—(Two Reels)—Lubin—April 4.—Lamar Johnstone, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Violet MacMillan and Adda Gleason featured. Cal McCall, assistant shipping clerk in the office of Roger Winton, a wealthy ship owner, quarrels over some bills with Diston, the old head clerk, and is discharged. Diston is murdered by Winton, and Cal, who is passing Diston's home at the time, is knocked down by Winton, and the latter has Moore take him aboard the Vinnie, which sails that night. The next day Cal is suspected of the murder. He escapes from the Vinnie and is picked up on the beach by a native, who nurses him back to health. Some years later Cal returns a rich man and is known as James Jerome. Cal breaks Winton on the stock exchange and the latter is forced to accept a position in the shipping office he once owned. Cal, now living in Winton's home, invites them to a reception and shows them his collection of pearls. Later Winton is killed by Cal's butler while attempting to steal the pearls, and before the assembly of guests Cal states his true identity and finds happiness in Joyce Winton.

Paths That Crossed—(Three Reels)—Biograph—April 5.—Featuring Claire McDowell, Charls H. Mails, Vola Smith and Jose Ruben. Oh! Oh! Oh! Henery!!!—(Two Reels)—Falstaff—April 4.—With J. C. Yorke and Francis Keyes. Henery's indiscreet flirtations with the stenographer never get back to his wife, but John is not so lucky. John is really innocent, but a busybody continually finds him in seemingly compromising positions and reports them to his wife. Finally the latter and some of her busybody friends, among whom is Henery's wife, start on a scouting expedition. It is Henery whom they find with his stenographer and friends engaged in a merry little party. Henery's wife faints, while John's is greatly upset about the lengths to which her inflated jealousy has led her. Later she humbly begs forgiveness.

Ruining Randall's Reputation—Falstaff—April 3.—With Riley Chamberlin. The moral of this comedy is that if a man really wants to know how bad he might be he need only accept a political nomination in a district where mud-slinging is in order. Rivington Randall is proud of his spotless reputation. He refuses his niece and ward the right to marry. The suitor, incensed, seeks out his political friend who is managing a campaign of a Congressional nominee who is certain of election. The friend sees that Randall is given the opposition nomination, and by the time the campaign lies have gotten well under way Randall's esteemed reputation has vanished. After all the disgrace Randall considers it extremely kind of the suitor to want to join the family.

Billy Van Deusen's Muddle—Beauty—April 5.—Featuring John Steppling, Carol Halloway, Queenie Rosson, Dick Rosson and John Sheehan. Grace and Walt quarrel and Lou Leuter, a lawyer, calls on Grace and tells her that if she will get a co-rospondent her husband will sue for divorce and she will be able to separate from him. Billy Van Deusen flirts with Grace and Lou advises her to get Billy to some roadhouse and he will have her husband see her there. Walt trails Billy and Grace and Billy offers to arrange a settlement for a certain sum which Billy provides. Lou tells Walt that his wife is in the place with Van Deusen and then things happen. Finally it is revealed that Lou has been the source of all the trouble and Van Deusen, Grace and Walt leave the hest of friends.

Bungling Bill, Detective—Vogue—April 6.—Featuring Paddy McGuire. Bungling Bill is hired as hotel detective of the Hotel St. Clare and is instructed to discover who is stealing money from the room of the guests. A bad man from the West registers at the hotel, and Bill, not impressed with his looks, spies on him. The bad man when he discovers Bill spying upon him makes him dance to the tune of his forty-four. Bill makes a hasty getaway and also makes a resolution to avoil all positions where the science of crime detection is required.

The Winning Punch—Cub—April 7.—Featuring George Ovey. Although Jerry's opponent is as husky as Jerry is slight, a little strategy serves to win the bout into which he is lured by views of a large prize. The police see fit to interfere but when the husky Swede gets over the effect of Jerry's punch he renders them all unconscious. Then Jerry and "the terrible Swede" depart to enjoy the spoils.

Two-Bits—(Two Reels)—Mustang—April 7.—Featuring Frank Borzage, Anna Little, Jack Richardson and Mark Thorne. James Hardeman, United States marshal, is sent to Red Gulch to round up a band of counterfeiters. While here he meets Bess, an orphan, who is nicknamed "Two Bits" because she sells bouquets of wild flowers at twenty-five cents a bunch. James saves Bess when she is threatened by Jed Simpson, the sheriff, that she will either have to buy the land upon which her cabin is located, get out, or marry him. She refuses to marry him, and in order to secure enough money to buy the land she holds up the stage coach. Hardeman in a clever manner discovers the counterfeiters to be Jed and Al Morley, the deputy sheriff. Hardeman starts back for San Francisco with his prisoners, and promises Two-Bits that he will soon return to claim another prisoner.

The Professor's Peculiar Precautions—Falstaff—April 8.—Featuring Joe Phillips. Peter takes great care to safeguard his valuable collection of minerals. In fact, his safety apparatus are so well connected with the fire and police departments that the latter are continually answering false alarms, and finally pay no attention to them. How, through odd circumstance, Peter's method of "testing" fire and burglar apparatus nets him three thousand dollars in reward for burglar captures is left for the remaining feet of the film to unfold.

Universal Program

Queen of the Prophets—Seventeenth Episode of "Graft"—(Two Reels)—Featuring Richard Stanton, Jane Novak and Glen White. This instalment of "Graft" sees Mead, the leader of the political grafters, removed for good. Stone's plans to kill Harding and to get Dorothy Maxwell into his power also fail, as does the scheme of the opposing party to jam through a bridge contract which will mean a large slice of graft for them.

How Times Do Change—Nestor—April 3.—With Billy Rhodes and Ray Gallagher. Mr. and Mrs. Green are devoted to each other. The husband takes his watch to the jeweler's to have his wife's picture inserted, and Ray, an ardent young lover, does the same thing with his sweetheart's picture. The instruments, which look alike, become mixed and a terrible row is precipitated, almost ending favorably for the divorce lawyer. A less hasty examination of the timepieces, however, reveals the truth and all ends auspiciously.

The League of the Future—(Three Reels)—No. 5 of "The Journal of Lord John"—April 4.—Featuring William Garwood and Stella Razeto. Maida is determined to live out the year as a member of the Gray Sisterhood. Nora Esterbrook, an old school friend of Maida, is affianced to Steve Hardy. When the latter's rival, Wharton, is found dead, evidence points to Steve as the murderer. Maida interests Lord John in the case and he finally rounds up Tony, the real murderer, who has committed the crime on instructions from the "League of the Future." Tony will tell nothing, but Lord John figures in his own mind that the mysterious Rameses is behind that organization.

The Town That Tried to Come Back—Imp—April 4.—Featuring Victor Potel and Aileen Sedgwick. The town of Centerville is a "dead one" and every inhabitant admits it except Magnesia Sizzles, the woman who has charge of the dining room of the City Hotel. Magnesia is a "live one." Lily White comes into town and is engaged by the manager of the rival hotel. Her smiles win over all Magnesia's customers. Lily works the "sympathy game" on them and then jumps the town with their cash. Magnesia, in a wrathful mood, also clears out and the town goes off the map.

For the Love of Mike and Rosie—(Three Reels) — L-Ko. — Featuring Pathe Lehrmann, Louise Orth and Dan Russell. A number of young men are suitors for Rosie Goldfinger's hand, but Dr. O'Briensky is her favored suitor. A box-fighter of fame, however, ousts the doctor and arranges things to suit himself. The services of Mike McGinnis, the Irish terror, are enlisted. He ousts the champion and occupies the ground himself. The defeat of the latter is at last effected after a free-for-all fight between the Jews and Irish.

The Little Fraud—Victor—April 5.—Featuring Mary Fuller. Chartry, a miser, and his niece Joan live in an old lodge. Being behind with the rent, they are put out. Chartry dies not long after, muttering "The old clock, the old clock." In her efforts to get at the clock, Joan disguises as a boy and works for the new owner of the lodge, Deming. When Joan at last gets a chance to examine the clock and is pulling out her father's will, Deming shoots and wounds her. Then he discovers that she is a girl and a love affair develops in the days which follow.

Hungry Happy's Dream—Big-U—April 6.—Featuring Paul Bourgeois. After being refused both jobs and food, H. Oboe Rhodes, a tramp, falls down exhausted and begins to dream. The subject of the dream is mostly how he gets back at the heartless people who have refused him the necessities of life. Oboe sees so much of ferocious beasts in his dream that when he awakens and is offered a position with a menagerie he effaces himself from the locality with surprising speed.

The Eyes of Fear—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—April 6.—Featuring Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Edward Federmuss is thoroughly in love with his work in the Panama Canal Zone, but his wife Maria despises everything connected with the place. She is deceived into believing that the friendship of George Woodward will be beneficial to her and deplores the insane jealousy that her husband shows at their frequent meetings. That Federmuss has sized up Woodward correctly is seen later, when he tries to force himself upon Maria. A bullet, killing Woodward, saves Maria. An old enemy of Woodward is the murderer but circumstance points to Federmuss as the guilty one. In order to save her husband, whom she now madly loves, Maria prepares to sacrifice herself, but this proves unnecessary when the real murderer is found.

The Poet's Progress—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 7.—Featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail. Launcelot Faber is an enthusiastic but poor poet. As he cannot pay his board he is ejected from the house, but before leaving bestows his masterpiece on Jane, the poor servant who has seen him over some rough places. Jane wins a prize with some of the material in the poem, from a meat concern, which is in the market for poetry to advertise their product. Launcelot is inclined to be rough with the girl for this, but things terminate with both in the employ of the meat people.

A Leap Year Tangle—Nestor—April 7.—Featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson. A school for boys and one for girls are on opposite sides of the street. On account of leap year Lee and Neal force their chum Eddie to enter into their agreement not to marry, although the latter loves Betty. The girls decide that the first one who wins a husband shall win a handsome prize. Therefore Betty prevails upon Eddie to marry her. The boys try to administer grave punishment to both the bride and groom, and a general battle of wits ensues. All ends smoothly, however, and Betty receives the prize of a baby buggy.

The Still Voice—Rex—April 7.—Featuring Ben Wilson. In this drama Charlotte, the neglected wife of Robert Durand, although entirely innocent, is accused of familiarity with an old friend. By means of his wife's diary which tells of their unborn child, Durand begins to see straightly and a reconciliation, followed by more attentions on his part, ensues.

Behind the Mask—(Two Reels)—Bison—April 8.—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Princess Frederick, friend of the overtaxed peasants, aids them with money stolen from the rich. He is in love with the pretty Queen, as is also Count Charles. The latter does his best to help the old king capture the unknown gentleman bandit, and after a prolonged struggle in which the Queen aids the bandit, realizing his good motives, Frederick is caught. Charles is about to have him imprisoned when the news of the old king's death arrives. Frederick, now king, is quick to countermand the order for his own arrest.

His Highness the Janitor—Joker—April 8.—Featuring Gail Henry and William Franey. When a certain hotel manager makes the announcement that a noted foreign nobleman, Baron Von Plotts, will make an indefinite stay at his hotel, there is an immediate influx of mothers and daughters to the place. Among these latter is Lillian, whose love for Harry makes her an unwilling guest. When the Baron does not arrive, the manager presses the janitor into service. The ruse ends pitifully for all but Harry, the janitor and both of their sweethearts.

Mignonette—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 9.—Featuring Harry Benham and Edna Pendleton. A young musician, Henri Bergere, who plays in a cheap music hall, appears to have a past of great sorrow. The film proceeds to tell us how he had written an opera, inspired by his love for Mignon, the young wife of a brutal musician, but had lost all traces of her, while his opera was supposedly burnt by the infuriated husband. An odd circumstance finally restores to Bergere his opera, and fate brings Mignon—her husband since dead—and the young man whose opera she had inspired together.

Bill's Wife—Laemmle—April 9.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez. Mr. Grouch, a bachelor, has offered his servants the use of the house for a party, but on the morning of that day he is in such a bad frame of mind that everybody suffers, even his secretary—who is fired—and the party privilege is repealed. Another girl applies for the position of secretary but she is turned away for being too pretty. The latter's little brother, however, has a strange meeting with Grouch and penetrates his crusty heart. The result is that the pretty secretary is called back and the servants have their party.

Live News Notes For Theater Men

Two changes have been made in Mutual releases.

"The Leopard's Bride," the five-part Horsley production, will be released on April 13 instead of April 15, as announced originally. The change is due to a rearrangement of the schedule for the release of Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition. Also, "Feathertop," the Marguarite Courtot production, will be released on April 17 in the place of "The Quality of Faith." The latter will appear on the first of May.

S. L. Rothapfel, the presiding genius of the Knickerbocker theater, New York, who conducts Motography's popular "First Aid to Theater Men" department and inaugurated the system of selective motion picture presentation with a view to giving programs the greatest effectiveness, with appropriate stage and musical settings, is at work on a new hobby, when he is not supervising the construction of the New Rialto theater. He is cutting the war scenes in the Weekly Review so that the explosions due to the subway blasting will replace the "effects" produced by drubbing a bass drum.

The exclusive west coast rights for the one-reel comedies acted by Napoleon and Mac Gaston, Horsley Star.

Sally, two talented chimpanzees, and produced by the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, have been purchased by E. H. Emmich, of San Francisco. The monkey shiners are proving to be popular.

He wants to be sure that he does not miss a copy of Motography, and so George M. McGuire, manager and proprietor of the Palace theater of Santa Barbara, Cal., has just mailed in a check to cover two subscriptions. One copy will go to his operator, Milo Olivera, each week, and one to Mr. McGuire's home.

Sleuths claim to have scented rumors to the effect that Thomas H. Ince will soon be seen in New York arranging for the securing of theaters for the big new feature upon which he has been working for so long. It is a possibility that he will secure both the Knickerbocker and the new Rialto.

Marcus Loew, the New York theatrical magnate, is to build a theater in Syracuse, seating 3,000 and equipped with a library and club rooms. Mr. Loew states that he has been trying to get a theater in Syracuse for the past six years and that at last his plans are practically complete and construction will begin immediately.

When W. E. Waterhouse, manager of the Hildreth theater, Charles City, Iowa, was arrested a second time for running his show on Sunday, justices of the peace in that place refused to handle the case. It was transferred to Rockford and Mr. Waterhouse was acquitted. Because of large number of citizens who are said to be opposed to Sunday closing, county officials are opposed to any action that may result in suits for arrests.

Omaha is likely to have a screen club. Exchange men, exhibitors and supply house men are working for this organization.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Frank Dayton of the Essanay stock company is back at the studio after an illness of several weeks.

Richard C. Travers has started on a twenty-week vaudeville tour. He will give a talk on motion pictures, accompanied by animated cartoons drawn by Wallace A. Carlson pertinent to work at the Essanay plant. Mr. Travers will continue to appear in Essanay pictures.

"The Dixie Winner," Joyce Fair's second Essanay play, is a race track picture with Kentucky settings. Little Joyce is an accomplished rider.

"Buddy," the little Pomeranian who appears with Joyce Fair in Essanay pictures is becoming an accomplished actor.

Mrs. George Fawcett and daughter have arrived in Chicago from New York to visit George Fawcett, who is appearing in "The Crisis."

Eugenie Besserer, who plays "Mrs. Brice" in "The Crisis," once toured Australia as an understudy for Margaret Anglin. When Miss Anglin returned to America, she succeeded her as leading woman.

Matthew Snyder and George Fawcett, who are cast as "Colonel Carvel" and "Judge Whipple," close friends in "The Crisis," have in fact been friends for thirty years.

Darwin Karr was recently married for the hundreth time, in picture plays.

Even with the increased studio space at the Essanay plant, the stock companies are working nights as well as days to produce the required number of releases. This is due to the elaborate sets used.

The Chicago Press Writers' Club entertained a number of the Selig players and directors, including Colin Campbell, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer, at a banquet recently. Gilson Willetts, writer of motion picture stories, was present and gave an address.

Matthew Snyder, who plays "Colonel Carvel" in "The Crisis," is an actor of fifty years' experience, and has appeared with the most famous American and English stars. During the civil war Mr. Snyder was a major in the Confederate army.

Nicholas McDonald of Chicago was summoned from Canada to go to the Mexican border as cameraman for the Selig-Tribune.

"DEAN OF SCREEN" HAS GREAT EXPERIENCE.

Charles Kent, the "dean of the screen," who has died more times than any other actor in the photoplays, again ends his life in "The Vital Question," a five-part Blue Ribbon feature. This time, however, he found it more uncomfortable to die than ever before, for he had to hold his head in one position for more than several minutes' time.

In "The Vital Question," Mr. Kent is Rudolph King, an old man who has some "shady" business deals, but hopes to cover them up with the assistance of Adrian Scarsdale, a clever young lawyer, in love with his daughter Beatrice, and also a candidate for the office of district attorney. When he appeals to Scarsdale he tries to induce him to take the case, telling him he will give him an interest in his business if he wins. The lawyer refusing to do anything not perfectly legitimate, turns him down and King is in a quandary as to what to do. Scarsdale is the only man who could help him out of his difficulty, and when he refuses to give his assistance King does not know which way to turn. On the eve of the investigation, rather than go to jail he shoots hiself, and we see him fall into a chair, his lifeless head hangs over the back. It was in this position that Mr. Kent remained so long. Virginia Pearson, who played the part of his daughter, rushes in and discovers him, then goes to the telephone in the next room to call the doctor. The servants, who have heard the shot come in, but register that they are afraid to touch him, which does not permit Mr. Kent's making a move. Then George Cooper, who is seen as Richard, the wayward son, returns home and finding his father dead falls grief stricken to the old man's feet. The set was a "double" and the camera was set to "shoot" both rooms, so Mr. Kent had to remain in the position he fell during all this time. When the scene, which was one of the longest in the picture, was over, Mr. Kent rose to his feet with a severe headache which he did not lose for the following day, owing to the rush of blood to his head.

STAGE versus SCREEN

A Prophetic Dip Into the Future of the Motion Picture Art.

By HENRY MAC MAHON

"At the other extreme, grandiose, historical and nature subjects will always be most happily represented on the screen. Already the motion picture has put the old-fashioned stage spectacle out of business. Painted lath and canvas and the narrow cockpit of the indoor stage cannot compare with the new art's shadowgraphs of outdoor Nature, of MULTITUDES IN BATTLE OR IN FESTIVAL, OF INFINITELY VARIED ACTION AMID EXQUISITE LANDSCAPE AND SEASCAPE SURROUNDINGS. A maker who can produce a 'Birth of a Nation' or a 'Quo Vadis,' a 'Cabiria' or a 'Neptune's Daughter,' will reap the very highest rewards of production."

MOTOGRAPHY

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE NICKELODEON

Vol. XV CHICAGO, APRIL 8, 1916 No. 15

Chicago to Be Film Center

CONCERNS PLAN TO MOVE

WHEN exhibitors from all over the United States gather in Chicago for the sixth national convention and trade show under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, it is expected that steps will be taken to interest these men and the manufacturers dependent upon them in the plan to make Chicago the cinema capital. Ever since MOTOGRAPHY printed the article under the heading "Chicago the Metropolis of Motography," there have been several inquiries regarding the advantages of moving to the central west metropolis, which has become known as the "great central market." For some time it has been understood that certain of the big film concerns have contemplated moving headquarters from New York to Chicago, but so far officials of these companies have refrained from making public their detailed plans.

While there are those who may take exception to the statement that Chicago is "the cradle of the American film," they certainly cannot deny that it was the cradle of many of the men who have made the success of the business possible.

But aside from the sentiment, there are hundreds of sound commercial reasons why Chicago should be and will be the central distributing point for most of the output of American studios. Much of the money invested in the motion picture industry is Chicago money and it is said that the greater part of that capital has been paying the investor. In addition to this fact, and the fact that leaders in the business are Chicagoans at heart, Chicago offers wonderful advantages to the concern that establishes in the "great central market." The following information furnished by the Chicago Association of Commerce should be of interest to every man in the motion picture business whether he contemplates making a change of headquarters or not.

Two Billion Dollars a Year

There are more than 10,000 factories in Chicago and the output from these plants amounts to more than $2,000,000,000 a year. Now when it is taken into consideration that every year about 1,000 new manufacturing concerns start in business in the Windy City and that the percentage of the concerns going out of business for various reasons is comparatively small, the importance of getting into this great manufacturing center is appreciated. Chicago leads in several of the industries and, with few exceptions, holds a commanding place in every line of business.

But more important, perhaps, to the manufacturer is Chicago's position as a distributing center. The term, "great central market," is fitting for Chicago is the distributing center for the entire country. It's wholesale trade is said to be more than $2,000,000,000 a year, and increasing. It is the world's grain, live-stock and lumber market. It leads in the distribution of dry goods, general merchandise, foodstuffs, machinery, wearing apparel, furniture and household requisites. Because of these things, shipping facilities have been increased continually until the manufacturer has the co-operation of railroads, boat lines and all commercial bodies, the most important of which is the Association of Commerce.

In this connection it might be well to state that Chicago is the world's leading railroad center—the nucleus of the great railroad and water transportation systems of the United States. Thirty-nine railways, incldng twenty-two great systems terminate in Chicago. And these twenty-two roads represent 40 per cent of the railway mileage of the country. Fourteen hundred miles of belt lines—one-third of the belt line mileage of the United States—encircle Chicago. There are more than 100 railway yards in the city and 315 freight receiving stations located at central points. For these reasons the shipper has every advantage possible for the efficient handling of goods at lowest possible costs.

10,000 Freight Cars a Day

Recently clearing yards allowing for a capacity of 10,000 freight cars every day have been completed. These cars are moved quickly and efficiently and this means much to the shipper who would save money. Because of the great volume of small business a package car service has been arranged for and the shipper who does not always move his goods in carload lots can take advantage of a fast freight system that means much in the saving of money. Twenty-five hundred through package freight cars leave Chicago every day for 1,800 shipping points. The manufacturer with one package can be assured that his goods will be moved in one of these sealed cars and be handled only upon arrival at the point desired. This service is so arranged as to be very fast and provides for one day delivery to Detroit, Evansville and Dubuque and such points; two days to Pittsburgh, Nashville and Kansas City; three days to New York, Montgomery, Oklahoma City, Aberdeen; four days to Boston, New Orleans, Dallas and Trinidad. Other points are made in correspondingly fast time.

As for the passenger service, 1,339 passenger trains arrive and depart from Chicago every day and on these trains are carried enough persons to populate a good-sized city, namely, close to 200,000. This does not include the suburban traffic, which is tremendous.

In addition to the railway facilities there are 96 miles of water front, twenty of which are equipped with both dock and railway shipping facilities. According to most recent figures, Chicago's lake trade, including vessel arrivals and clearances, amounts to close to twenty-two million tons a year. Because of the waterway development project already adopted by the state of Illinois to provide an eight-foot channel from Lake Michigan to the Gulf of Mexico, this tonnage should be much greater.

Financial Metropolis of West

Important to the business man who moves to another city are the banking facilities. Chicago is the financial center of the west. Several of the leading banking institutions are located there and the combined banking resources are close to one and one-half billions of dollars. And Chicago, being a city of traders, much of this money is open for sound and legitimate investment. There are twenty national and 89 state banks and the clearances are around sixteen billions yearly.

This fourth city of the world has become known as the convention city, 475 sessions of this kind having attracted 400,000 persons to Chicago in 1915.

As for opportunities, improved and unimproved business and factory sites are available. Information regarding these can be had from the Association of Commerce. Excellent sites may be purchased at prices ranging from $1,000 an acre up according to location and responsible concerns desiring to keep their banking capital intact can have erected buildings to suit their requirements, under term leases, on favorable partial payment contracts. Because of these conditions the Association of Commerce deems it unnecessary to offer financial inducements to those contemplating moving to Chicago but the association does offer co-operation.

It is not the purpose of Motography to boom Chicago as a motion picture producing center although one of the most important concerns in the industry, the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company is doing all of its work at the home plant at the present time.

The Selig studio has been reopened and there are other smaller companies producing in Chicago. The American company, realizing the importance of Chicago as the "great central market," always has made Chicago its manufacturing and distributing center in spite of the fact that the chief producing studios of the concern are in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Saving Time in Shipping

But Motography does contend, as do many of the leading men in the industry, that before long Chicago must become the film distributing center. And when that time comes, Chicago is likely to be film manufacturing, or assembling center, as well.

Taking the American company's policy as an example. Most of the pictures made by this prospering concern are produced on the Pacific Coast. These are shipped to Chicago in the rough and are finished and shipped from the factory. The officials usually are at the plant and are in touch with the trade. They can better feel the pulse of the theatergoer and figure on proper time for releases. They can better handle their advertising and publicity from the central point. But the chief reason for remaining in Chicago and building a larger plant, which was done recently, was the shipping facilities. Concerns on the coast shipping to New York to the home offices are forced to pay added shipping costs when the prints are distributed for many of these have to be sent from New York to Chicago and farther west points to meet the demands of exhibitors. That seems a waste of money and many of the concerns, especially the programs, are beginning to realize it.

Editor's Note—Additional facts regarding Chicago and its advantages as the film center will be published in future issues of Motography.

Fail to Stop "Nation" Film

Strenuous efforts to prevent the production in Washington of "The Birth of a Nation" have failed and the Griffith spectacle will be produced as scheduled. The commissioners of the District of Columbia have received hundreds of communications protesting against the production and a formal request was made that the commissioners give public hearings on the subject. They gave the matter careful consideration, and decided that they were without authority to stop the production, even if they wanted to do so. Washingon has a negro population of nearly 100,000, and their leaders were among those who wanted to prevent the production.

Chicago Censors See Claridge Film

"The Heart of New York," a Claridge production starring Robert T. Haines, has been presented to the Chicago censorship board. Although no permit was applied for formally, the members of the board expressed themselves as willing to issue a general permit on the film after certain few eliminations had been made by Mrs. A. Egan Cobb, Claridge vice president and general manager.

Selig Begins "Historic Indiana"

For the production of the ten-reel feature "Historic Indiana," the Selig company has called Director Frank Beal to Chicago. The picture will present the main incidents and events in the story of the Hoosier state. The scenario is by Gilson Willets and the Selig company will work in co-operation with the governor of Indiana and such literary lights as George Ade and James Whitcomb Riley.

Hughes Fails to Force Bill

The House Committee on Education has been called to meet on Wednesday, April 5, for the purpose of resuming consideration of the new Hughes censorship bill. Chairman Hughes seems anxious to press the measure to a point where he can report it to the House, but so far he has been unable to do so.

The official French war pictures, called "Fighting in France," which have been presented in several large cities by leading newspapers, have been secured for the rest of this country by Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation. He will distribute them under the state rights plan.

The Raver corporation has also leased the Columbia Theater of San Francisco for the initial showing of their production, "The Other Girl," which stars James J. Corbett.

BILLIE BURKE SERIAL NAMED

Kleine Screen Novel Featuring the Popular Rouge-Topped Blonde and Henry Kolker to Be Called "Gloria's Romance"

George Kleine, the producer, has selected "Gloria's Romance" as the title of the new screen novel which is soon to be released by the Kleine exchanges, with Billie Burke, the international screen favorite, in the stellar role. Monday, May 22, has been chosen as the release date for the initial chapter of the serial, which is to be in twenty feature chapters, each two reels in length.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, who are creating the story, have prepared a society novel of wonderful appeal—one in which Miss Burke, in the role of Gloria Stafford, a wealthy society girl, hoydenishly romps her way straight into the hearts of those who watch her career on the screen. During the action of the piece she will be given many opportunities to appear in some wonderful creations, especially prepared for her by Henri Bendel and Lucile.

The company making the picture has returned from Palm Beach, where some of the opening scenes of the story are laid, and is now hard at work at the George Kleine studios in New York City. Since instructions have been issued to spare no expense in making the production in every way worthy of its star and its authors, some stage settings of lavish splendor are assured, and the utmost care is being taken with every tiny detail of the novel—for it is the ambition of Mr. Kleine to make of "Gloria's Romance" the most elaborate picture novel ever presented to the public, a real literary offering of surpassing merit.

As the story unfolds it will be discovered that a society novel of quite an out-of-the-ordinary sort is to result, for in every respect the story is to depend on logical situations and the natural development of a most fascinating love story in which is mingled a strong bit of mystery. The heroine of the tale, Gloria Stafford, is vivacious and youthful, bubbling over with merriment and wholly charming, even in her most hoydenish moments. Surely no star in all this world better fitted to portray such a role could have been found than Miss Burke.

Rupert Hughes, who has a great following, on account of his many successes in such publications as Cosmopolitan Magazine, the Saturday Evening Post, the Red Book and others, has time and again proven his skill in reaching the public's pulse and providing the sort of tale likely to appeal to the greatest number and when it is understood that the author himself thinks "Gloria's Romance" his best novel to date, it is certain that a great army of Hughes "fans" will await the screen novel and look forward to it with a keener zest than if it were to be a mere printed story.

With the stellar role in the hands of so bewitching a person as Billie Burke, with a supporting cast headed by Henry Kolker, and a director in charge of the caliber of Walter Edwin, Mr. Kleine's chief producer, exhibitors may feel satisfied that an offering far out of the ordinary is being prepared for their patrons.

Kleine exchanges throughout the country have already been deluged with inquiries regarding the forthcoming serial, and now that the name and release date have been actually decided upon, a flood of bookings is sure to result.

Mexican "War" Negatives Come High

Following the Villa raid at Columbus, New Mexico, a negative film depicting exciting border scenes sold all along the Rio Grande at record-breaking prices. It is said considerable material showing the town a few hours after the attack brought $5 a foot.

About a dozen camera operators, generally free-lances, have been spending the winter along the border, and these men in almost every case suddenly found themselves with much larger bank accounts than they had had any reason to anticipate.

Howard Dempsey and G. M. Scott, representing the Feinberg Amusement Corporation, Fitzgerald building, New York, were perhaps the heaviest purchasers in and around Columbus. The amusement company telegraphed several thousand dollars to El Paso and paid in cash for all negatives purchased.

CHICAGO STUDIO BUSY

Winston Churchill's Popular Novel, "The Crisis" Being Made with Great Care at the Rejuvenated Selig Studios

The Selig studio in Chicago is a busy workshop again, after being closed during several months, for the first pictures are being filmed there for the photoplay version of "The Crisis," which its producers hope will be a wonderful feature play.

Since the first announcement that the Selig Polyscope Company was to produce, on an elaborate scale, a film version of the Churchill novel, much thought, effort and money has been spent, arranging the scenario, selecting a cast, locations, etc., planning numerous details before one scene was enacted. While the actors chosen for the roles were coming from Los Angeles and New York, Colin Campbell, the director of the production, who had already arrived in Chicago, was superintending the arrangement of the studios, the selection of properties, costumes, etc. The property rooms were filled with the furniture and equipment of the sixties; the wardrobes hung with costumes and uniforms of civil war days.

Now, in the studio proper, there is the smell of fresh paint, the sound of carpenters' hammers, building and demolishing "sets." While one group of players acts a scene, under the direction of Mr. Campbell, in "Judge Whipple's" office, others, who will be needed next, are rehearsing their act, or working out a piece of "business."

The cast for "The Crisis" includes a number of well known Selig stars. Fourteen of the actors have come from the coast studios. Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton, who appeared in "The Spoilers," have the important roles of "Stephen Brice" and "Virginia Carvel." Matthew Snyder is cast as "Colonel Carvel," while George Fawcett arrived from New York to play "Judge Whipple." "Clarence Colfax," Virginia's cousin, is being played by Marshall Neilan, who also assists in directing the play. The second prominent feminine role, "Mrs. Brice," Stephen's mother, is assigned to Eugenie Besserer.

The costumes have, of course, received close attention. While with the various uniforms of the period, the question of correctness was most important, in the feminine dress of the period Bessie Eyton found an interesting subject. For weeks before she left Los Angeles, while she was still appearing in other plays, Miss Eyton was planning and arranging her wardrobe as "Virginia Carvel." Each costume was made according to her direction and supervision.

Careful atention has been given to each bit of property which goes into a set. The gas globes used must be those of the period, for instance, and the city of Chicago has been ransacked for relics of the early sixties.

Several months of work, daytime and evenings, will be needed to complete the interior scenes. Director Campbell and his company, accompanied by William N. Selig, will then journey to Vicksburg and other southern cities to photograph the exteriors, including the battle scenes, at the places where they actually occurred. A month's time will be given to the siege of Vicksburg and the St. Louis battle scenes, and many historic monuments will be photographed. Accuracy is insisted on, that the play may have historical value. The southern cities are ready to cooperate with the Selig company, and the Chamber of Commerce of Vicksburg hands the keys of the city to Mr. Selig and his company.

Big Buy for London

A wide-scope purchase—one of the largest made since the war—was consummated last week by J. W. Anderson of the Kino Publicity, Limited, of London with Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation.

The deal involved the world rights—with the exception of the United States and Canada—of the Raver production "The Other Girl," from the Augustus Thomas play, starring James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore, and the Ocean pictures, "The Fortunate Youth," adapted from William J. Locke's book and featuring Wilmuth Merkyl; "Life Without Soul," taken from the novel "Frankenstein," by Mrs. Mary W. Shelly; and "Driftwood," adapted from the stage success written by Owen Davis starring Vera Michelena.

Senator Crom has introduced a bill in the New York state legislature which proposes to make it a misdemeanor to use children in the making of a photoplay without the written consent of the mayor of the city or president of the village in which the picture is to be made.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is causing a veritable recruiting epidemic in Canada. The big Vitagraph feature has been shown to government officers and the public in Toronto and has made a deep impression.

Louis J. Gasnier, president and general manager of the Astra Film Corporation, releasing through Pathe, has returned from Havana, Cuba, where he spent several weeks in connection with the production of a new serial.

As It Looks From Here

FRED J. HERRINGTON has his hands full these days. What with several conventions in session or about to be called to order and other big meetings like the Minneapolis session scheduled for early May and the national convention in Chicago in July, the head of the exhibitors' national body is kept on the jump all of the time. He stopped off for a bite to eat in Chicago as the guest of the executive committee of Chicago exhibitors who are arranging for the July meetings. At a luncheon in the Hotel Sherman he told Chicago theater men what to expect in the way of crowds and enthusiasm during the convention and trade show and put his stamp of approval on the sessions. He was kept under the guiding wing of "Big Bill" Sweeney during his visit in the Windy City.

ACCORDING to reports from the front, Minneapolis is working hard to break all convention records in May. Exhibitors in the Twin Cities are enthusiastic over the prospects and it is to be hoped that every motion picture theater man in the northwest section will spend at least one day at the convention. These meetings are doing much to cement friendship. Exhibitors, in getting closer, are learning from one another with the result that the tone of the presentation end of the film business is improving. The exhibitor holds the whip hand. He represents the public and the film manufacturer has come to realize it. The theatergoer, more and more is looking to the theater man for the show instead of to the producer. It is all very well to make good pictures but the manufacturer must depend on proper presentation for the greatest success. And the theater men are learning how to show pictures. And they are learning at conventions.

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager for V. L. S. E., Inc., called on officials of S. and E., in Chicago, before going to Minneapolis on business. He visited Chicago studios, offices and exchanges and reported excellent business in "big four" releases.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players, visited Chicago, while on his way from New York to the Pacific Coast. He preferred not to make any further statement regarding Mary Pickford and the merger stories that have been built around this star.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, one of the first of the important daily newspapers to get a foothold in the motion picture field, is still fighting foolish film censorship. Those who know the policy of this great newspaper will appreciate the fact that it was not because Selig-Tribune news films were among the pictures slashed that the following editorial was published for the Tribune hits where the hitting seems most necessary regardless of purse or pride. Here's the Tribune stand on Ohio censorship:

The following is from a Columbus, O., newspaper: "State movie censors on Thursday barred closeup views of Villa shown in General Film Company's news weekly. 'Villa is a murderer and bandit. Showing of his pictures in Ohio movie houses during the present crisis would tend to arouse bitter feelings,' Chairman C. G. Williams of movie board said."

It could go without comment. Nothing that we can say will add to its magnificence. Nothing that any one could say could make more apparent the all too apparent bone which solidly constitutes the whole head of censorship.

It might have been Mr. Williams' opinion that showing the picture of General Funston during the present crisis would flutter the emotions of the spectators. If such had been his opinion Ohio moving picture houses could not have shown the general.

Moving picture reviews are now a visualization of news. If it is contrary to public policy to show the pictures of persons who are in the news, it is contrary to public policy to print the news about them. Censorship of the movies in this respect is censorship of the press, against which every instinct of liberty in our people rebels. But why argue?

Ohio may not look at Villa in the movies because he is a bandit. Censorship has indeed crowned itself with asses' ears.

Ben Atwell, formerly of Chicago, has been appointed press representative for the Rialto, S. L. Rothapfel's new New York theater. Mr. Atwell, who recently has been the publicity man for the Knickerbocker, moves uptown with the best wishes for success. It is said the Knickerbocker will again be a dramatic house.

Now we know what Joseph W. Farnum has had up his sleeve recently. He has blossomed forth as the president and general manager of the Amalgamated Photo-play Service, Inc., with offices in the Candler building, New York. This is a film service bureau organized to handle any line of work for any concern. Wright Huntington and J. Allen Boone are the vice-presidents; Frank J. Carroll is treasurer and Franklin Searight is secretary.

INCE PLAY BOWS TO "LOS"

Big Thomas H. Ince Peace Spectacle to Show First in Film City—Name Changed to "Civilization"

Thomas Ince's massive new production is to be shown first of all to Los Angeles.

This is the multiple reel peace spectacle upon which Ince has been working for so long. Its name was originally "He Who Returned." This was changed last week to "Civilization." The former name, while more picturesque and suggestive, was held as being too ambiguous. "Civilization," it is said, conveys an idea of the breadth and massiveness of the production and at the same time will carry the ironical twist which will be understood after witnessing the film.

It was debated for some time whether to give the big peace show its premiere in New York or in the industry's sunny California home. In deciding for the latter Mr. Ince followed his action in the case of his Billie Burke "Peggy" and "An Alien," the splendid production which featured George Beban.

The big film will be taken to New York after a run of an indefinite length in the city of the angels. Just which Los Angeles theater will be given the honor of sponsoring the bow of the photodrama to the public has not yet been decided.

CALLS PROGRAM PLAN BAD

Jesse J. Goldburg Declares That "State Rights" Method of Distribution Favors Both Exhibitor and Manufacturer

The recent publicity given to the possible formation of an amalgamation of the more prominent feature photoplay manufacturers, and the comment regarding methods of distribution, gives rise to thoughts as to their effect upon the industry.

"As a consistent exponent of the independent manufacturer and the state right plan of distribution of features, I cannot help but feel that the rights of the exhibitor are lost sight of by manufacturers when the matter of distribution is considered," says Jesse L. Goldburg.

"We have lately been met with statements that manufacturers and exhibitors are losing money; the complaint of the exhibitor being that he is not permitted to choose his merchandise, that whatever goodwill may attach to his house by the exhibition of a desirable feature is more than offset by his being compelled to exhibit poor productions forming part of a program.

"Before the inception of the program and when the state rights method of distribution, and the independent exchange handling features under that plan, was in vogue, the records show every manufacturer conducted his business at a profit and of necessity produced features of merit.

"Under that method of distribution the exchange paid for the production according to its merit, and the exhibitor also paid for booking rights a sum dependent upon the worth of the feature to him. So that it was up to the manufacturer to exert every intelligence in production and at the same time not to engage in any 'killing' expenditures. Has it occurred to manufacturers that it is only since the inception of the program of features that unreasonable salaries have been paid to stars?

"I fail to see any advantage accruing either to the manufacturers joining a combination, to the exchanges handling its production, or to the exhibitor booking them. Every producing organization will have to have its full staff of directors, cameramen, property men and general assistants, and the cast for each production will have to be a separate entity. The overhead charges would remain about the same. The only object of an amalgamation will be to tie the hands of the exhibitors, possibly drive out the independent manufacturer and exchange, and give this combination a high hand in dealing with the exhibitor.

"I fail to recognize on what theory an exhibitor should not be permitted to choose the productions and on what theory all classes of so-called 'features' should be paid for at a uniform figure," continues Mr. Goldburg.

"The exhibitor is only too willing to pay for his products, and a better figure for a better picture, and there is no reason why the manufacturer turning out a superior production should not be compensated proportionately.

"There has been altogether too much trading on past reputations in preference to present performances. Some manufacturers believe that their sins of omission and commission can be covered up and compensated for by almost unlimited and extensive advertising. Advertising should be freely engaged in, but only in proportion to the merits of the production advertised.

"When the time again arrives that the consumer, in this case the exhibitor, may purchase and pay for his products as in any other legitimate enterprise, then the manufacturer will engage in the producing end of the industry to his sure profit, and the general expenditures in connection with and the exploitation of feature photoplays will be restored to a safe and sane level."

May 15 has been designated "National Tribute Day," when a part of the gross receipts of all motion picture theaters in the country is to be donated to the fund. Charles R. Macauley, chairman of the committee on cartoons and animated announcements, has prepared a trailer to add to the publicity for the event. These are 25 feet in length and will be attached to releases free of charge.

Harry Morey, co-star with Edna May in "Salvation Joan," the coming seven-reel Vitagraph feature, is a cunning feller. When a free lance writer came to the studio the other day for an interview and asked Morey where to find Morey, the joking star led the writer all over the studio and at last declared Morey could not be located.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

Kunsky Signs Paramount

John H. Kunsky, Michigan's largest operator of motion picture theaters and one of the most prominent theatrical men in the mid-west, within the past few days signed a Paramount contract which calls for rentals aggregating $250,000. The contract calls for the exclusive first showing of all Paramount releases in Detroit, which means, of course, the initial presentation for the entire state of Michigan.

The Paramount releases called for will be shown in the various Kunsky theaters in Detroit, of which there are eight at present, and another, the big new Madison, in the course of construction. The amount of money involved represents the largest sum ever concerned in an individual contract in motion pictures in Michigan.

Prior to his disposal of the interests to the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., Mr. Kunsky through his Casino Feature Film Company controlled the booking rights to the Paramount releases for the state of Michigan, having handled prior to the formation of the Paramount the releases of the Famous Players, Lasky, and Bosworth under the old states right plan.

The Kunsky Scenic Company of Detroit has recently installed several large scenic settings, among them being handsome stage settings in the new Majestic-Colonial theater in Jackson, Michigan, and in the beautiful new Stratford in Detroit.

Two Little Texans

Plainview, Texas, can boast of but about 6,000 people, but it can be proud of two fine little picture theaters, the Ruby and the Olympic.

These houses are each 30 by 100 feet in size and were built expressly for the purpose of providing the public with pictures. Each building represents an investment of about $10,000. The Ruby has a seating capacity of 350, while the Olympic accommodates 400. The owners are Dye, Ford and Rogers, with Ross D. Rogers acting as manager of both houses.

Runs Newspaper Too

"I make it a point to be on the square with every exchange, and also take good care of the films and of the advertising matter which is sent to me, and am careful to return everything in the best of condition," says Raymond Gear, manager of the Gear theater of Florence, Kansas.

"I believe I am giving my patrons as good a show as most any town this size is getting, and perhaps better," Mr. Gear continues. "Inasmuch as I own and publish the only weekly paper here, I do not depend entirely on my theater for my living. Then, too, I make friends with practically everybody in the community, and I know that helps."

Paramount Furnishes Musical Scores

Paramount Pictures Corporation have arranged with G. Schirmer, Inc., a large music publishing house, to furnish specially written scores for all Paramount pictures, starting with the "Heart of Paula," a Pallas-Paramount picture in which Lenore Ulrich is being starred, released on the third of April.

Olympic Theater, Plainview, Texas.

These scores will be so arranged that they can be used for any size orchestra from a single pianist to the largest symphony orchestra, and include selections from the popular songs of the day, comic and grand opera, as well as movements from the foremost symphonies in the galleries of musical portraiture.

Music will consist of a complete music score for twelve-piece orchestra composed of the following parts: Piano, extra piano (for use of organ), first violin, second violin, viola, cello, bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, drums.

These scores will be furnished to the exhibitors by the Paramount exchanges upon a rental basis. In the hands of competent musicians they will prove a great economy as well as an important time-saver, while in the hands of less competent musicians they will mean the saving of the effect of the film from ruination through the inappropriateness of its musical accompaniment.

Theater Advertising in Verse

A unique method of advertising comes from the Empire theater, in Montgomery, Alabama, who run the Paramount program each week. Their method is to do their advertising in verse. Here is a sample:

E—arth has its pleasures manifold—
M—irth is a jewel set in gold;
P—ictures are gladdening to the eye—
I—sn't it time you are stopping by?
R—estful, pleasing—pictures rare—
E—very one beyond compare.

New York Rialto Furnishings

The Rialto will be equipped with two or possibly three gold plated automatic ticket sellers furnished by the Automatic Ticket Seller and Cash Register Company. The seats will be from the Wisconsin Seating Company.

The interior decorations are by William Eckert and in connection with the effect of the interior of the theater upon the eye will be the advanced and praiseworthy lighting scheme which has been mentioned. Not a single light will be seen, removing all trace of the bright glare sometimes seen in certain spots about theaters and which is so hard upon the eyes. The electric switch board will be larger than that of either the Hippodrome or the Metropolitan Opera House.

The organists for the Rialto will be Alfred Robyn and Edward Johnson.

Fresh Air of Most Importance

Mine is a suburban house and I play only a night show, but so far I have held my own, sandwiched in between two other houses. The patrons I get I hold, for I give them the best of service, a clean, sanitary house and eliminate all evidences of rowdyism. Courteous treatment is my motto and I never fail to give all complaints a hearing and if possible rectify any fault there may be.

I have the respect of all the exchange and feature men because I always have and always will pay my film rents in advance. The men of the trade I deal with are always on my side for one reason—my checkbook.

I use the latest Simplex machine and motor generator. My music is furnished by the king of motion picture musicians—the $5,000 Fotoplayer. The house is my own investment, $20,000, and all clear. The insurance underwriters and fire inspectors give me credit for the best fire-proof suburban house in the Twin Cities. The house has seven exit doors.

The New Como Theater, St. Paul, Minnesota, has a capacity of 500 and a $5,000 Fotoplayer. Elsworth Cameron is manager.

The most important thing about a theater in summer, and any time for that matter, is to keep the air fresh and cool. I use seven Westinghouse fans.

Six Concise Rules

By Walter F. Shaefer

Manager Lyceum Theater, Chicago

You are familiar with the old saying that the way to success is to start at the bottom and work up, and also the more modern maxim that the leader of the orchestra is always a man who has played second fiddle.

It has happened that I have followed that advice pretty thoroughly, for I have worked at practically every position around a theater, from usher to assistant operator. I am now an exhibitor at 22 years of age.

Here are the rules I like to enforce:

Be friendly with your patrons.
Have a courteous and smiling cashier.
Provide good music.
Employ neat and well-mannered ushers and doorman.
Be certain your projection is perfect.
And by all means, watch your ventilation.

New Theater for Golden Gate

Eugene Roth, the V-L-S-E exhibitor of the Portola Theater, San Francisco, is making a tour of the middle west and the east inspecting theaters en route, to acquaint himself with the finest and most up-to-date features in house construction with the idea of embodying them in the new theater which he is planning to build in the city of the Golden Gate. With Mr. Roth on his trip is a competent California architect who will absorb all the required details of the houses visited. Among the larger cities which the pair will touch en route will be Chicago, Detroit and New York.

"This is one case in which no expense will be spared to furnish a motion picture palace de luxe in every sense of the phrase," says Mr. Roth. "It is my intention to provide seating accommodation for 3,500 people, and by the time all my arrangements are completed, a structure will be under way that will be the last word in the line of show places for the silent drama. I shall continue to exhibit V-L-S-E features in the new house as in the old. In my opinion the open booking policy of the company has proved the greatest boon ever conferred upon exhibitors. It enables the showman to maintain a standard of uniform excellence at a minimum of cost, which cannot be obtained under the old flat rate system."

Mr. Roth has earned widespread reputation in filmland for the excellent judgment and total indifference to expense he has displayed in the correct staging, color and music of big picture features.

Exhibitor Favors Federal Censorship

By Mitchel H. Mark,

President of the Mark Strand Theater Company, New York.

During the hearing at Washington on Federal control of motion pictures, the industry was represented solely by producers and their allies.

Why were not the exhibitors present to give voice to the demands of their patrons? They, of all classes financially interested, are directly and constantly in touch with the pulse of those who have made this wonderful new business possible—the public. For this neglect we, of course, have only ourselves to blame, but a public expression of opinion on this very important question from the owners and operators of the Strand Theater, New York, may interest every exhibitor who has the good of the business at heart as well as the manufacturers of the film we project on our screens.

We believe in interesting pictures that leave a good taste in the mouth, pictures with plenty of action that stir the red blood in our veins, pictures that appeal to the finer and artistic senses, pictures that educate and uplift, but always, always clean, moral pictures. That is the rock of which the future prosperity of our business is built. The wave of sex pictures in the past year is bound to react to great harm to the entire industry unless checked very quickly. The prosperity of theaters specializing in this form of entertainment is temporary.

Censorship, intelligently applied, is the remedy for this evil and the safeguard for our continued existence. The censorship should emanate from the Federal government, from those who have had worldly experience, people of large and liberal ideas, men of business, of letters, artists, dramatists, etc.

Are we not all protected under censorship of that description? Should we not consider it a blessing that our business is safe-guarded by trained and discriminate minds? Under such conditions the petty annoyance of state and local censorship should vanish.

That the industry has brought censorship upon itself admits of no argument. Given free rein, a certain class of manufacturers would cast prudence and caution to the four winds of heaven, salaciousness would run rampant, and discredit would be cast upon the entire industry, the good suffering for the sins of the bad. If the exhibitor insists upon clean moral pictures the manufacturers will be compelled to furnish that class of material. The business must be purged of its unhealthy odor. Censorship properly applied will accomplish this.

I hope that this expression of opinion will be the means of bringing forth the sentiments of the better class of exhibitors.

Exchange of Experiences Valuable

By George W. Pryor

Southern Amusement Co., Bijou Theaters of Greensboro, N. C., and Danville, Va.

My ideas in regard to the fundaments of success in the business of presenting picture performances to the public are nothing original but there are some things which cannot be emphasized too often.

I would place first, good, clean pictures, well-projected. Next in order of importance come, good music, courteous treatment of your employees and of the public by your house staff, a clean, comfortable, well-ventilated and attractive house decorated in restful, harmonious shades. I try to make my patrons take an interest in my house and feel at perfect liberty at all times to make suggestions for the betterment of the theater or the show in any way.

Then comes co-operation with the exchanges, the prompt payment of bills and the careful handling of films. Advertising is very important and also the insistent use of novelties.

Our seating capacity is about 600. Our orchestra is seven pieces and the musicians are really excellent. We are contemplating the installation of a large pipe organ.

In closing I want to say that the exchanging of views and experiences through Motography is of great value to the exhibitor.

Succeeded Where Others Failed

By C. E. Storm

Proprietor and Manager, Edisonia Theater, Union, S. C.

We were practically forced into the business six years ago and have grown up with the industry. We started with a small house on a side street and were told it would not pay, as several others had tried it and failed. But we sailed in. We began with a two or three reel program of commercial film, at $15 a week. Perhaps the main reason why we have made a success where others failed, is the fact that we never considered our performance good enough. We kept adding to it until now we pay about as much every day as we used to pay in rents for a week. Of course our other expenses have increased in proportion, as has also our income.

We give special attention to our music, using the Edisonia Theater, Union, South Carolina.

J. P. Seeburg, style M Photoplayer, of which there is but one other in the state—in the O'Dowd theater in Florence.

We try to form personal acquaintances with our patrons. This has a telling effect, particularly with the factory employees, to be able to call them by name and talk to them. We have found that serials are a great help in making steady patrons. On factory pay days we show comedy and western as well as drama films. Just now we are going strong on features. We showed the "Perils of Pauline" and all the others that followed from the Pathe exchange, have finished "The Red Circle" (played it on release dates), and are now showing "The Iron Claw," "The Strange Case of Mary Page" and "The Hazards of Helen," as well as features from the various exchanges.

Probably we keep a good stand-in with all the exchange men because we always pay promptly—on Sunday for the coming week. We plan our programs well in advance and avoid any suggestive films.

We are now working on plans for a much larger house with balcony and separate entrance for colored patrons. We feel sure of their patronage as now they ask almost daily for admission.

Young Hustler Makes Failure Pay

Philip S. Seelig, of the S. S. S. Amusement Company, who are operating the Lucille Theater at 653 North Cicero avenue, Chicago, is conceded to be one of the cleverest young showmen in this section.

Mr. Seelig is a recruit from the printing field. He was also connected for some time with the Paramount Chicago office as city salesman. The Lucille Theater has a seating capacity of about 500. Although it has been a failure since its very opening, yet under the hustling management of Mr. Seelig it is gradually becoming a money maker. The policy of this theater has been to run a different feature every day. Of course it goes without saying that such essentials as pure air, good manners, tasteful decorations, perfect projection and right music are not overlooked at the Lucille.

Seattle Strand Turns Tables

The Seattle Board of Censors not long ago presented the Strand Theater of that city with a week's attendance of 40,000.

Here is the way it happened:

The Strand had shown the big Pathe feature, "New York," for two days when the local censor board decided that the film was not fit to be seen by the public and ordered it removed. Cutouts would not do. The manager of the Strand, William Smyth, feeling injustice in the action, promptly secured an order from the superior court which prevented interference with the run of the picture. And feeling that public opinion did not bear out the decision of the board of censors, the management of the theater and F. C. Quinbly of the Seattle Pathe exchange, asked the opinion of the Reverend M. A. Matthews, one of the prominent pastors of the city. The minister's letter said, in part:

"I witnessed the production of the picture entitled 'New York.' I studied it very carefully. It had no special nor objectionable interest. It portrays the depravity of human nature, is true to life and to the life of sin and unfolds the inevitable workings of heredity. It teaches, in a negative sense, the great lesson of 'whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.' In its effect it is a powerful protest against sin and by example warns people against it.

"I saw no reason in the picture for its suppression or for the elimination of any of its features. It is just what anyone can discover in life. Sin and its effect can be seen. It is true to the life of the vampire and the drunkard and it is true to the laws of heredity."

The film continued to run the full week and owing to the publicity stirred up, 40,000 people enjoyed the much-discussed show. The censors were incensed and caused the arrest of the manager and Mr. Quinbly of the Pathe exchange. It is expected, however, that the trouble will be settled out of court.

The Rex Theater in Seattle is now playing a second run of "New York" to large houses.

Reports from producing headquarters at San Rafael indicate that work is progressing with great promise upon C. N. and A. M. Williamson's "The Woman Who Dared," in which Beatriz Michelena is being starred by the California company.

HELPFUL HUNCHES
for Operators

1. Shoot the pictures about fifteen feet past the screen, so they'll be sure to reach it. Folks are very fond of a fuzzy focus, you know.
2. Between reels always leave the screen perfectly blank for a few moments. In that way you are adding to the perpendicular drama the much desired element of suspense. This also allows the screen to cool from the friction of the pictures passing over it.
3. Don't whisper an extra prayer every morning before you go to bed on account of busting a film. If you can pass a five-part feature on in fifteen parts, you're a creative artist.
4. Whenever it is necessary to splice a film, don't depend on shingle nails or a safety pin. They're too delicate, and the next man might think you effeminate. Use a spike.
5. Don't hesitate for a minute to punch the celluloid full of holes. The resultant bright flashes on the screen often lend just the needed light touches to the serious section of a story.
6. Catch up on your sleep while you are slipping the advertising slides through. The advertisers in the suffering audience will see the "pay" in painful, and the public will probably talk to the Lord about you for teaching them the gentle lesson of patience.
7. After threading in a new reel do not adjust your framer until the characters have strolled around on their own heads for a few moments. This clever stunt is uproariously funny and shows the audience how mean you could be if you took a notion.
8. Tip your beak into the air with fine scorn at any manifestations of impatience from the low-down audience. Remember you're above them.
9. Heat from the arc will crack the pretty operator's union slide if left in the projector more than four minutes. Better keep it down to three and a half and be safe—so far as the slide is concerned.
10. Sprint on the home stretch of the last show. It adds regular Chaplin-brand comedy to a serious drama when you crank the characters full of jerks.

New Government Book of Interest

By Thomas O. Monk

(Washington Correspondent for Motography)

The Government Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has prepared a handbook on Central America which will interest motion picture producers and distributors.

According to the announcement regarding the handbook Central America actually covers more square miles than the combined area of the whole of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Ohio.

Mr. Garrard Harris, author of the handbook, who is one of the expert special agents of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce states that the United States already sells about 50 per cent of the goods imported into Central America, and he is of the opinion that a much bigger percentage of the business should be done by Americans as a result of present opportunities.

"Technical terms and Americanisms should be avoided," says Mr. Harris. "The harm that some of our innocent Americanisms can do abroad is well illustrated by the fate of the brand of condensed milk which bore the notice 'Made at our plant.' To the English speaking population of British Honduras this meant that the milk was artificial and made from a plant. They would have nothing to do with it. The label was changed and the brand is now popular. Such Americanisms are probably more mystifying to the Spanish speaking population."

The report takes up each Central American country in turn and describes its physical features and climate, the character of the population, and the means of communication. It then takes up the agricultural, timber, and mining resources and the manufacturing industries, and follows this by a general description of the Government, a sketch of the banking system, and a statistical study of the foreign trade. The section devoted to each country is closed by an outline of the future prospects of trade and business in that country, and a list of special commercial openings.

The handbook contains 229 pages, and its title is "Central America as an Export Field, Special Agents' Series No. 113." It is for sale at 30 cents by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington. It can also be obtained at the following district offices of the Bureau:

New York, Room 409 United States Customhouse; Boston, eighteenth floor, United States Customhouse; Chicago, 504 Federal building; St. Louis, 402 Third National Bank building; Atlanta, 521 Post Office building; New Orleans, 1020 Hibernia Bank building; San Francisco, 306 United States Customhouse; Seattle, 922 Alaska building.

Horrors! No, Good Film Work

Last Sunday, Park Row, one of New York's busiest streets, was the scene of an unwonted thrill. Passersby saw two men struggling for life on the top of the tower of the Park Row Building, which boasts a height of thirty-seven stories. A crowd gathered in no time and many turned their heads in horror when they saw one of the struggling figures lose his footing and fall headlong to the sidewalk. Several policemen held back the crowd while others dashed into the building to apprehend the survivor. A foolish look came over the faces of everyone when the body was turned over on its back and it was discovered that it was a cleverly made dummy. The mystery was explained when Edward Jose, the Pathe producer, with Creighton Hale, the actor, left the building accompanied by a cameraman. Mr. Jose had secured permission from the superintendent of the building to stage some scenes in the tower for the serial photoplay "The Iron Claw."

Girls Admire Girls

The Washington exchange of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, under the management of George M. Mann, has been conducting a number of unusual contests in the different schools in that district, the latest of which was in the Western high school, in Washington, D. C., to determine the most popular photoplay star.

Despite the fact that it was a girls' institution and there are such men as Jack Barrymore, Dustin Farnum, Jack Pickford and a host of other handsome men to choose from, the young ladies chose the following: Mary Pickford, 92 per cent; Marguerite Clark, 88 per cent; Pauline Frederick, 54 per cent; Wallace Reid, 43 per cent; Marshall Neilan, 28 per cent, and Harold Lockwood, 23 per cent.

First National Exposition

Space to the value of $25,000 has already been subscribed for the First National Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry to be held under the direction of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America in New York May 6 to 13. It is expected the list of exhibitors on the main floor and balcony of the Garden when the show opens will be a fairly complete "Who's Who" of the industry.

A list of features as interesting as the decisions of boards of censors is being arranged. These will include a Bankers' Day, Fire Insurance Day, Projection Day, Exhibitors' Day and others. It has been definitely decided not to have a Censors' Day and no space has been reserved by any State Board of Censors as yet.

S. L. Rothapfel, conductor of Motography's "First Aid to Theater Men" department and perhaps the best known exhibitor in the country, to whom opening and operating new theaters is all in the day's work, will be the principal speaker on Exhibitors' Day when the problems of the men who show the pictures will be discussed. Prominent exhibitors from the principal cities will also speak from and of their experience in the "game."

Among the features will be a dancing floor right in the middle of the garden and the largest motion picture screen ever built. Also motion pictures will be made in full view of the public while one of the sixteen world's greatest bands will lend atmosphere, and music, to the occasion.

At the last meeting of the directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, held to discuss the coming motion picture exposition, resolutions to co-operate with the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League were adopted.

It was agreed to renew the board's original offer to set aside twenty-five per cent of the net profits of the Trade Show for the benefit of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League. The resolutions provide for the appointment by the Exhibitor's League of a committee of three to co-operate with the Board of Trade to make the exposition a success. Provision is also made for another Exhibitors committee to work with the Board in combating censorship and other legislative difficulties.

YEAR-OLD FILM ACTIVE

"The Rosary," One of the First Big Four Releases, With Kathlyn Williams, Very Unusual in Its Constant Demand

Nearly a year ago the Selig company released "The Rosary," a feature starring Kathlyn Williams. This picture is very unusual in that it is even now in active demand.

"The Rosary" was one of the first Big Four releases. To be exact, it appeared on the V. L. S. E. program on June 28, 1915. Since then the play has been unusually constant in its popularity. Right now this is heightened because its religious appeal is in harmony with the lenten spirit.

British exhibitors, in particular, have been high in their acclamation of the solid drawing powers of this drama. W. Baker, manager of the Gaiety Theater, New-Castle-On-Tyne, writes that he could easily have run the picture for a month to good business.

Probably much of the charm of the feature lies in its pathetic appeal and the blending of religious atmosphere with a note of tragedy and the tenderness of an extremely human love story. Yet the production is, on the whole, non-sectarian, and for that reason finds favor with patrons of every creed. The success it has achieved is the best possible proof of the drama's high standing in the world of motion picture production.

With Holmes in Philippines

Ever since Uncle Sam has taken them under his wing, the Philippine Islands have been of keen interest to Americans. This interest is satisfied in a very instructive way in one of the Paramount-Burton Holmes series, "Off to the Philippines." This little journey shows in detail just what Uncle Sam has done for "our little brown brothers," as Holmes calls them. The contrasting pictures of the "old" and the "new" islands are extremely educational.

Another Holmes release takes the spectator to Bilibid, "The Sing Sing of the Philippines." This prison is unique in many respects. It has more than 3,000 prisoners, yet is one of the most "human" prisons in the world—a veritable man-making institution. The prisoners are promoted from one class to another due to good behavior and when they are released they are really new-made men. An exciting side trip from the prison is the visit to the cock pits where the great national Philippino sport of cock fighting and gambling is in full swing.

Selig's On the Way

"At Piney Ridge," the story of Cindy Lane, "who is more sinned against than sinning," and "The Cycle of Fate" are two new Seligs soon to blossom out upon V. L. S. E. screens.

"The Cycle of Fate" was written and directed by Marshall Neilan, who also acts one of the most important roles in the play. Winsome Bessie Eyton is the leading woman. With her will be seen Al. W. Filson, Edith Johnson, Edward J. Piel and others.

Miss Fritzi Brunette and the Tennessee mountains are the delighting features of "At Piney Ridge," which is a five-section drama scheduled to appear on May first. The story has stood the test of the stage, where it was a decided success. The original play was written by David E. Higgins.

"The National Board of Review"

"THE name of the National Board of Censorship is a fortunate one in some respects, and unfortunate in others. It recognizes the word censorship, and possibly so gives it cause for existence. But it also, because it is national and of irreproachable character, obviates any excuse for other censors. In reality it is not a censor at all, but a Board of Suggestions for Improvement."—MOTOGRAPHY, November 14, 1914.

Within the last week the National Board has eliminated the word "Censorship" from its title. It is now the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures." Without doubt the new name is better than the old one, for the reasons we gave a year and a half ago. Possibly there would have been advantage in making the change at that time, instead of during consideration of a federal bill whose friends have used the handle of the National Board as a weapon against the anti-censors. The new word in the title hardly expresses, to the lay mind, the full scope of the society. "Review" does not necessarily suggest alteration or elimination, which, we take it, will continue to be the function of the board. These, however, are minor criticisms. The work of the organization is so well and widely known that there is little force in a quibble over its title, so long as the objectionable part of it is removed. And objectionable the word "censorship" truly was; because, though the board was never properly a censor, its title made an excuse for others' abuse of the term.

A bulletin issued by the National Board last month states that in 1915 it passed upon 9,670 reels of film; made 1,116 changes in scenes; condemned or returned for complete revision 118 reels of film including 59 entire dramas; and eliminated from sample copies a total of 58,740 feet of film, worth with its negative and finished sale copies $258,368.30. This cost is insignificant in the light of improvement accomplished, and probably means nothing anyway because the eliminations advised by the National Board would have been made later in any event by local censors.

Producers whose pictures seem to call for more than their mathematical share of the board's attention are sometimes tempted to withdraw their product from its jurisdiction. Indeed, some such recessions have occurred from time to time. This is natural enough, since the board is a voluntary body without legal power. However, the great majority have found a high degree of economy and business efficiency in the use of the organization as an inspection department. So regarded, its operating charges are very low, since no overhead and no payroll are involved.

Now that the National Board label on "passed" films must be changed, we suggest the use of the phrase "Approved by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures," or some combination of similar import. Possibly "approved" is not the word; but we think "passed" can be improved upon. It suggests a sort of grudging consent, a power to say yes or no that still smacks of the official censor. If the suggestion of censorship is to be thoroughly uprooted, let us avoid even the words that were commonly used with it. There are enough state and municipal boards using the term "passed" to supply all public demand for that word.

The Children's Side of It

THE problem of pictures suitable for children—suitable, that is, in the eyes of exacting parents—is largely a problem of distribution. There are plenty of such pictures made. But when it comes to guaranteeing an exclusive program of them two or three times, or even once a week, there are difficulties. Perhaps few exhibitors have tried it. Those who have made the effort have found it full of resistance. A certain exhibitor out on Chicago's south side has made a persistent effort to run a weekly children's matinee. It happens that the mothers in his district are particularly keen to keep track of their children's entertainment. It may be that they are also particularly intelligent; for they have never blamed the exhibitor when his matinee program was not entirely satisfactory.

But they have told him that, in their judgment, his child programs run only about seventy-five per cent efficient. The other twenty-five per cent, without which his show would be insufficient, is not what they want the children to see. Not that it is bad in any sense, but merely that it does not fit the young mind. And the result is that, without any feeling toward the exhibitor (whom they patronize themselves in the evening), they are keeping the youngsters away from the matinees especially designed for them. That means, of course, that this exhibitor is losing business and money that might be his, and welcome, if he could meet the local condition.

We mention only one specific case, and that only because it is easier to talk about something definite. But there must be thousands of exhibitors similarly situated—all the owners of neighborhood theaters are in that class, in fact. And the condition is growing in importance.

It is a fact that parents, now that they know motion pictures are a permanent institution, are giving more and more attention to the character of the shows their children attend. They recognize the impossibility of forbidding all attendance, as well as the unwisdom of attempting to do so. Therefore, as the children must see pictures, the pictures must be all right for them to see. That is the parental attitude now, whether it was a couple of years ago or not.

If it is not the exhibitors' fault that children's programs are hard to maintain consistently, neither are the manufacturers to blame. They have already experimented with children's pictures at considerable expense, and the returns did not justify the effort. It has not discouraged them; they merely feel that a more definite outlet must develop before they carry the scheme any further. The demand is there—that is absolutely certain. It seems only a question of providing means for arranging and distributing the special program so it will be available in specific form to any exhibitor who wants it.

That the question is really important is shown by the organization of such bodies as the Juvenile Motion Picture Federation and the Committee on Children's Pictures and Programs, which will work with the National Board of Review. Possibly through these agencies the children's program may become a definite and orderly institution, on which the most finicky of parents can place reliance. The National Board already has under way a surprisingly large amount of work along this line, and results of some kind are inevitable.

In the selection of children's programs, too much emphasis cannot be placed on the necessity of avoiding the obvious moral, the sort of story that used to be labeled "Sunday school." Very likely this warning is unnecessary; we cannot conceive that any existing producer would be guilty of releasing that kind of stuff. Real life must be the basis for the stories that are given to children as well as grown-ups. Of course all sex interests, triangular situations and social problems must be carefully avoided; but every director knows that.

There is really no difficulty whatever in the production of desirable pictures for youth. The manufacturers have demonstrated that they can do it, and do it well. Now it is really up to the public to show its appreciation by demonstrating the demand that so far has only theoretically existed, but at last seems to be getting down to a practical basis.

This, to us, is an interesting subject, and we believe those who are not now interested will be forced to pay attention as a matter of business before long. We hope to be able to say more on the subject in a few weeks with a definite report of progress in the field of the children's program.

Metro's Stand on Merger

BY RICHARD A. ROWLAND

President Metro Company

MERGERS, combines, consolidations, amalgamations—the air is full of them. Each 24 hours for the last month we have had fresh laid news of the grand-get-together of the motion picture industry with all the capital that isn't financing the European war lined up to buy up our businesses and stir them all together in one big pot.

The daily press has taken pot shots at the great little idea and starting with the Chicago dailies the newspapers of the country have mixed all the concerns together to suit their own convenience, and better the story for general consumption.

I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet but I rise to remark that the motion picture industry will not be sewed up into a combine now or any time in the future because there are elements in the business that defy combination.

In the first place motion pictures are not a business in the same way that the making and selling of automobiles and tobacco or farm machinery are businesses. It is an amusement enterprise rather than a business and its artistic elements are dependent upon newly created brain products, which must be fresh and different with each succeeding week.

No amount of capital can control such an enterprise or keep it tied fast. Under present conditions the only possible combine that could hope to succeed would be a theater merger which would include the majority of picture theaters in the United States. And with this effected, and sewed up, there is nothing to prevent private capital in any city in the land from putting up opposition houses.

Suppose an enterprising organizer should succeed in getting the majority of the big fellows of motion pictures into a combination and they would all put their studios, laboratories, stars, directors and the entire works into one concern. What could prevent new blood from stepping into the field and with energy, enthusiasm and capital putting out pictures that would upset the whole plan and disrupt the combine? We must remember that out of the 100,000,000 of persons in the United States a very small percentage of talent has been drawn upon for picture making. There's plenty of material left and if the need came a formidable rival for any combine could be developed in less time than might be imagined.

Another reason why there should be no apprehension over a prospective combine is that several very important and very successful elements of the picture field would not enter into it. It is quite possible that millions of dollars in cash might bring a member of the traders to sell and quit but those now successful and operating on a sound as well as a progressive basis would not have to sell and, if they like the game as well as we do, they wouldn't.

Exhibitors need have no feeling of uncertainty. They will not be frozen out nor will they be at the mercy of any combination.

In plain United States, why does any motion picture producer or marketer want to combine unless he feels that he can't stand the gaff of competition?

Some of the concerns may want to get in under cover because they can't keep up the pace and they desire to adjust their affairs before the sheriff gives them the hearty handshake. Metro is making money, we confess it, and we are moving rapidly along safe lines. We see no reason for turning our successful business into a pot with others less successful.

Personally I would like to see some of the timid ones get together. I believe their lives might be much happier and their rest at night much more peaceful. But as for Metro, we have just gone by our first milestone. We are too full of life and vigor and enthusiasm to want to sit in with the rocking chair fleet. We are in business chiefly because we like it and perhaps that's one of the reasons why we have been successful. If we exchanged our live organization for a collection of stock certificates in a gigantic combine I fear we would spend our declining years papering our walls with the handsome steel engravings.

Our word to the combine makers and the dealers in combine rumors is—go to it. Anything that promises added zest to an already lively game will make the next few years worth while. We speak in no spirit of boastfulness, but we feel fit for a fray.

Kleine New York Offices Move

George Kleine's 42d street rental offices have removed to their new home in the new film building at 49th street and Seventh avenue, New York. This change was made necessary by the need for a more centrally located exchange and anticipations of great activity with the Billie Burke serial. The new offices cover approximately thirty thousand square feet of space in this latest and most modern of structures. Film and poster departments are now maintained on the same floor with the booking offices so that the exhibitor is put to a minimum of inconvenience in completing his whole errand.

This picture, which might almost have strayed from the National Geographic Magazine, shows a section of the Fine Arts studios transported to Paris for the making of a new Mae Marsh picture. The latter is discussing with Director Ingraham in the foreground.

Vote to End Feature Happily

When "The Heart of Paula" is shown next week as the feature of the Strand theater's program, its ending will find the Spanish maid and her handsome American hero locked in each other's embrace. In other words the picture with two endings will fade from the Strand screen upon the happy ending of the Mexican romance (produced by Pallas) for the Paramount Program. The decision to end "The Heart of Paula" thus was reached at the luncheon after the press showing of the picture on Friday, March 24. Representatives of the daily and trade papers gathered round a table in a private dining room at the Hermitage.

The gathering which injected joy into "The Heart of Paula." At this dinner following the press showing of the Pallas production the happy ending was decided upon.

Those who had seen both endings then voted that the tragic should be set aside and the happy ending used during the picture's run at the Strand. Lenore Ulrich, the star of the picture, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., and Pete Schmid, of the Pallas press department; B. A. Rolfe, manager, and E. Victor Wilson of the Strand were present at the voting and eating place. If every dual ending Pallas production calls for our opinion over a luncheon such as this one, there will be no protest voiced if future Pallas pictures are offered with two endings.

Village Turned Over to Players

Pensacola, North Carolina, is a little nest of very modest houses among the mines, the lumber camp and the farms. There is a thirty-mile railroad which connects the village with the world via a typical "junction."

That's about all that can be said of Pensacola, except that it is owned by one man. And it was because he knew this man, Dr. Aldrich, that Director Ralph Dean of the Frohman Amusement company, took Alice Brady and a company there for the making of "Then I'll Come Back to You," the feature lately completed. A great deal of squeezing was necessary to get all the 34 players lodgings. It took 34 of the houses of the villagers to do it. Then the use of the whole town—railroad and all—was turned over to the company.

In return for the courtesies extended by Dr. Aldrich, General Manager Spiegel of the World Film Corporation gave the first showing of "Then I'll Come Back to You" in the Baptist Church at Pensacola. It was necessary to take a projection machine, several illuminating gas tanks and an entire motion picture equipment to Pensacola, as the town does not boast a picture theater and there is no illuminating means, other than kerosene lamps.

BIG PRODUCTION RACE

Paragon Director Tourneur and John Ince, Equitable Creator, Complete World Features in Exactly Same Time

Maurice Tourneur, production-creator of the Paragon Company, was handed the completed scenario of Arthur Stringer's "The Hand of Peril" upon the same day that Director John Ince of the Equitable producing force received the finished scenario of Harry Chandles' fiction story, "The Struggle." That was on January 23, and both these features were announced for release on March 27. That meant a keen artistic and constructive race.

. To secure the settings called for in "The Struggle," John Ince took his company to Miami, Florida, and thence by steamer to Manaos, Brazil, an eight-day journey across the Gulf of Mexico, the Carribean sea and up the Amazon river. At Manaos a week was lost securing government permission to use the leper colony there for certain scenes.

Tourneur's story required the construction of a nine-room house with the surface removed so that action could be seen going on in all the rooms at the same time. Also a large number of secret passageways and other devices were necessary. Delays were unavoidable.

Less than a month later the completed negatives of the two productions were received within forty-five minutes of each other. Each contains 307 separate scenes and the prints of the two features were shipped to the various World exchanges in the same cases.

Charlie Gave Syd $75,000

Sidney Chaplin, who is business manager for Charlie, received a present of $75,000 for his services in negotiating the contract which Charlie Chaplin has signed with the Mutual Film Corporation, by which the comedian is to get $670,000 a year. Charlie is not noted for spending money recklessly, either.

"Driftwood" Not on Program

The Ocean picture "Driftwood," which is being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation will not be released on a program.

"The open market is badly in need of just such strong features as 'Driftwood,'" said President Raver, "and although we had a number of program offers, in the long run the other way will mean more profit for us and for the purchasers of territory."

What is considered the "plum" territory of the United States in the purchasing of state rights, was recently secured by Walter E. Greene of the Greene Feature Film Company of New York and Mr. Abrams of the Boston Photoplay Company on the pictures "The Other Girl," from the Augustus Thomas play featuring James J. Corbett; "The Fortunate Youth" from the novel of the same name by Will J. Locke, and "Driftwood."

Hearst Plans Announced

EXCHANGES ORGANIZED

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST is getting his army organized for his march into film territory. The fact that this noted publisher was opening his own exchanges for the distribution of his own material was made known by MOTOGRAPHY in the issue of a week ago and now the details are ready for the public. According to information obtained in the offices of Edward A. MacManus, general manager for Mr. Hearst, the entire Hearst staff of writers and artists are to become affiliated with the International Film Service. When Mr. MacManus was asked to name some of these writers and artists he replied:

"Pick up copies of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst Magazine, Good Housekeeping Magazine, any of the Hearst newspapers and put down the names of the writers, editors, illustrators and cartoonists. Then you have the list of the International Film Service contributors. As a matter of fact, put the entire Hearst organization under the microscope and you have the backing and co-operation of the International Film Service."

Following Mr. MacManus' suggestion, we list up the following names of Hearst contributors: Rex Beach, Jack London, Robert W. Chambers, Louis Joseph Vance, Owen Johnson, Gouverneur Morris, Arthur B. Reeve, Dr. Charles Parkhurst, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Booth Tarkington, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, George Ade, Rudyard Kipling, John Temple Graves, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Maurice Maeterlinck, Charles W. Goddard, Basil Dickey, Rufus H. Dewey, John C. Clymer, Rudolph Block, Herbert Hancock (Hank), Bruno Lessing.

It is interesting to note that among the cartoonists of the Hearst organization are: Tom Powers, Tad, George MacManus (Bringing up Father), Hal Coffman, Opper, Herschfield, Herriman, Cliff Sterrett, Tom MacNamara (Us Boys), Windsor Macay.

In the Hearst organization are such illustrators as: Charles Dana Gibson, Harrison Fisher, Henry Hutt, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Nell Brinkley.

Unusual interest is aroused in the big cities of the country regarding the new type of exchanges, which is to be inaugurated by the Hearst organization. Mr. MacManus gave out the interesting statement that J. K. Burger had been appointed in charge of the exchanges. Inasmuch as the "hue and cry" of the new Hearst motion picture enterprise seems to be service to the exhibitor, Mr. Burger's appointment is particularly significant. It is one thing to want to give service but Mr. Burger has prepared his plans to do so.

Exchanges will be opened in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlanta and Boston, for the reason that a Hearst newspaper is in each city and for the reason that the entire newspaper staff will be part and parcel of the motion picture company. Offices also will be opened in Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, where important newspaper connections have been established. Each exchange will be complete in itself, absolutely independent and the duplicate of headquarters in the number of men employed and the facilities.

New York is in charge of Joseph Engel.

Boston is under Frank H. Vine, who has been helpful for many years to exhibitors in his past work with Eclectic, World and General Film.

Chicago is in good hands, in the person of John F. Bowman, who has the newspaper idea, which is "get it done, get it done right and get it done on time." He is known to his local exhibitors for his work on the Chicago Examiner and lately on "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," etc.

Los Angeles is in charge of George H. Atwood, one of the pioneers of the film industry. He is an old show man and one of the first theatrical men to appreciate the possibilities of motion pictures. He has managed the office of Boston, Albany and Dallas for General Film and has been in charge of Philadelphia for Pathe. His policy is "treat the exhibitors on the level."

Atlanta will look to George R. Allison, the original pathfinder of the South, for big feature productions. He is affectionately known to exhibitors south of the Mason-Dixon line. Allison fits into the Hearst organization because he has the newspaper idea, and he will always be on the alert to give his exhibitors an opportunity at publicity.

Philadelphia exchange is under the management of E. W. Sweigert, one of the real hustlers of the industry, known to the field for his work with Eclectic and General Film.

E. W. Dustin, who heads the St. Louis exchange, has been in the amusements business for eighteen years. He has been producer, exhibitor, and exchange man and therefore, he can particularly appreciate the viewpoint of the exhibitor.

Washington is under the jurisdiction of Fritz B. Wathme, known for his studio knowledge, his acquaintance with newspaper editors in his territory and his intimate knowledge of home conditions.

B. F. Lyon, in charge of Pittsburgh, is a comparative new-comer in the film industry. But his work for Pathe in re-organizating and building up their Newark, N. J., office, was excellent. He has been in Pittsburgh but five months and since his arrival he has become the confidant of every Pittsburgh theater man.

The San Francisco office is in charge of H. L. Knappen. He was a newspaper man of wide experience. His most recent newspaper work was as editor and advertising manager of the American Photoplay Weekly of Salt Lake City. He was serving in this capacity when he decided to enter the motion picture business. In 1915 he became identified with the Pathe Exchange, Inc., representing that company in Northern California and Nevada with headquarters in San Francisco.

BIGGER SUNLIGHT ARENA

To Accommodate the Making of the Feature "The Woman Who Dared" the California Motion Picture Corporation Enlarges Studio

"The Woman Who Dared" has been sufficiently daring to cause an enlargement of the sunlight stage of the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael.

By this extension the California people are doubling a stage capacity that, in the past, has been adequate for the accommodation of such pretentious productions as "Mignon," "The Unwritten Law," etc. Moreover, in addition to this sunlight arena, there is an enclosed stage electrically lighted. The combined floor space is said to give the California producers more extensive stage room than any other concern engaging but one company at a time.

"The Woman Who Dared," which is immediately responsible for the enlargement will, according to advance reports, be distinguished for the wealth of its sets. The play stars Beatriz Michelena and concerns itself with intrigue in European court circles. An opera house interior with a complete company on the stage is among the big scenes mentioned.

This elegance will find an effective contrast in another angle taken by the story, which carries it to the less polite intrigue of thieves and crooks in Rome's underworld. The coincidence by which these two threads of the throne and the gutter, cross, injects unusual interest into the plot.

A competition is being conducted by The Public of Chicago for the best scenario illustrating the single tax. Two hundred and fifty dollars, will be paid to the winner, who will also receive half of the amount paid for the story by the producing company accepting it. Colonel Jasper E. Brady, head of the scenario department of the Vitagraph company, is to be the judge. Manuscript may be for two, three, four or five-reel films and should be in the hands of the contest editor of The Public, Ellsworth Building, Chicago, by August first.

Keep in Touch With Your Patrons

BY TERRY RAMSAYE

Director of Publicity, Mutual Film Corporation.

HOW often have you written a personal letter to a patron of your theater? Probably very few exhibitors ever have even thought of applying this simple direct method of stimulating patronage and building up valuable good will for the theater, but at least one representative and successful theater man has made it the ground work of a continuous profit paying success.

William Henry is the man. He runs a theater out in the Central West in a city of about 100,000 population. His house seats 1,200 persons and his box office receipts show pretty close to a capacity business all the time.

Henry says personal letters have done it. Of course he gives due credit to good pictures properly presented, but he points out that equally good pictures, probably equally well presented by opposition houses, have not produced serious competition.

"I keep them thinking about my house," Henry explained to the writer the other day. "I keep them awake to the fact that I am running the theater for them. Instead of running this show for anybody that just comes along with the price, I am running it for my patrons, especially for them, I'm interested in them and what they want—that's the idea—see?"

Henry has a list of about 4,000 addresses of patrons, a list which he covers in the distribution of heralds, special announcements and the like. As a subdivision of this list he has about 1,500 names of families in his territory of patronage which he gives the attention of personal letters at least twice a year and probably oftener.

The postage, stationery and stenography bill of Henry's theater is quite an imposing item, but he can point to the box office report for justification.

"Every day I take out a handful of these cards from the list and dictate a letter, a short letter about ten lines, telling about something especially interesting coming ahead at this theater," Henry explained.

"The stenographer rattles the letter off and I OK it. Then she makes copies of the letter, every one an original copy on our theater letter head. Then along in the afternoon when I get around to it I sign every letter myself, with pen and ink. They are mailed with two-cent postage and they go into the homes just like other personal letters. I write them so they are received that way, too.

"I do not gush and bubble with fake enthusiasm about anything. I tell what I've got to say and quit. There is always something interesting to write about. All I have to do is sit down and look over my booking sheet, size up the pictures and the stars and I have all the 'dope' I need. I read all the trade publications and house organs, and I keep my own files and scrap book of information about the stars.

"Every letter that is written to this theater I answer the same day if possible. I keep the people thinking about the pictures in terms of this house. If some patron writes to ask me "How old is Anna Little?" I answer the letter myself, getting the information right out of my 'dope book.' I do not send the letter off to the company and let it wait for a reply at that distance. I want to capitalize that letter. If a patron wants to know about a player, it is a pretty good indication that the patron will come to my house to see the player. I want the patron to think about that star as though the star was working for me exclusively.

"A good example of the way I cover my letter list is this Chaplin letter," Henry continued, tossing over a carbon of a neatly typed announcement.

"As soon as the newspapers announced that President Freuler of the Mutual had captured Chaplin, I got out a letter to my whole list telling my patrons about it. Probably most of them saw the news in the papers about that $670,000 contract, but I wanted to tie up my theater with the idea. I wanted them to think about this big, high priced star as performing for them on my screen.

"It worked great. I got a lot of replies—also it certainly put it up to me to book the new Mutual Chaplins quick.

"I go at it just the same way when I book any big production. I got out a pretty long letter and sent it out about two weeks ahead when I booked 'Damaged Goods.' I wanted to give it time to sink in. I did the same thing on the 'The Girl and the Game.'

"I am always on the look out, too, to write some special personal letter about anything that may turn up. If any patron has a complaint, it is adjusted at once, and the usher always gets the name and address of the person involved so I can write a pleasant note the next day.

"It flatters the people. It makes me feel good, and it keeps my mind on the fact that I am serving the people. I know that letters make the people talk about my theater. I know it makes a lot of friends for the house. It certainly pays."

This is the way Mr. Henry announced to his patrons that Chaplin was under contract with the Mutual Film Corporation and that the new Mutual Chaplin's would be shown at his theater:

> Dear Madam:—I have just received official word from the Mutual Film Corporation that they have signed a contract with Charlie Chaplin and that they will pay him $670,000 a year. This verifies what you have perhaps seen in the papers. I thought you would be interested in knowing this and to know that then new Mutual Chaplin pictures will be shown at the Empire theater just as soon as they are available.

Here is a typical letter from Mr. Henry's files, showing how he takes advantage of the opportunity to get into and keep in personal touch with patrons of his theater:

> Dear Sir:—Thank you for asking one of our ushers about "The Miracle of Life." I am very glad to know that you are interested in this picture, as it has attracted a great deal of attention among the patrons of the Empire. You will be interested in knowing that I have today booked this picture for a return at the Empire for a week from Tuesday next, which will be March 7. I hope you will be able to see it here then.

Anyway, Henry is doing a lively business at 10, 15, and 25 cents admission, while a 5 and 10 cent house a couple of blocks away, is struggling to keep a padlock off the door.

EMBRYO AMERICAN PLAYS

A Pre-Natal Glimpse at Several Productions Soon to Be Hatched from the Busy American Incubators

The Signal Film Corporation is about to pick the shell and release the five-reel "Nancy's Birthright," which will appear soon upon the Mutual Masterpicture program.

The play deals, via thrilling situations and forceful pictured arguments, with modern social life, but avoids the maudlin, giving mainly free play to the most beautiful sentiments, such as love and hope.

Murdock J. MacQuarrie was the commander-in-chief of the company who acted "Nancy's Birthright," while Robert Doeran, a genius of the crank, captured some beautiful photography.

Edythe Sterling is featured in the dual role as daughter and mother in the story. Norbert Nyles plays a strong part opposite her. Millard K. Wilson is the "heavy."

When Art Acord, as the hero of "Under Azure Skies," is about to be lynched by a crowd of cattle rustlers, and is rescued in a new and sensational manner by Nita Davis, a big "punch" is put in the three reel Mustang drama, which has just been completed by Director William Bertram.

A mix-up of identities so that an English earl is involved in the crimes committed by his temporary valet, puts an unusual twist in "The Counterfeit Earl," a two part "Flying A" drama being produced by the American, with Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat in the leading roles.

Director Jack Halloway has finished the production of "The Man from Manhattan," a five-reel picture by J. Edward Hungerford, which again proves the dramatic ability of Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell, and other American favorites.

How an artist, whose previous work has been very mediocre, was able to paint a masterpiece makes an interesting story. Margaret Nichols, a beautiful and talented young actress, will make her first American appearance as the country girl in "The Masterpiece," which has just been started at the American studios.

COMING PARAMOUNTS

"Molly Make-Believe," with Marguerite Clark, and "The Love Mask," with Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid on Schedule

There are two five-reelers on the Paramount program for April 10—a comedy and a drama of the west.

Marguerite Clark will be the brilliant light in "Molly Make-Believe," the delightful screen adaption of the novel by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott. "The Love Mask" features Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid.

"Molly Make-Believe," produced by the Famous Players Film Company shows Marguerite Clark in an ideal role as the imaginative scamp, Molly Meredith. The photoplay is a delightful version of a nationally popular story. Infinite charm abounds in the story, which deals with the adventures of the irresistible Molly, who runs away when she discovers that her grandmother is in serious financial straits and conceives the idea of starting a correspondence for cheering the crippled and lonely. The narrative of her adventures is interwoven with an appealing love story and Miss Clark makes the character one of the most lovable on the screen.

Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid are the leads in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "The Love Mask," a breezy drama of life in California during the gold rush of '49. This picture gives Miss Ridgely an opportunity to appear in a role totally unlike anything in which she was before. Wallace Reid, the handsome Lasky star, as the sheriff, shows his ability as an actor in a manner which has not been equalled since he appeared with Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

EXHIBITORS' BILLBOARDS

Poster Advertising Used by Motion Picture Houses Can Be Much Improved, Says Mr. Burr of Paramount

Charles C. Burr, manager of trade advertising for the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has written an interesting article on advertising for Paramount exhibitors which is well worth the perusal of all live-wire managers.

Mr. Burr in discussing his subject says:

"A marked improvement in the quality of photoplays, features and short subjects has taken place in the last year.

If you have been fortunate enough to see a program made up entirely of Paramount Pictures, you have realized this. The same degree of improvement is noticeable in the construction and operation of the theaters which are being built today.

The newspaper advertising and publicity is also better. But there is one department of theatrical advertising which can be much improved. Some exhibitors seem to think that in their poster advertising all that is necessary is to slap their paper on a fence, board, or side of a wall. The same man who would not think of placing an ad in the paper without a good border cut, pastes his one-sheets around a tree trunk where nobody but a giraffe or the fanniest kind of a fan could hope to see it.

There is no advertising more important to the exhibitor than billboard advertising. There is nothing which might so easily suggest a good or a bad theater as poster advertising. In looking at a biilboard you often know at sight whether or not the theater advertised is the kind you wish to attend. You know, on receiving a lot of mail, you will instinctively pick out the best appearing or prettiest colored piece of print from the cheap "take-a-chance" kind—well, billboards act on people in much the same way.

If your posetr advertising is attractively displayed in a good location it will make an indelible impression. This builds a foundation for business for the coming years.

Most Paramount exhibitors are advertising quality theaters—they all are advertising quality pictures anvd must necessarily desire to attract quality patrons. No statement is more to the point than "quality begets quality."

Paramount has done its part, in fact, considerably more, in going to the expense of hundreds of dollars in preparing attractive one-sheets and stock 24-sheets which are given to the exhibitor free and may be procured from his exchange.

The 24-sheets have squares for six-sheets on either end, on which the six-sheet issued by the producing companies on recurrent leases may be posted each week.

These posters are very high class, attractively done in orange and black, which gives a striking contrast and fairly forces attention. The effect of the lettering and artistic handling of the subject insures the message being read."

"Nothing Can Stop Us"

Paramount Progress, the official exhibitors' organ of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, edited by Harry I. Day, has the following unique editorial under the title, "Nothing Can Stop Us," a slogan originated last summer by President William W. Hodkinson:

Did you every play football when you were a small boy?

Have you ever felt all the thrilling excitement of grabbing a well-worn rugby or, the latter lacking, Jimmy O'Brien's old hat from Teter Smith who played "quarter" and bucking head first through a mob of howling derivishes who were all in the game with you trying to stop you or help you—it mattered little which?

The point was to get through.

Breaking into business and breaking through business to the clear field ahead called "Success" is not far different from the good old game played out in the back lot.

It matters little what you use for the ball. The object is to go through.

"Going through" in business constitutes achievement. It means taking the ball across the line and sitting on it until the whistle blows and the umpire cries "Goal."

Take the game as you find it, the boys as you find them; play square and fight well and yours will be the satisfaction of looking backward over the field and saying "Nothing could stop me."

New Ince-Collier Play

It is announced from the Ince corner of Triangle that the well-known Kay Bee producer is soon to star William Collier in another production.

And this is to be a comedy, written by C. Gardner Sullivan. This will be Ince's second Triangle comedy, the first being "Peggy." Collier's co-star will be no other than Enid Markey, who has made an enviable place for herself in "Aloha Oe," "Between Men," and many other strong Ince features.

The story is woven around the exploits of a lazy spendthrift, and in this role Willie Collier is said to effervesce into the most thrilling sort of comedy.

Censors Cut Out Film's Point

It is probable that just so long as hurried and unscrupulous operations are made on film productions by boards of censors there will be a great deal of bungling and damaging work done.

A good example of this fact is seen in what the Pennsylvania film vivisectors did to the "Prohibition Film." Most of the drinking scenes were eliminated, notwithstanding the fact that these form the point of the whole production. Also such subtitles as "Sunrise. The cold gray dawn of the morning after," came out under the board's keen scissors.

FRIARS TO CELEBRATE

Completion of New Home to Be Acclaimed by Entertainment Tour of Leading Cities. Many Celebrities Take Part

The Friars' Club, the unique New York organization of theatrical men, noted for its entertainments and its dinners to stage and literary celebrities, is to commemorate the completion of its handsome new club house, "The Monastery," by a big Friars' Frolic, with a whirlwind tour embracing a circle of fifteen leading cities.

The opening performance will be given at the New Amsterdam theater, New York City, Sunday evening, May 28. The "road itinerary" is as follows: May 29, Apollo theater, Atlantic City (matinee); Forrest theater, Philadelphia (night); May 30, Academy of Music, Baltimore; May 31, Nixon theater, Pittsburgh; June 1, Cleveland, June 2, Southern theater, Columbus (matinee); Emery Auditorium, Cincinnati (night); June 3, matinee and night, Olympic theater, St. Louis; June 4, matinee and night, Auditorium, Chicago; June 5, Detroit Opera House, Detroit; June 6, Star theater, Buffalo (matinee), Lyceum theater, Rochester (night); June 7, Colonial theater, Boston; June 8, Providence Opera House, Providence. The several hundred Friars participating in the Frolic will travel in a special train of drawing room sleepers, with two dining cars. A concert band of sixty musicians will be carried, and there will be a characteristic parade in each of the cities on the route.

The general manager of the Frolic is Sam H. Harris, of the theatrical firm of Cohan & Harris, and the performance will be under the personal direction of George M. Cohan, who is the Abbott of the Friars. A. L. Erlanger, of Klaw & Erlanger, is the booking and advisory director. Associated with them will be an army of well-known stage stars. As in other years, when the Friars' Frolics have created enthusiasm by the lively character of the performances, this year's program will be devoted to comedy, and many of the greatest fun-makers of the stage have "signed up" for the tour.

The new Friars' club house, which is to be formally dedicated just prior to the opening of the Frolic, is on Forty-eighth street, near Sixth avenue, in the newest up-town theater district. It has a frontage of three city lots, and is one of the most unique buildings devoted to club purposes in Manhattan. The facade is of lime-stone, with numerous carved panels and gargoyles in keeping with the monastic name of the club.

"Angel Child" in Film Debut

"Mama's Angel Child" is going into filmland.

The well-known funny-page character is going to double her activities by going into motion pictures.

This animation is scheduled publicly for some time in September, the intervening processes to be begun along in May or June by the Emerald Motion Picture company of Chicago.

The Gaumont company wanted an ocean liner for "The Isle of Love," and so it just naturally went out and chartered one for its exclusive use. The play stars Gertrude McCoy, the former light opera favorite.

EVERY KNOCK A BOOST

In His Recent Tirade Against the Films Brisbane Really Proved the Industry to Be Much Alive

By E. D. Horkheimer,
Secretary and Treasurer Balboa Amusement Producing Company.

The funny Brisbane tirade at the Motion Picture banquet was another illustration of the old adage which regards every knock a boost. We have but to remember that it isn't customary to jump on "dead ones."

Mr. Brisbane's amazing discovery that motion picture producers are in business to make money is without doubt his masterpiece. Now that the cat is out of the bag and we have been discovered, there is no longer any need to dissemble. It is no betrayal to intimate that Mr. Brisbane may not be writing editorials for love or just to practice composition. He has always been held up as a shining refutation of the charge that newspaper men are not business men. However, it is not a reflection on anyone just because he knows how to turn a talent to profit. It's proof that he is using it advantageously. The gospel message of a $100,000 a year preacher is none the less effective because of his big salary.

While I do not believe it right to judge, yet may I not be too harshly judged for suggesting that mayhap Mr. Brisbane's aversion to the pictures exists because he regards them as becoming hot competitors for the same public he once swayed with his pen. Having written himself out, they are seeking other novelties. As for our producers not being able to agree on six master films—well, isn't this industry a bit young to subject it to such a test? Time is needed to get the right perspective of anything. When Homer wrote the Iliad and Victor Hugo told the now immortal story of Jean Valjean, none recognized them as what we do today. Years alone confer glory.

Really, the most striking thing about Mr. Brisbane's airy persiflage at the screen's expense is the shocking ignorance he displayed. But after the recent fiasco, I presume it is but another case of "much ado about nothing" to discuss Mr. Brisbane and the pictures seriously. Suffice to say, his employer has repudiated the super-editor's remarks. Once more the mighty have fallen. But thank goodness, the movies are still able to move!

PICTOGRAPHS VARIED

Large Number of Interesting and Educational Subjects Treated—"Preparedness," Clay Modeler, Bray Cartoons and Gyroscope

It certainly was carrying out the idea of preparedness when the editors of the Paramount Pictographs eight or ten weeks ago made pictures of the American soldiers from Fort Bliss, under General Pershing, who went over on to Mexican soil in order to provide the proper location for the pictures.

Major General Wood and several other army men aided in the preparation of the pictures because they realized that these Pictographs would be forceful arguments in favor of an increased army and equipment.

Then when the border war broke out there came a wide-spread demand for these Paramount army pictures and they proved to be immensely popular because Paramount had been "prepared."

Gallano "making faces" in the "Remarkable Hands" Series of Paramount Pictographs.

In the pictograph release of April 10 is shown Gallando, a clay modeler, at work. The human faces which appear under his skillful hand are impressive both for their faithful representation of life and for their humor. The lessons in carving are also found again in this release. This time the "patient" is a turkey. An animated drawing shows how the Hudson tubes were made, and in "The Hazards of Happifat," the latter goes a-farming.

"The Stone Age Roost Robber" is the title of the Paramount-Bray lively cartoon on the April 13 release. It deals with the humorous antics of a dragon, a man, a pup, a rooster, and a tortoise.

Another of the things which the Paramount "magazine on the screen" is explaining is the gyroscope, the invention which preserves the equilibrium of ships and aeroplanes. The visualized explanation of the rotating and gyrating wheel of the instrument is made by Elmer A. Sperry, the "father of the gyroscope." In one section of the picture a man is shown standing on a wing of an aeroplane while the aviator holds his hands above his head; in another the gyroscope is attached to the coat tail of a tippler and his unsteady steps are righted and he walks home with the utmost dignity.

Great Northern Rights Sold

The Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago has acquired the Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin rights to the Great Northern Film Company's latest release, "The Mother Who Paid." Joseph L. Friedman, the active head of the Chicago concern, made the arrangements upon his last trip to New York. He expressed great enthusiasm over the feature.

Sol. Lesser, of San Francisco and New York, also visited the offices of the Great Northern Film Company recently and acquired the Pacific coast rights to a number of its past releases.

In "The Secret Mating," a five-reel American Mutual masterpicture, by J. Edward Hungerford, there is a rectangular love affair instead of the "eternal triangle."

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

THE National Board of Review has come to my assistance this week with an answer to several exhibitors who have asked me questions similar to this:

12. Where can I get information on the best films to show to children?

For some time I have been trying to get around to compiling or having compiled this data which I think is of vast importance to the live theater man. He should have the children in mind always and while he must cater to the grownups, if he remembers all of the time that there are likely to be children in the audience, he will not show anything that would cause a censor to blush.

The National Board of Review has gone to some trouble to get up a list of films and the fact that this list has been sent out to representative women's clubs throughout the country should increase the drawing value of these pictures. The list is drawn from the entertainment program and bears the title, brand, distributor, number of reels and the time when reviewed by the board but not the release date.

The films selected follow and every exhibitor should keep this list on file for future reference as women's clubs are likely to be demanding them for children's matinees from time to time:

FILM PRESENTATION UNIQUE

"The Ne'er-Do-Well," the Big Ten-Reel V. L. S. E. Feature, Given Great Showing by Patch of Pittsburgh

William Moore Patch of Pittsburgh has proved that it is not necessary for him to have part of a feature film enacted upon his stage—as he did in his showing of "The Battle Cry of Peace"—in order to present a big picture with spectacular success.

This unusual exhibitor has just presented the big ten-reel V. L. S. E. feature, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," at his Pitt Theater at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to a dollar. Upon the stage was a representation of the Pacific end of the Panama canal, which plays an important part in the play. A real tropical storm also was presented. The foreground of the stage was a realistic imitation of a real jungle. Live monkeys and birds disported among the branches.

The musical setting consisted of a twenty-five piece orchestra, a men's chorus and a negro octette of singers and dancers. With such a presentation it is needless to say that "The Ne'er-Do-Well" is due for a generous run.

"CENSORSHIP" GOES OUT

"National Board of Censorship" Changes Name to "National Board of Review" as More Accurate Definition of Its Work

Hereafter if you speak about the "National Board of Censorship" you will be wrong.

There isn't any such thing any more.

It is now the "National Board of Review of Motion Pictures."

The board announces that it has made this change of title in response to public opinion, which is against censorship of pictures as un-American, as would be censorship of the press. The word "censorship" is emitted by many with as much of the villain-hiss as it is capable of producing, which is considerable.

Also the change in name is meant to give a more accurate idea of the work of the board. It indicates that its labors are those of editing rather than destructive "censorship." The national board believes in free expression, via either pictures, the stage or the press.

The board is composed of 240 members, serving voluntarily and without pay, from all walks of life. Their standards of review are drawn not only from their own wide experience but from constant correspondence with motion picture exhibitors and the motion picture public all over the country. It has over 700 people on its regular list of correspondents and works with a National Advisory Committee of nearly one hundred made up of prominent people in every state of the Union. This crystallization of public opinion has incalculable weight with picture producers because the producers have to give the public what it wants or go out of business. That is why producers voluntarily submit their films to the National Board and agree to abide by its decisions.

The board exercises its greatest power through its weekly official bulletin to picture exhibitors and city officials throughout the country.

The work of the board, since its organization in 1909, has resulted to an increasing extent in raising the standard of pictures, because it provides advice to the producers and a warning to the public. If a picture is shown that is bad, city officials throughout the country are at once advised of this fact.

ON MUTUAL BILL OF FARE

American Cuisines at Santa Barbara Are Making Six Five-Course Drama Dinners to Appear as Masterpictures De Luxe

There are six substantial drama-dishes being cooked in the American ovens at Santa Barbara. In fact each will be a five-course photoplay dinner. They will appear upon the dramatic bill of fare as Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe.

The chief chefs are Arthur Maude, Donald MacDonald, Rea Berger, Edward Sloman and William Russell.

The first of the drama-delicacies to be served by the Mutual will be called "A Courtesan." As one might guess, it is a sociological story, and is based upon a novel theme. In this five-part feature the leading role is that of a woman who suffers and sacrifices for the love she bears her only son. This part is taken by Eugenia Forde, who will be remembered for her good work as "Hagar," the Gypsy queen, in "The Diamond from the Sky."

"The Abandonment," another of the coming Masterpictures, features the seventeen-year-old veteran, Helene Rosson. E. Forrest Taylor plays opposite her in the role of the young physician who neglects the girl he is engaged to marry.

"The Overcoat," another de luxe production, is from the scenario by J. Edward Hungerford, known for his popular stories. Rhea Mitchell is the central light and William Stowell appears in the role of an ex-convict. Kenneth S. Clarke is the author of "The Reclamation," another powerful de luxe feature, which stars Winnifred Greenwood. The struggles over ownership of a water pool in the center of a cattle district of the west is the raison d'etre of the plot.

The fifth de luxe dish to come from the American cuisines is to be "The Secret Mating." This play is based upon the struggles for supremacy of a group of Wall street capitalists. "None So Blind" is a second feature to be directed by Edward Sloman and to star Winnifred Greenwood.

A number of smaller length features are also under way at the American studios for early release through the Mutual. Principal among them is "The Return," a two-part Mustang, featuring Arthur Acord. "Pierre Brissac, the Brazen" is the title of another two reeler now under way. Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne are the co-stars of "The Masterpiece," a third two-part subject. Marguerite Nicholas, the new American Mutual beauty makes her first appearance in this release.

Frank Borzage in a cowboy role and Anna Little are the featured players in "The Awakening," another two reel feature, set in a strong western atmosphere. In addition, work is all but completed on several single reel comedy pictures which are to be released by the Mutual at an early date.

Work has been started at the Gaumont Mutual winter studios, Jacksonville, Fla., upon "The Quality of Faith" a five-reel Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe. In this photoplay Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson have the star roles.

Frank Borzage's first production since returning to the directing staff of the American Mutual Company is entitled "Two Bits."

Borzage impersonates a U. S. marshal named James Hardeman, who is assigned to round up a counterfeiting gang in the California mountains. Anna Little, in the title role, is a charming little orphan who depends for her living upon the sale of flowers at "two bits" per bouquet.

Jed Simpson, sheriff of Red Gulch, to which character Jack Richardson imparts genuine realism, is the chief counterfeiter.

Film Aids Girl Patriot

"Defense or Tribute," the peace film, will assist little 10-year-old Marjorie Sterrett to build her battleship "America."

Marjorie was instrumental in causing a campaign to be launched in a great number of schools throughout the country to collect a fund for the building of a battleship to add to the United States navy. Every school child in the country will be asked to contribute a penny or two to the cause.

The film, which is in five parts, will soon be released. It is reported to be a thriller and also a remarkable appeal for preparedness.

New Field for Mabel Normand

A brand-new field of motion picture activity, it is announced, is to be opened to Mabel Normand by the Triangle interest, with whom she has just signed a new contract. She is to be a star in comedy-drama, with a director of her own, whose mission will be to select plays for her that will be along the lines of "Peggy," the story of rustic life in Scotland in which Billie Burke scored such a pronounced success.

Mabel Normand, who is to enter Triangle's new field of picture comedy.

Three reasons are given for this move — first, that Miss Normand's dramaatic abilities have burst the bounds of Keystone comedy; second, that she is too good a comedienne to be allowed to get away from that field entirely; third, that she has a personal following of movie fans who will be eager to see her in something affording more scope for her talents than the uproarious productions which have given fame to the name of Mack Sennett.

It is true of Miss Normand that despite her fun-making abilities, and her willingness to risk her life in the startling stunts of the Keystone studios, there has always been a distinct appeal in her work, apart from either comedy or thrill. In the most grotesque situations she has had a way of ingratiating herself into the sympathies of her audiences, and of evoking heart interest as well as laughter. There has always been drama in her comedy, and it seems safe to assume there will always be comedy in her drama.

Whether Miss Normand will make her first picture, in the unique field, in the east or on the coast has not yet been announced. She is now in New York enjoying a vacation from strenuous Keystone activities.

News from Northwest

By A. R. M. Sutton

What newspaper men might term a "scoop" has been accomplished by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., through its Seattle manager, F. C. Quimbly. Moving pictures on passenger trains and steamships seem promising for the near future, as a result of the Pathe enterprise. Already Mr. Quimby has arranged with the Northern Pacific to make a trial trip from Seattle to St. Paul and return, showing pictures en route to while away the time of the passengers. If successful, the railroad-show may become an actuality, at least on all of the Northern Pacific trains.

The Pathe people are arranging a program calculated to interest the traveling public. The Alaska Steamship Company and the Pacific Coast Steamship Company are also taking an interest in the proposition and something may be announced in the picture line for the Pacific Coast and Alaska steamships before long.

The Seattle board of censors and the managers of the various exchanges and of the leading motion picture houses held a get-together meeting Tuesday evening, March 21. Plans for the co-operation of managers and censors were discussed, and each group was pleased by the good feeling shown by the other, and it is felt that their getting together will lessen the difficulties of both. The question was discussed of censoring paper, i. e., passing a law that the advertisements in newspapers and on posters must show only scenes of the play, thus avoiding a misrepresentation of the picture.

James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, has purchased the rights for the whole United States of the pictures of the old English prison ship, Success.

The American, a Second Avenue house, closed temporarily on March 22, but will soon be reopened by Alexander Pantages with musical comedy and feature motion pictures.

F. C. Quimbly, district manager for the Pathe Company, has just returned from a trip to Butte, Mont., where he has established a new exchange to take care of the rapidly increasing business developed in that territory.

It is reported that a new motion picture palace, with a seating capacity of four thousand, is to be erected in the upper part of Seattle's business district by a company headed by Eugene Levy, manager of the Hippodrome.

"The Escape," D. W. Griffith's sex-eugenic-science drama, is playing return dates in the northwest and is reported to be drawing greater crowds this season than last.

The film dramatization of "Beating Back," Al Jenning's life story, has made its first appearance on the Pacific Coast and is playing to full houses everywhere.

The Lubin Company has just leased one of the Northwestern Fisheries Company's large canning factories near Cordoba, Alaska, for the production of a feature, the name of which will be announced later.

Big exhibitors on the Pacific Coast are showing a great deal of rivalry to obtain the first run on George Klein's new Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance." Miss Burke is one of the greatest favorites in this territory, as is shown by the fact that her play, "Peggy," had an extension run of eleven days at the Columbia Theater in Portland.

A large number of students at the Broadway High School of Seattle have formed a Scenario Club, with the intention of giving considerable study to the art of writing photoplays.

A committee has been formed by a number of the exchange and theater men of Seattle to help in the national campaign of raising the $500,000 endowment fund for the Actors' Home in Staten Island. Frank Fountain, the Northwestern Paramount representative, is chairman of the committee. It is expected that Seattle and the whole Northwest will contribute very liberally to the proposed fund.

Jensen and Von Herberg have engaged Sebastion Burnett, baritone, late of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, to sing at about three o'clock each day at the Coliseum. This musical attraction added to the Russian orchestra is drawing large crowds of people who were not formerly in the ranks of the film fans.

EXHIBITORS CONTRIBUTE

Hundreds of Generous Managers Join in the Campaign for Actors' Fund—Cities Hold Big Benefit Performances

Hundreds of motion picture houses, representing every part of the country, have already pledged their support to the cause and will turn a share of their receipts of May 15 over to the Actors' Fund.

The plan, as is universally known now, is to raise $500,000 of the million dollar permanent endowment for the Actors' Fund of America and the Actors' Home on Staten Island. This half million is to be raised by the manufacturers, actors and exhibitors in the picture industry. May 15 has been agreed upon as the date upon which exhibitors are to contribute a share of their receipts.

The following list of contributing theaters shows the wide range of support this movement has received:

A benefit performance for the Actors' Fund was given at the Eighty-First Street Theater, New York, on April 3, with the managing director of the house, A. L. Shakman, in charge. Seventeen celebrities of the screen appeared, including Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Virginia Norden, Florence La Badie, Gladys Hulette, Violet Mersereau, Mary Miles Minter, Mabel Normand and Al St. John.

Chicago is also planning a big benefit performance, under the leadership of James R. Quirk, vice-president and general manager of Photoplay Publishing Company. William Gillette, George Fawcett, Thomas Santschi and a number of others are scheduled to assist.

The Motion Picture Hospital Fund of several hundred dollars started to provide for the needs of film people only, has been turned over to the larger movement, as two actors' institutions are unnecessary. Al. W. Gross, chairman of the Pittsburgh local committee, has sent $100 in from the first benefit there. Mary Pickford has contributed $2,000, her share in the New York Hippodrome performance.

"The City that Was"—a huge pile of discolored concrete and a mass of burned and twisted steel—is all that remains today of that magnificent Moorish city built on the island of old Fort Augusta, Jamaica, for the setting for William Fox's $1,000,000 Annette Kellermann picture. This dream city, unsurpassed in architecture, beauty and environment, was destroyed by a scourge of fire. Of course, its destruction is a part of the picture.

The Psychology of Picture Production

BY SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON
President American Film Co., Inc.

INDISPUTABLE evidence of the progress of the motion picture industry is seen in the constant demand by theater patrons for something new. The responsibility to meet this demand is naturally upon the producer.

S. S. Hutchinson

In the making of pictures and particularly, the chaptered pictures, or serials as they are commonly called, this adherence to the popular demand must be absolute.

There must be selected some big, dominant theme capable of lending itself to the spirit of adventure and romance in a manner that commands belief, and which finds answering note in the human heart, for the present day motion picture is not for the eye alone.

It is often easier to find such a theme than to picturize it.

When I undertake for my companies the production of a so-called photoplay I ask myself this question:

"What are people talking about and in what are they interested?"

The answer can almost be picked out of the air. Surely the daily press carries the answer in black and white. That which is news in the press is news in the film, so I do not feel that I am stretching my imagination greatly when I compare the newspaper editor to a picture producer, or perhaps it should be the other way about since newspapers were here first.

The editor must enable his readers to learn the latest news about the latest happenings. That is the reason people buy the newspapers. It is an up-to-the-minute business and the progressive producer must be actuated by the same motives as the editor. He must be governed by the same mental mechanics and be guided by the same viewpoint of the public taste.

Of course, I do not mean the public is ahead of the producer in the matter of ideas. It would be fatal to the industry to permit such a change, but I do say that with the education given the public in the way of motion pictures the producer is required to keep scurrying along or he will discover that instead of leading, he is being led.

It seems only yesterday that the daily press carried accounts of the loss of a United States submarine in Honolulu harbor with its entire crew of gallant men. The heart of the nation was touched by the heroic sacrifice to duty. Special trains were rushed along the continent carrying submarine experts to be transported at record speed, aboard swift cruisers to Honolulu, that the cause of the terrible disaster might be found.

The records show "something went wrong with the batteries and the crew died from bad air."

Why bad air?

Editorials in the press of the country asked this question daily, and it will remain unanswered until a positive safeguard comes from the realms of science.

Now here is where the psychology of picture production comes in. A photoplay built upon a theme in which the entire nation is interested must retain that pent-up interest. The thought struck me as a producer just as the first report of the disaster must have startled the news instinct of the country's editors.

I immediately issued instructions to the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company Inc., to prepare to produce a chaptered photoplay to be called "The Secret of the Submarine."

A photoplay with such a storied basis must naturally carry the thought of preparedness, also, a psychological subject. Thus we have a theme of genuine national interest, with opportunity for educational propaganda that might result in the performance of a national service.

In these days of "watchful wakefulness" we must shade into our commercial selves a realization of our duty to country and there is no more definite medium with which to reach the national heart and hearth, than the motion picture.

I recalled this statement credited to Thomas A. Edison, chairman of the national defense board:

"To my mind there is no reason why an undersea boat should not be supplied with a fish-gill-like apparatus, so that it can draw its supply of air directly from the water. Thus the lives of the crew will not be dependent upon the compressed air supply or on the ability of the boat to reach the surface. When this invention is perfected submarine navigation will be perfectly safe and secretive."

Could I portray in "The Secret of the Submarine" sufficient dread of "the waters under the sea" and the sacrifices written into their exploration to interest men of science, to urge them on in the search for a safeguard against the "bad air" peril?

If the picture aroused the latent genius of but one man, I felt I could write down an entry in the book of deeds well done.

Of one thing I am certain, "The Secret of the Submarine" will tell the people of this nation, of the unmentioned heroism displayed by un-named men, that a bulwark of defense may ever be raised along our miles of sea-coast.

And these deeds will be told, not in a manner inspiring a dread of things, but woven into the life story of a beautiful girl, replete with all the thrills that might logically be expected in her battle against constant and unscrupulous enemies.

Miss Juanita Hansen, as the girl, is exactly the type of a dauntless American girl, beset upon all sides but ever ready to muster her energies in the struggle in which she knows she is right. Thomas Chatterton, as the naval officer-hero is required to perform some feats of daring unusual even for motion pictures and to carry, by his definite appreciation of dramatic values, moments exceedingly tense.

The production well on its way I looked about for an author, qualified to write a novelization for the newspapers which will publish the story.

Again, my producer instinct was akin to the editorial instinct, for I sought a "news-author," not merely a literary man. Such an author must necessarily possess a mind scientifically molded to an understanding of sea and sub-sea craft and he must understand the perils besetting men and nations in these days of world-wide uncertainty.

An author to meet my ideal must be a player on the stage of the world's events, a chronicler of actual deeds of flesh and blood, for no imaginative writer could possibly put into his novelization the sincerity I planned for the picture.

I had met Mr. E. Alexander Powell, F. R. G. S., the famous war correspondent, and much to my surprise I learned he is in this country recuperating from his editorial activities "somewhere in France." I explained to him what I intended to do and he was immediately enthusiastic, and we drew up the contract which gives to the film world one of the foremost writers of fact of the present day.

I felt that Mr. Powell in his years of activity on battle fronts has had unusual opportunities to observe the scientific campaigns being waged on the inventors of all nations to safeguard those brave men who make up the crews of submarine boats.

He has seen too, the dangers of unpreparedness and the safety of preparedness and consequently is undeniably qualified to write on this timely theme.

In the production of "The Secret of the Submarine," which will be in fifteen chapters of two reels each, we will be accorded every opportunity to give to our scenes the acme of realism through the co-operation of the Navy Department, permission having been granted us to use both men and boats at the naval base of San Diego.

"The Secret of the Submarine" will have its first release May 8, through Mutual Film Corporation.

"When President Hutchinson of the American Film Co. first discussed with me the writing of a novel based upon a pictured theme of preparedness, it struck me immediately as a capital idea," said E. Alexander Powell. "During my years as a war correspondent in various countries I have had unusual opportunities to observe the scientific battles being waged by the inventors of all nations to safeguard the crews of sub-sea craft.

"I have seen, too, the red-tape binding burdensome trivialities to questions of moment, resulting in nations being unprepared, not so much for war, as for peace. The present war in Europe, the ravages of which I have seen and the dangers of which I have encountered, make it more necessary today than at any time previously, that the American people realize the risk of being unprepared. The thought came to me that in the motion picture there lay a definite way to reach every American citizen. I likened the motion picture, in my own mind, to a national line of defense, for intelligent propaganda has always been necessary to quicken the pulse of nations.

"If the producers would inject a wee bit of patriotism into their producing efforts they could perform a service nation-wide in effect and of priceless national benefit. They could carry the gospel of preparedness directly to the people in a manner unlike any other medium. And it is not necessary for producers to make pictures of the 'blood and thunder' type to make this propaganda, rather would they be more effective if the danger of being unprepared is given a bit more subtle presentation.

"This could be done without any loss in productive strength. I was turning the thought over in my mind when I received a long distance telephone message from Mr. Hutchinson. He inquired whether I would entertain writing the novelization of a motion picture, something I had never attempted. I hesitated at first but when he told me the story would center around preparedness I was immediately interested. I visited the U. S. naval base at San Diego with Mr. Hutchinson. The officers assured us of every co-operation.

"I realize to the fullest extent the national value of pictures such as 'The Secret of the Submarine,' portraying as will this picture a realism of sea dangers and the falsity of our assumed national safety."

FIGHT SLIDES SOLD

Kraus Manufacturing Company Secures Rights to Pictures of Willard-Moran Fight Taken by Champion Sports Company

The most "forceful and striking" scenes of the Willard-Moran championship fight have been made into slides taken from the films made by the Champion Sports Exhibition Company, which purchased the picture rights of the contest at a large figure.

The fight slides were made by the Kraus Manufacturing Company to which also has been turned over the agency for the marketing of the slides. These still pictures form a very interesting showing of the big fight to be used where films cannot be seen.

A number of concerns have been claiming to sell exclusive slides of the contest, but Joseph M. Gaits, manager of the Champion Sports Company, states that the Kraus company now has the only authorized and authentic copies made at the fight. The slides can be had either from the Kraus Manufacturing Company or through the Champion offices.

Sherry Offices in Buffalo

The William L. Sherry Feature Film Company is growing with speed. It has just announced the opening of an office at 145 Franklin street, in Buffalo, New York.

The Sherry company are distributors for Paramount pictures for the state of New York.

Mary in a New One

Famous Players has just contributed two new plays to the Paramount program.

The first is "The Eternal Grind," five reels featuring Mary Pickford as a factory slave. The second stars Valentine Grant and is called "The Innocent Lie." The latter also has five parts. These pictures are released on April 17.

The three single reel issues of the same Paramount week are the Burton Holmes Travel picture, "Up and Down the Pasig River, the Filipino Thames," a new Pictograph series and the Paramount-Bray lively cartoon, "Farmer Alfalfa's Scientific Dairy Farm."

Paramount Pictographs are also giving the visualized arguments of Henry Reuterdahl, naval expert, in attacking the naval plans of Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

News from Washington

BY THOMAS O. MONK

Washington Correspondent for MOTOGRAPHY

MOTION picture producers or distributors are within their rights in refusing to sell or lease their films as long as there is no unlawful intent in such refusal.

This is the formal ruling of the Federal Trade Commission at Washington which as exclusively stated in MOTOGRAPHY two or three weeks ago had received a complaint that a well known distributing company had refused to furnish its films to a certain exhibitor. The Commission has made a careful investigation of the case, and unanimously reached the conclusion that a producer or distributor can select his patrons.

The Commission decides that upon the facts presented no violation of the Federal Trade Commission act or the Clayton act is shown, and that a producer or distributor has the right to refuse sale or lease.

The complaint has been dismissed. The action of the Commission in thus ruling that producers or distributors were free to distribute their product will clear the situation in connection with this phase of the industry. A decision along any other line would have caused considerable confusion, and would have been an obstruction to the orderly development of the industry.

The complaint alleged that the refusal of the distributing company constituted unfair competition and was therefore a violation of either the Federal Trade Commission act or the Clayton act.

JANUARY exports of American motion picture films reached the highest mark yet recorded for a single month, 54,966,372 linear feet valued at $898,604 being exported as against only 12,898,691 linear feet valued at $435,172 in January, 1915. The imports for January were negligible as shown by the figures given below.

For the seven months ended January, 1916, 129,661,669 linear feet were exported, valued at $3,942,015, as against 39,817,035 for the seven months ended January, 1915, valued at $1,856,309.

Following are the figures in detail as given in the official report of the Department of Commerce just published:

Motion picture films, not exposed, 1,004,675 linear feet valued at $109,655 in January, 1916, as compared with 10,107,542 feet valued at $257,048 in January, 1915.

Motion picture films, exposed, 53,961,697 linear feet valued at $788,949 in January, 1916, as against 2,791,149 feet valued at $178,124 in January, 1915.

For the seven months ended with January, 1916, the exports of motion picture films, not exposed, amounted to 25,989,057 linear feet value at $815,135 as compared with 24,324,044 feet valued at $696,172 for the seven months ended with January, 1915, while for the seven months ended with January, 1916, the exports of motion picture films, exposed, amounted to 103,672,612 valued at $3,126,880, as compared with 15,492,991 feet valued at $1,160,137, for the seven months ended January, 1915.

In other words the American photoplay is continuing by leaps and bounds to increase its popularity abroad.

The United Kingdom continues as the leader in the receipt of American films.

France in January, 1916, bought a large amount as against no recorded purchases in January, 1915.

Following is a statement of the exports by countries:

France, 2,392,556 linear feet valued at $78,041 in January, 1916, as compared with no recorded exports in January, 1915.

United Kingdom, 49,432,065 linear feet valued at $653,990 in January, 1916, as compared with 10,576,441 linear feet valued at $290,462 in January, 1915.

Canada, 882,858 linear feet valued at $67,040 in January, 1916, as compared with 984,999 linear feet valued at $75,542 in January, 1915.

Jack Sherrill and Alice Brady in "Then I'll Come Back to You." World Film.—Frohman.

Pauline Frederick in "Audrey," Famous Players Feature—A Paramount release.

The fantastic man on the left in his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes is William S. Hart, hero of "Hell's Hinges" and other forceful Triangle dramas. He is discussing with his director the Aztec romance in which Kay-Bee will soon present him. The man next to the camera-king is Monte M. Katterjohn, the author of the play. The picture on the right glimpses a set and scene in the forthcoming Aztec drama.

Brazil, 74,810 linear feet valued at $3,317 in January, 1916, as compared with 15,000 linear feet valued at $746 in January, 1915.

Other countries 21,184,083 linear feet valued at $96,216 in January, 1916, as compared with 1,322,251 linear feet valued at $68,422 in January, 1915.

Imports.

The imports of motion picture films, sensitized but not exposed in January, 1916, amounted to 3,906,600 linear feet valued at $46,809 as against 733,762 feet valued at $15,961 in January, 1915; negatives to the value of $4,181 as compared with $25,537 in January, 1915; positives to the value of $19,243 as compared with $32,993.

PAVLOWA FILM IN NEW YORK

Elaborate Universal Production, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," with the Incomparable Danceuse, Impresses Manhattan Trade

Anna Pavlowa's great motion picture vehicle, Lois Weber's artistic film handiwork, and Universal's ambitious production, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," made its premier New York appearance at the Globe theater on Monday night, April 3.

This famous Broadway showhouse was not packed to the doors nor jammed beyond its seating capacity, for the attendance was mostly invitational, and an excess gathering would reflect nothing but generosity upon the manufacturer of this picture. But we can be eulogistic without the aid of these well-worn and loyal press agent phrases.

There were only a few vacant seats in the theater on this night, but it might have been entirely devoid of occupants, so quiet was the place during the tense moments of the play and so concentrated the attention during the whole length of the picture. That omen of evil, restlessness, evidenced in shuffling feet and shifting positions, which usually shows up with the eighth or ninth reel and brings with it expressions of anxiety for the exhibitor, did not so much as threaten an appearance Monday night. And a film crowd makes a panicky audience.

The film had much to live up to in the way of advance claims and publicity, but it met the issue without loss. Lois Weber's adaptation of Francois Auber's opera, "Masaniello," built a masterly story about the dumb peasant girl whom Pavlowa impersonated with her natural grace and talent and, at times, fired with love, emotion, and terpsichorean abandon in a manner which is all too rare on the screen. Enveloping or surrounding these qualities is an atmosphere of comprehensive direction and successful staging; never too prominent, yet always agreeably present.

For the exhibitors, the greatest drawing power in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" lies in Pavlowa's name. It will attract. After it has succeeded in bringing the people to a theater, the film in which Pavlowa, the famous Metropolitan Opera House dancer, is starred will gratify their desires. It is well made and can stand scrutiny.

Supporting Pavlowa are: Rupert Julian, Wadsworth Harris, Douglas Gerrard, John Holt, Betty Schrade, Edna Maison, Hart Hoxie, William Wolbert, Laura Oakley, N. De Brouillet and the entire Pavlowa Ballet Russe. The picture was produced under the personal direction of Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

Company Makes First Film

The Minneapolis Motion Picture Company has just completed its first picture, "Cohen's Triumph," a one-reel comedy. This debutant drama will have its first run at the Minnesota Strand Theater, one of the Saxe Amusement Company houses.

The filming of "Cohen's Triumph" gave Minneapolitans their first chance to see "how the movies are took." And they took generous advantage of it. Thousands crowded about the camera men and the company of forty as they worked in a street scene.

The Minneapolis company will continue to produce one and two-reel comedies, dramas and melodramas.

METRO SPENDS $250,000

Lee-Jones, Inc., of Chicago to Place Advertising in a Large Number of Cities Regularly for Twelve Months

The nation-wide advertising campaign in daily newspapers which was announced by the Metro Pictures Corporation after its annual meeting a few weeks ago will begin in the first week in April. Contracts have been signed with the Lee-Jones agency of Chicago for the placing of the entire business.

It will begin simultaneously in a large number of cities and will continue for a year. The appropriation approximates $250,000 for newspaper space alone.

The contracts signed by President Richard A. Rowland on behalf of Metro and by O. J. Gunnell on behalf of the Lee-Jones provide that the agency will work under the direction of Metro's publicity department and in conjunction with the Metro exchanges throughout the United States.

The advertising will continue regularly and large amounts of space have been contracted for in a chain of newspapers reaching from coast to coast. Metro's advertising has been the subject of enthusiastic comment since last August, at which time a series of inserts in color were inaugurated in MOTOGRAPHY and other trade journals.

The newspaper advertising forms part of a general publicity program submitted by Arthur James, Metro's advertising and publicity director, at the annual meeting and approved in full at that time. It subsequently was worked out in detail by the department and Mr. Gunnell of the Lee-Jones agency.

Ivan and Merit Companies Move

The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has removed its offices to new quarters, especially constructed and designed for its needs, to the second floor of the Leavitt building, 126 to 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

The Ivan film distributors throughout the country when in New York will have for their own use while in the city, for the purpose of transacting such business as they may have, the use of a private office, stenographer, telephone and all other office facilities. Especially noteworthy is the splendid projection room, which may in truth be termed a private theater, so ample in size is it and so well equipped.

To better serve the exhibitors of the state of New York and northern New Jersey, the Merit Film Corporation has removed from its present offices at 110 West Fortieth street to the Leavitt building, 126 to 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

The Merit Film Corporation is the exclusive distributor of all Ivan productions in the state of New York.

Australia Wants to Produce

Although moving pictures have been made there for ten years or more, Australia now claims to be about to take a big boom in the producing end of the industry. The opportunities are said to be excellent and producing companies are springing up like mushrooms.

The main reason for the sudden stimulation of the making business there is the fear held by many that as the European war causes conditions to become more and more acute, there is a danger that film importation from other countries may be prohibited as a luxury.

The largest Australian producing company at present is the J. C. Williamson, Limited, which is also a legitimate producer. Most of the pictures made so far are somewhat in the amateur class. A man has been despatched to America by one concern to get some pointers.

WITH MEXICO FLAVOR

Lubin Company Has Released a War Play With Mexican Guerilla Scenes—Boils Popular Big Features

The difficulties along the Mexican border give special significance to the stirring military scenes of "Soldier Sons," a three-act photoplay by Captain Wilbert Melville, which has just been released by the Lubin Company. A realistic battle between United States troops and insurrectos is one of the big punches in the screen drama. The insurgents for this scene were furnished on contract by a thrifty guerilla leader. The reports of the hanging of several Americans reached the studio camp of the Lubin photoplayers just before the photoplay battle was staged and in the hand to hand conflict scene the insurrectors were handled with more realism than the scenario called for.

And speaking of Mexico, Edgar Lewis, who is directing the new multiple reel feature, "The Toilers," in which Nance O'Neil is featured by the Lubin Company, had intended to take his company to the Mexican oil fields for the atmosphere required for the production. As the border troubles grew hotter, however, some of Lewis' players developed violent maladies and exhibited telegrams of the "Come-home-at-once-Mother-is-worse" sort. It was then deemed advisable to seek the oil regions of Pennsylvania for the necessary oily scenes.

Should a woman in love with a penniless husband accept financial assistance from a wealthy former suitor? That is the question handled in Lubin's "Dollars and the Woman," the feature which was recently barred from Pennsylvania by the censors of that state. The story really is perfectly harmless, being taken from Terhune's story, "Dollars and Cents." Ethel Clayton has the leading role.

Lubin is catching—or continuing—the boiling habit. "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," with Marie Dressler, and Raymond Hitchcock's "A Wonderful Wager" are to be issued as two-reelers containing the essence of the longer original productions.

Washington has eighty motion picture theaters, and it is estimated that fully 80,000 persons attend them every day in the year, including Sunday. In fact, Sunday is a popular day to see the pictures in Washington, and some of the theaters have continuous performances.

The population of Washington, according to the 1910 census, was 331,069, but it is estimated that it is now fully 380,000, if not more.

Establishing another new element in the romantic history of film development, Mr. Ince has announced that he will dedicate his big peace spectacle, "He Who Returned," to the mothers of the dead. The long dedicatory message will appear on the screen as a dignified prelude to the production.

AROUND THE "WORLD"

Large Number of Screen Celebrities Working on New Features and a Strong List of Coming Releases Announced

A dozen directors are busy at the four World-Equitable studios generaling the making of a number of features in which will appear more than twenty stars of recognized rank.

Maurice Tourneur is completing "The Closed Road" with House Peters, and Equitable is completing another three-star picture, "The Tyranny of Love," with Frank Sheridan, Edna Wallace Hopper and Muriel Ostriche. Holbrook Blinn has been at Electric Park in Baltimore working in a coming elaborate romance, while Molly King is starring in "The Call of Love," and Frances Nelson in "The Older Sister." Alice Brady has returned from Florida with the company which has been making "The Grubstaker." Gail Kane is engaged on "The Other Sister," with Frank Powell directing.

Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson, each noted stars, will appear jointly in "Human Driftwood" as the regular April 10 release, while Equitable will offer Carlyle Blackwell in "The Shadow of Doubt" with Jean Shelby.

April 17 brings Kitty Gordon and her famous wardrobe, her illustrious personality and widely advertised back in her second World Film production, "Her Maternal Right." Equitable, on the same date, will release its first three-star picture, "By Whose Hand?" in which Edna Wallace Hopper will make her camera debut and in which are co-starring Charles J. Ross and Muriel Ostriche.

April 24, Equitable will offer Bruce McRae, the distinguished Broadway star, and Gerda Holmes in Richard Le Gallienne's "The Chain Invisible." During the same week the World Film Corporation will offer Edwin August as star and director of and in "The Social Highwayman" in which Ormi Hawley, the noted screen player, will handle the principal feminine role opposite him.

Jane Grey in "The Surrender" will characterize the program of the Equitable concern on May 1 which "The Feast of Life" as the World Film contribution on the same date. "The Feast of Life" was produced by Paragon with Clara Kimball Young, Doris Kenyon and a typical Paragon cast of stars.

Sally Fisher and William Gillette Are Among the Feature Personages of the Forthcoming Productions from the Chicago Studios

Essanay has enrolled at its Chicago studios Sally Fisher, the Dillingham star, to play in the coming photo-feature, "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row." Another recent addition to the Essanay forces, William Gillette, noted for his years of remarkable work on the stage, has nearly completed his work in the multiple reel feature, "Sherlock Holmes." Mr. Gillette will also star in "Secret Service," another special production.

Other important dramas soon to be released from the Essanay art-factories are "According to the Code," and "That Sort." The three-reel plays announced for May include "The Danger Line," "Once a Thief," "The Frame-Up" and "The Man Who Couldn't Be Kind." A number of two-reelers will appear, including "In the Moon's Ray," a re-issue featuring Francis X. Bushman. The other twin-reelers for May are to be "The Double Cross," "Dregs of Gold" and "The Little Samaritan."

Two more of George Ade's fables also will be released this month, including "The Fable of the Undecided Brunette." The public is also offered two of Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Books on American and Foreign Cities, each accompanied by five hundred feet of scenic.

CHAPLIN'S "CARMEN" READY

Essanay Releases Four-Part Burlesque on Famous Story with Charlie's Moustache Playing Prominent Part—Edna Purviance Opposite

The mystery in regard to the Essanay-Chaplin photocomedy, "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," has been solved and exhibitors who have been wondering what had become of this film, announced several weeks ago, have had their inquiries answered. For the film now is released as a four-part feature through the V. L. S. E.

The care with which this picture was taken is shown by the footage of film, there being 16,000 feet in all. This was trimmed to 4,000 feet in the finished picture.

Chaplin is seen in an entirely new make-up in this comedy. Gone are his old tramp clothes, his dress suit and his overalls. He appears in the uniform of a soldier, but of such a disreputable type that a real officer would be asked for his resignation. But Chaplin has not given up his moustache or shoes. Despite the costume it is the same Chaplin, the same carriage, the same walk and the same queer antics.

All the world knows the story, which has been translated into every language, made into a play, an opera and now burlesque in photoplay. The thing is so big it readily lends itself to burlesque. Chaplin as the smitten soldier uses Edna Purviance and the situations to such effect that it is a continuous laugh.

ELMENDORF TALKS WIN

Bookings Are Coming in Fast, According to Dr. Lowenthal—Small Towns Are Being Given Preference—Play on Percentage

Realizing the demand of the theatergoer in the small towns for Elmendorf travel talks, which heretofore have been presented only in the larger cities, The Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., with offices in the Schiller building. Chicago, is concentrating booking efforts on these smaller theaters. That the exhibitors in these towns know the value of the Elmendorf talks is shown by the number of high-class booking contracts that are being received every day. A few of the theaters booked last week, according to a statement sent out by Dr. Albert A. Lowenthal, secretary and treasurer of the company, are as follows:

Grand, Burlington, Ia.; Princess, Quincy, Ill.; Burtis, Davenport, Ia.; Lyric, Clinton, Ia.; Grand, Macomb, Ia.; Orpheum, Ft. Madison, Ia.; Lyric, Springfield, Ill.; Armory, Geneseo, Ill.; Varietie, Canton, Ill.; Roseland, Roseland, Ill.; Illinois, Chicago Heights, Ill.: Princess, Quincy, Ill.; O'Neill, Lake Forest, Ill.; Garden, Harvard, Ill.; Palace, Muscatine, Ia.; Sanders, Harvard, Ill.; Princess, Woodstock, Ill.; La Petite, Ill.; Primrose, Morris, Ill.; Orpheum, Ottawa, Ill.; Habit, Danville, Ill.; Crescent, Pontiac, Ill.; Memorial Opera House, Valparaiso, Ind.; Cosmo, Gary, Ind.; South Bend High School, South Bend, Ill.; Bijou, Hammond, Ind.; Wallace, Peru, Ind.; Orpheum, Michigan City, Ind.; Century, Mishawaka, Ind.; Columbia, Muncie, Ind.; Angela, Alexandria, Ind.; Orpheum, Hartford City, Ind.; Grand, Elwood, Ind.; Starland, Anderson, Ind.; Union Grand, Union City, Ind.; Orpheum, Winchester, Ind.; Grand, St. Marys, O.; Elite, Defiance, O.; Princess, Van Wert, O.; Brown, Wapakoneta, O.; Palace, Rockford; Grand Opera House, Bluffton; Dethrick, Belvidere; Princess, Woodstock; Majestic, Beloit.

When it is understood that these bookings provide for at least one showing a month for the entire year on a percentage basis, the optimism of those associated with Mr. Elmendorf can be understood.

MORE WHACKS AT CENSORSHIP

Picture Interests, Stage, Press and Public of Kansas Join in Anti-Censor Campaign—New York Exhibitors Do Likewise

The motion picture, stage, newspapers and the public of Kansas have joined forces with the idea of surrounding, capturing and annihilating the censorship law of the Sunflower state.

This mobilization of forces was accomplished at the recent joint convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Amusement Association of Kansas. Committees were appointed to lay out the campaign, with the aid of J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. The resolutions adopted declared the convention's pledge to use every effort to eliminate the Kansas censorship law and at the same time a declaration was made against suggestive and indecent pictures. Money was subscribed to carry out the anti-censorship law campaign. There were present at the convention 367 exhibitors, exchange, supply men, and theater owners. W. H. Willey, formerly vice-president of the Exhibitors League, was elected president of the Kansas Amusement Association.

The exhibitors and picture producers of New York state so vigorously opposed a bill in the legislature proposing the formation of a state board of censors that a special investigation of the measure has been ordered.

"Setting the Stage"

During the making of "The Fires of St. John," the V-L-S-E feature in which Nance O'Neil is starred, Director Edgar Lewis altered the landscape gardening surrounding a beautiful southern home, wired the house for electricity and cut a French window in one side of the mansion to satisfy the scenario.

He also performed an extensive operation for the removal of a certain large tree from the front yard of one of the leading citizens of Thomasville, Georgia, where some of the scenes of the play are being made. This tree was needed over by the mansion above mentioned and so was transplanted there. Mr. Lewis also remodeled the environs of the county jail to suit the needs of the drama.

New York Strand Celebrates

The management of the Strand Theater, New York, is making elaborations for the forthcoming second anniversary celebration. The theater will be decoated for the event and the entire uniformed staff will appear in new uniforms.

Manager Rolfe promises an exceptionally strong bill both as far as the musical program and the film attractions are concerned. Singers of international reputation have been engaged for the event.

Now come Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington to give the lie to the old adage that an actor cannot write a good photoplay. These two stage luminaries have just sold to the Gaumont company an unusual scenario which has been named "The Show-Down." The story has a metropolitan setting, and is rich in situations which make motion picture patrons lean forward in their seats. It is now being picturized by George D. Proctor, scenario editor for Gaumont.

"The Vital Question"

Vitagraph Melodrama Offered by V. L. S. E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

RELEASED April 3 under a somewhat deceptive title the latest Blue Ribbon feature is a melodrama dealing with bank investigations, a young woman who marries a man she cares nothing about to protect her weak brother and a young district attorney's activities in disrupting an unlawful trust. This story by Joseph L. Norris and adapted by Marguerite

Bertsch has much about it that is trite melodrama and a little that is not. It does not seem as though five reels were necessary for the telling of "The Vital Question."

S. Rankin Drew produced the picture and a cast of popular Vitagraph players was selected to interpret the parts. As to the acting, Leo Delaney is the best in the cast. Mr. Delaney worked with sincerity to make the district attorney an effective character. If Adrian Scarsdale is not convincing the fault is not chargeable to Mr. Delaney, who in many scenes does some splendid work.

The story tells of a young woman who breaks her engagement with the candidate for the office of district attorney because she believes that he could have helped her father out of the difficulties which caused him to take his own life. Peter Worden, who has wealth and desires social prominence, is determined to marry Beatrice. The latter's brother is a worthless sort and by plunging him into debt Worden forces Beatrice's consent to become his wife.

Both Worden and Beatrice are unhappy and Richard continues to gamble and drink. Scarsdale is now district attorney. Upon entering office the first thing he does is to start an investigation of the trust of which Worden is head. Reading about it in the papers, Worden immediately sets to work in the effort to block Scarsdale. He is unsuccessful and visits the official. He tells Scarsdale that if he continues the investigation he will prosecute Richard King for forgery. Scarsdale is still in love with Beatrice and she pleads with him to protect her brother.

Worden goes even further with his scheme. He orders his secretary to bribe one of the members of the grand jury. The secretary is a man of many talents and he finds little difficulty in doing this. The bribed juror is discovered. Then there follows a number of scenes in Worden's home. The end finds Worden dead from a bullet fired by his secretary, the secretary under arrest, Richard free, though guilty of forgery, and Beatrice happy in the thought of her future with the district attorney who triumphed over the trust.

Anders Randolf is Peter Worden, and though he can hope for no sympathy in such a part his acting is commendable on the whole. Virginia Pearson as Beatrice gives a performance of her usual quality, and George Cooper is Richard King. All the players are handicapped by a story that is inconsequential at every turn. The picture has interesting scenes and it will entertain. Perhaps the fact that it follows a Vitagraph production of such high merit as "The Two-Edged Sword" is responsible for the impression that "The Vital Question" is an agreeable but entirely unexceptional feature offering.

"Charlie Chaplin's 'Carmen'"

Four Act Essanay V. L. S. E. Release of April 9 Reviewed by Geneviev Harris

WITH Charles Chaplin as Darn Hosiery (Don Jose), this version of "Carmen" furnishes four acts of fun, both because of Chaplin's clowning and because of the clever travesty of scenes from the opera. It is at once an elaborate parody and a slapstick comedy, and the blending is clever, since neither is overdone. The main points of the story are suggested, and the most important scenes are acted, with a difference. The players act their parts with great seriousness throughout, which adds to the humor of the situations. At no time do they seem conscious of their own clowning. Much of the humor lies in unexpected twists given to scenes worked up in a most serious manner.

Edna Purviance as Carmen is a pretty and effective foil for Chaplin. She and May White, as Chiquita, stage a most furious fight. The band of smugglers in the mountains and along the rocky coast appear in melodramatic make-up. Darn Hosiery is sent to subdue them, and before they can bribe him, he steals all their money. But he falls a victim to Carmen's charm, and for her fights a duel with another officer. Then he is obliged to leave the country, and he goes to the mountains. But Carmen will have nothing to do with him since he is out of a job, and she runs away with a toreador. Later they appear as the "idols of Seville," in a carriage drawn by a very large horse and a tiny donkey. Darn Hosiery sees them and follows them. He meets Carmen near the arena and stabs her, then himself. But when the toreador falls over them, they come back to life, because the knife Darn Hosiery used was a stage dagger with a disappearing blade.

The supporting cast includes John Rand as the toreador, Leo White as the officer, and Jack Henderson, Ben Turpin and Wesley Ruggles. The play will delight both those who like Chaplin and those who like a skillfully presented parody.

"Hoodoo Ann"

Mae Marsh the Star of Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THERE is such true atmosphere of what is known as the small town in "Hoodoo Ann" that one feels it to be the most appealing quality embodied in the picture, with one exception, which is the charm of Mae Marsh in the title part. In "Hoodoo Ann" one gets a glimpse into three homes and all three give one a perspective of the typical half portion town, as George Ade calls them.

The author of "Hoodoo Ann" went to the motion picture theater for some of his material. There are a number of scenes which are laid in a picture theater and on the screen of this theater there is unreeled a wild western drama; this is made amusing by means of cutbacks to Ann and her sweetheart seated in the audience. Later events in Ann's eventful life are based upon what she saw at the show that night, and the author does this at the expense of his leading character by casting a shadow of deep hue on her intelligence. In calculating the picture's worth, however, the story comes in for secondary consideration. The acting and the director's treatment are the main issues.

An ever sympathetic and most appealing girl is the Hoodoo Ann of Mae Marsh. We first see Ann in a foundling asylum where her's is a hard lot. The orphanage catches fire one night, and that is the end of the unhappy place as far as Ann is concerned, for the elderly people who care for her that night decide to adopt the child. Ann becomes a real pet, she is given everything she desires in the way of clothes. She and her next-door neighbor Jimmie Vance grow very fond of each other and it really looks as though Ann is rid of the hoodoo the cook-palmist at the orphanage told her about.

The happiness continues until Ann plays picture actress. Her foster father's revolver is loaded and it shoots when she points it in the general direction of nowhere in particular. This causes a most serious complication. The townspeople as well as Ann believe that Bill Higgins has been shot. He is nowhere to be found and as the town marshal accuses Mrs. Higgins with murder Ann confesses, and just as she does that Bill walks into the picture. A lover of hard cider and weary of his wife's tongue lashings, Bill had sought the solitude and quiet of the distant hills, but the chill air had driven him home after a day and a night in the open.

The subtitles are in many instances bright and humorous.

The picture in its entirety is in a farcical vein, though there are some few dramatic moments. Lloyd Ingraham produced the picture. His selection of settings was guided by good taste and the action is well directed throughout. Robert Harron plays opposite Miss Marsh. Charles Lee, Wilbur Higby, Loyola O'Connor, William H. Brown and Anna Hernandes are included in the cast. Mae Marsh makes "Hoodoo Ann" a picture well worth seeing. It is diverting and enjoyable entertainment.

"The City of Illusion"

Ivan Drama of Love and Check Books Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

LESS melodramatic than the majority of previous offerings by the Ivan Films, this company's latest release, "The City of Illusion" is a pleasingly acted and well photographed romance whose light moments and humorous incidents prove more effective than the dramatic scenes.

The story tells of a country maid who marries a Southern landowner who is in a position to give her every comfort and a number of luxuries. The bride has heard a lot about the attractiveness of New York and longs to visit the wonderful city. She lives in almost perfect happiness with her husband until a handsome lawyer from New York enters the house as her husband's guest.

Hobson, the lawyer, though engaged to be married, encourages her to confide in him and even tells her that he loves her. She puts great faith in Hobson and is willing to leave Stanford if the New Yorker will take her to the city. Stanford discovers his wife and Hobson in a rather compromising situation and orders the latter out of the house. Claire insists on a divorce and to force her husband to this she tells him that she has been unfaithful to him.

Stanford agrees to a separation for six months and if at the end of that time she still wants a divorce he will arrange it. Next we see them all in New York. Claire finds that Hobson is married. She demands him to divorce his wife as he had encouraged her to divorce her huband. Hobson's wife calls on Claire and when she is told that Claire gave up her right to some thousands of dollars to be free to marry Hobson, Mrs. Hobson immediately draws upon her bank account for the amount and gives it to Calire. This makes all the trouble which ends in happiness. The financial difficulties are straightened out and Claire returns to her husband, confessing that she told an untruth when she said she was unfaithful.

The cast Ivan Abramson assembled to enact this story, written and directed by him, is as a whole commendable. Mignon Anderson is the featured player, being an effective Claire. Carleton Macy as Stanford gives a convincing and satisfying performance. Bradley Barker is a handsome Hobson who is elected to the office of District Attorney following Stanford's retraction of the statement that the lawyer wrecked his home. Hobson's campaign slogan is "down with graft."

Guido Colucci realizes the humorous possibilities of his part and Paula Shay is pleasing as Hobson's wife. Maxine Brown, Joseph Burke and Blanche Craig are prominent in the cast. "The City of Illusion" will entertain but the story does not warrant the length of six reels given to its portrayal. It would be a better picture were it shorter.

"The Wall Between"

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Star in Military Play. Reviewed by T. C. Kennedy

A ROMANCE dealing with social caste in the United States military service proves an excellent vehicle for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. With a story so consistently interesting and the production which the Quality Pictures Corporation has given the play "The Wall Between" should be a popular offering. This story, adapted from the novel by Ralph D. Paine, depicts quite vividly one of the sore spots in the army service in this country. That the authority invested in commissioned officers is in some cases abused and that snobbishness does exist there is no secret, but at the same time a condition of this kind cannot be given too much publicity or general discussion.

"The Wall Between" is a play made of good material and it is treated in a pleasing and interestingly romantic manner. Mr. Bushman has a part which is admirably suited to his talents. He is Sergeant Kendall, a man of education who has risen to the highest position permissible under the conditions existing. That part of it is all very well; for Kendall does not lament the fact that he can become nothing more than a quartermaster sergeant, but his superior, a young lieutenant who is impressed with his own importance, mistakes priggishness for discipline. He would have all under him bowing and saluting even while they were off duty.

Lieutenant Burkett is always in shop as it were. There seems no good reason why the commissioned man and the non-commissioned man cannot meet on an equal footing at a country club or in any social circles. Mr. Bushman is a convincing Kendall, which is saying a good deal for the actor's ability. Kendall seen in the person of many other actors would tend to be too heoric for anything but the story books.

"The Wall Between" is a love story, telling of the quartermaster sergeant's romance with a girl whose uncle is a colonel in the service. Edith cares nothing about the social position which goes with shoulder straps, and she manages to meet Kendall secretly. When the regiment is sent to Nicaragua Kendall there distinguishes himself as a soldier. He lives up to the high regard in which both the enlisted men and many of his superiors hold him. When the regiment returns he is granted an honorable discharge and is free then to marry Edith with the consent of her uncle, Colonel Dickinson.

The battle scenes will thrill most any audience. John W. Noble produced the picture and Mr. Noble has frequently in the past demonstrated his skill in treating a story of this type. The action is realistic and in all departments the production is artistic. Miss Bayne is seen to marked advantage as Edith Ferris. Robert Cummings plays Colonel Dickinson splendidly and John Davidson's Lieutenant Burkett is a most hateful fellow. Sidney Cushing, Helen Dunbar, Charles Prince and Edward Brennan all win favor by their acting. "The Wall Between" ranks with the best Metro pictures.

"The Iron Claw"

The Sixth Episode of the Pathe Serial Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE map which made its appearance in the fifth chapter of "The Iron Claw" and of which Legar holds one half and Golden the other, is the basis for the developments contained in "The Spotted Warning," the sixth episode of the serial produced by the Feature Film Corporation. The release has much in it that is interesting, and the acting of the popular cast continues to live up to expectations.

The photography which has so far revealed the thrilling incidents Arthur Stringer constructed has been of a high order, but there is one scene in this release calling for particular praise. The scenes in Golden's library are beautifully lighted and the players as well as the settings here show to great advantage.

In the beginning of "The Spotted Warning" Golden receives a letter from Legar, demanding the other half of the map, on which there is written some very important confession or statement. Margery and Manly urge him to comply with Legar's message, but Golden emphatically refuses. Then another letter is received. In this note Legar threatens to subject Margery to the "spotted warning." From Margery Golden learns that this is something terrible, but she fails to say just what it is. At any rate, he feels the situation is grave and determines to send the girl to her grandmother's.

Margery sets out in her motor car and the driver is instructed to go fast. The Iron Claw learns this from his henchman, the butler in Golden's house. He discusses it with his other associates and, despite precautions, the Laughing Mask, known also as the mysterious righter of wrongs, overhears the conversation. Legar's men stop Margery's car, but the Laughing Mask arrives in his racing machine and makes off with her. He takes the girl to her own mother's home instead of her grandmother's.

Golden, from the story his chauffeur tells him, believes Margery is now in Legar's hands, so he agrees to meet one of the Iron Claw's accomplices and deliver the torn map. Manly enlists the aid of an amateur aviator, who brings him in a biplane to the meeting place, the top floor of a downtown office building. There is a struggle, in which the map is lost and the henchman killed by a fall from the window.

Creighton Hale's fight with the crook is very well done and quite exciting. There is also a thrill furnished by the automobile incident. There is an incident in this release which causes Margery to suspect that her own mother may be the Laughing Mask, though the mother smilingly denies it. Pearl White is prominent in "The Spotted Warning," mostly for her attractive appearance. What acting she is called upon to do in this chapter she does in her usual pleasing manner, but there is little to be done.

"Sold for Marriage"

Triangle-Fine Arts Story of the Russian Peasantry. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

LILLIAN GISH'S characterization of a Russian peasant girl and the atmosphere and pictorial beauty of the scenes are more impressive than the story which "Sold for Marriage" tells. It is a sympathetic romance in which the aunt and uncle of Marfa deem it their duty to sell their pretty charge at a good price. The play is carried by Miss Gish in the central role and the striking effects supplied by the director, William Christy Cabanne.

"Sold for Marriage" is a picture that will find favor generally. The story is thin but it serves as a vehicle for the featured player and the basis for the production of many beautiful pictures. The scenario is by William E. Wing, who has succeeded in making five reels out of a play that could in reality by depicted in much less footage. This is admirably, skilfully done, and "Sold for Marriage" holds the interest unflaggingly. The ending is commonplace, but it is the only thing which one can find fault so it can be forgiven.

Miss Gish's portrayal of Marfa wins her the sympathy of the audience, she assumes the role of a Russian peasant in a thoroughly convincing manner. Just why Miss Gish impresses one as an actress of great skill and little warmth is indeed a question, but the fact that her work seems to lack natural color and spirit remains. In fairness to her we must insist again that her characterization is technically beyond criticism, and it is not at all unlikely that others will experience the natural warmth and sincerity we missed.

Marfa's affection for Jan, a young Russian who has recently returned from America, makes her rebellious when her guardians try to sell her to an elderly man who is ready to pay them a good price for the pretty child in marriage. The bachelor marries a girl who is less independent and Marfa comes in for abuse at the hands of her uncle and aunt. Marfa's actions toward the new governor who is attracted by her beauty make it necessary for the girl and her guardians to flee to America. On the boat they meet Jan; consequently Marfa's love grows stronger. But on arriving here the aunt and uncle contrive to separate the happy couple. Marfa is about to be forced into a marriage with an ugly Russian when Jan calls in the police, who have determined to put a stop to the sale of Russian girls for marriage.

Frank Bennett is a very good type for his role as Jan, but Jan as played by him is not an especially manly man. A. D. Sears, Walter Long, Pearl Elmore, William E. Lowery and the other members of the cast are convincing in appearance. The snow scenes and those which show a severe storm in progress are highly successful in the effect they produce upon the spectator.

"The Net"

Thanhouser-Mutual Masterpicture of the Sea. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ACTION was apparently the goal of the author and the director of "The Net," which was produced in Florida by the Thanhouser Company. It is the story of a young fisherman who falls in love with a woman he rescues from the sea and when she deserts him he realizes that it was not love but infatuation or passing fancy. The picture's title was suggested by the hold which this vicious woman gains on him when she appeals to the young man's honor, pretending that she loves him and has returned to him on that account when in reality she has returned because she read in the papers that he is the missing heir to an immense fortune.

There is plenty of action in the picture. Something new is always happening to make the plot thicker. The second girl the fisherman rescues is the daughter of a man wrongly accused of some crime who is hiding from the law, the mysterious girl is a thief and her companion is a detective who agreed to save her from jail when she offered to share her stealings with him, and the rival for the innocent girl's hand turns out to be the man from whom the mysterious girl stole, so one cannot complain of a scarcity of developments.

The story is melodrama of a very conventional sort and if the director strove to make it anything else he labored in vain. What the director has done was to produce a sufficient number of interesting scenes, which hold the attention as episodes and not as portions of the story itself. And in this he had the cooperation and assistance of a conscientious cast. The players are of course unable to make their characters real but they made sincere efforts to give the climatic scenes strength.

In the beginning of the picture the handsome fisherman saves the woman she discovers lashed to a piece of floating wreckage. After her recovery he asks her to marry him and she consents. This promise she reminds him of when she comes back after leaving him without even saying goodbye. To save her father from arrest the girl the fisherman really loves informs him that she cannot marry. But the outcome, which is obvious from the beginning, finds the virtuous happy and the adventuress buried in the quicksand.

Bert Delaney is the good-looking fisherman and Marion Swayne is his very pretty sweetheart. Ethel Jewett is the mysterious girl and Inda Palmer is the fisherman's mother who intuitively forecasts events which come to pass days later. Arthur Bauer and Morgan Jones have the other important parts.

"The Traffic Cop"

Thanhouser-Mutual Masterpicture Released April 6. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH the aid of some officials connected with the New York police force the Thanhouser Company has produced a picture which gives many interesting views and incidents common to the policeman in the metropolis. There is a melodramatic story connecting these details. In the story comedy predominates. New York's Police Commissioner and a party of friends were present at the Mutual projection room when "The Traffic Cop" was shown for review and there was ample proof that the humorous incidents produce the desired effect.

The scenario is by Phillip Lonergan and the direction by Howard M. Mitchell, who plays the cop; of course his name is Casey. The story was devised to bring in some of the many interesting happenings in the life of a New York cop and it is a fact that the play serves this purpose well. Mr. Mitchell is an able and convincing cop. He is on the traffic squad and rides a horse gracefully, brings the unscrupulous banker to the law and administers a thorough thrashing to the men the banker sends to chastise him.

Mr. Mitchell's performance is worthy of the support Gladys Hulette renders him. Miss Hulette is cast as the cop's sweetheart, whose uncle, the banker, steals her inheritance. Miss Hulette's acting is always a delight and the performance she gives in "The Traffic Cop" is no exception.

In the opening scenes Casey rescues a girl whose horse runs away in the park one day. It happens that they have met before; a number of years ago when they were mere children. Casey thereafter is a frequent visitor at the banker's home where the girl lives. The cop's brother is cashier in the uncle's bank. The brother is arrested in a pool room raid so he feels that he is helpless when the banker plans to accuse him as the thief of the funds which are missing from the bank.

Casey's sweetheart averts the arrest of the innocent young man by a clever ruse. Then Casey himself sets to work. He takes the banker's assistant to a lonely island in a row boat and there forces a confession of guilt from him. To make his case stronger Casey traps the banker into a complete confession. The last scene shows the cop and his sweetheart in a fond embrace.

"The Traffic Cop" will no doubt find its most receptive audiences in New York. But its appeal is by no means restricted. The scene where the banker sits smiling in expectation of the beating which the cop will receive at the hands of his footman and chauffeur only to be startled when Casey carries their limp forms to the awaiting automobile, will be as funny in one locality as in another, and the rescue of the girl will thrill. Ernest Howard is the banker, and an oily deep-dyed villian he is.

"A Flickering Light"

Two-Reel American "Mustang" Release of April 14 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is an interesting little play, well presented, in which Anna Little has an appealing role, with Jack Richardson as the villian and Frank Borzage, who directed the play, as the hero. The western settings are realistic and well photographed. It is the story of Madge, a little dance hall girl (Anna Little), and Jim, a cowboy (Frank Borzage), and, unlike most romances, this one begins with their marriage. Jim is celebrating with other cowboys at the saloon and dance hall of the town, when he is attracted by Madge, one of the girls. He asks her to marry him. Since, just before this, Hardy Anderson, a ranchman (Jack Richardson), had asked her to become his housekeeper, saying that no one would marry a dance-hall girl, Madge accepts Jim's proposal. They are married, but when Jim recovers from the effects of the celebration, he regrets his act and treats Madge very coldly. The rest of the play deals with Madge's efforts to win her husband's love, and her gradual success.

Finally Jim is called away to aid in a round-up and he leaves Madge in their home, apparently without regret. But the separation teaches him that he has grown to love the girl, and he returns home gladly. In the meantime, the ranchman returned to the town and followed Madge to Jim's home. Madge protects herself with a revolver until Jim's arrival sends the ranchman away. Then Madge learns that she has won Jim's love.

Anna Little's presentation of Madge is especially good. She holds the sympathy throughout, and in this play it is important that she should. Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson enact their roles skillfully. Karl Coolidge wrote the story.

"The Girl and the Game"

"Driving the Last Spike," Chapter 15, Signal Serial Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

CHAPTER FIFTEEN ends the railroad serial which J. P. McGowan produced from the Frank H. Spearman story, in which Helen Holmes is featured. The rapid pace set by the preceding episodes does not slacken. The last crash, fittingly, eliminates the villains, and Helen and her friends may, we suppose, lead peaceful lives hereafter.

The episode begins with a scene showing Helen, who appears now in a costume suited to her station in life, instead of her well known sailor suit, driving the last spike in the railroad built with such danger across Superstition range. Then a special train, gayly decked with flags, makes the first journey over the road.

But Seagrue, the defeated rival, determines on one last piece of deviltry. To make the fiendish scheme for revenge plausible, it is attributed to a streak of insanity Seagrue has developed. However, in the acting of the character this is not shown. Seagrue appears as usual. He sends for two crooks in his employ, and orders them to get Storm and Spike out of the way. They kidnap the two, intending to place them in an ore car where they will be crushed when the mass of rock is poured from the chute of the mine.

They succeed in putting Storm, bound, into the car, but Spike escapes, after hanging from the bridge, suspended by the ropes around his wrists. He warns Helen and together they race in a locomotive to overtake the ore car. They rescue Storm just before the rush of rock into the car. The incident is harrowing, the suspense being cleverly handled.

When Seagrue finds that the men escaped, he plans another scheme. During the party at which Helen's engagement to Storm is announced, he has his men concealed in the garden without. At a given signal from Seagrue, who is a guest, they are to fire at the man before a window, Storm. But things go wrong. The men misunderstand and fire when Seagrue himself is before the window. Seagrue is killed. There is great excitement, and an automobile chase after the murderers. It ends when the car in which they are escaping is demolished by a train, as spectacular a scene as any which preceded it.

The railroad built, their enemies out of the way, Helen and Storm are married.

"The Girl and the Game" has been, as announced, a true serial of thrills. Each chapter has been exciting. The situations have been clearly presented and the suspense well worked up, cleverly handled. Director McGowan deserves credit for his good work in this, and for his acting, in the role of the escaped convict, as well. Helen Holmes sustained her role of heroine with much spirit. The photography throughout most of the serial was pleasing.

"Wives of the Rich"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released April 10 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STRONG play, interesting and plausible, is this release, which T. N. Heffron produced from a story by Allen Curtis Mason. In it Grace Darmond plays the role of a young woman whose main interest is in gambling and who must resort to trickery to gain money for her losses, since her husband, played by Harry Mestayer, tries to check this vice by cutting her allowance.

The play is effectively presented, and the characters clearly drawn. The interest lies in the characters, but there is no lack of action and suspense.

When Grant's frivolous wife begins to lose heavily at cards he tries to curb her gambling tendency by limiting the amount of her spending money. But the young woman, who has not the decision, in fact has no desire to stop playing, manages to get the money from her husband on other pretenses. She is trapped in one of her tricks when she buys a necklace on approval, pawns it, and then can neither return it nor meet the bill when it is due.

In this predicament, she turns to Robert Baker, a friend who has frequently offered her money. With his loan she pays her debts, then faces the question of paying Baker. When she receives a note from him, asking her to call one evening, she is afraid to refuse. She goes, armed with a revolver. In a struggle with Baker, who believes she is in his power, the revolver is discharged, killing the man. However, through a fragment of the note she received, Grant learns where his wife has gone, and follows her. He finds Baker dead, the revolver beside him. He quickly removes all evidence of the struggle, and makes it appear that Baker has committed suicide. Then he returns home to forgive his very much frightened and repentant wife.

While the events in themselves are melodramatic, they are quietly and logically presented. The interest does not slacken before the last scene. The ending of the play is a fitting one, and cleverly managed. Harry Mestayer enacts well the role of the husband, while Grace Darmond presents a clear picture of a willful, spoiled young woman. Lafayette McKee, as Baker, Lillian Hayward and Emma Glenwood as society women, handle their roles well. The photography in the play is good.

"The Wayfarers"

Three-Rreel "Flying A" Drama Released April 15 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"HEART INTEREST" dominating an exciting plot makes this play one which will be well liked by audiences. The story is good and is clearly presented, without too much complication, while the principal characters, Frank Andrews (Alfred Vosburgh), and Grace Deering (Vivian Rich), quickly win sympathy. There are pretty scenes, and several thrilling ones.

Frank Andrews has lost his property through an investment shark, Renfrew, played by George Periolat. He goes to the man's office to force him to make good the loss, but is roughly ordered away. He returns again, and finds Renfrew dead, stabbed by a stiletto paper knife. He is discovered in the office and accused of the murder. Realizing the strength of the circumstantial evidence against him, he makes his escape. At his boarding house, when hiding from his pursuers, he meets a girl who is about to commit suicide, as the "one way out." Since both are treated cruelly by fate, Frank suggests that they run away together.

They go to a western town and live happily together. Frank is employed as a surveyor and while he is away, Grace meets a young man from the city, Jim Martin, who falls in love with her before he knows that she is married. When Frank returns, Martin recognized him as the man wanted for Renfrew's murder. He threatens to betray Frank and gain the reward, unless Grace will go away with him. Grace then confesses her knowledge of the affair, that Renfrew was accidentally killed in a struggle with her when she had upbraided him for a wrong done her sister. Martin will not believe her story and leaves to warn the authorities of Frank's whereabouts. But on his way the motorcycle is struck by an automobile and he is killed. When Frank and Grace, terrified, open the door to those they suppose to be officers of the law, they learn of the accident and find that their secret is safe.

The story is handled convincingly, and the human, pathetic elements of the situation emphasized, rather than the melodramatic. The photography is good and there are many pleasing scenes.

"The Lightbearer"

Essanay Drama by Charles J. McGuirk Released April 8. Reviewed by John Fiske

TOUGH saloonkeepers "never get no credit" from playwrights. The public doesn't want to admit that there is any good in the barkeep's makeup and the playwright must not forget his public. But usually it takes more than one beating to convince a saloonkeeper and ward boss who is in good standing with the powers that be, to pin a "closed" sign on his own door. That's the only criticism I am going while he showed skill in weaving the threads of the plot, one regrets his choice of material. For, as the play stands, it is not one which will interest exhibitors whose patronage is chiefly among the young people. It is not an uplifting play for boys and girls, who make up a large percentage of the audience in many houses.

While evil which is true to life may be presented in screen plays—in fact, must be presented if they are to mirror life as it is—the danger in this play lies in the fact that here evil is presented almost as a mere incident to complicate the plot.

Leslie Austen has the principal role, of James Cannon, a young engineer, whose weakness of character is shown in the early part of the play, when he spends time wishing for wealth instead of working for it. He soon finds an easy way to gain it, when he meets and wins the love of a wealthy girl, Helen Maitland. He marries her, but she soon discovers that her money was the attraction for Cannon, and the two are very unhappy. At this time Cannon turns for sympathy to Grace Andrews, his stenographer, who had loved him before his marriage. The husband and wife are reconciled after the birth of a daughter. Cannon breaks off his intimacy with Grace and goes west to earn his own fortune. He is successful. A letter comes one day from Grace, but he destroys it unread.

While Cannon is in the west, his baby daughter dies. Mrs. Cannon, fearing the effect of this loss on her husband, accepts the doctor's suggestion that another child be substituted, one whose mother has died.

Years later, when the daughter is almost grown up, the story is resumed. The girl has always disliked Cannon, and he has no control over her, to his great sorrow. At last Mrs. Cannon determines to tell him of the substitution of this child for their own. Cannon is horrified and refuses to forgive the deception. Then the doctor tells the rest of the story—that the girl is really Cannon's own child, and that Grace died when she was born. So Cannon is in no position to withhold forgiveness from his wife.

Octavia Handworth plays Mrs. Cannon, Margaret Adair is Grace, Adelaide Hayes is the daughter, and Herbert Fortier the doctor. The acting of the entire cast is good.

"The Greater Wrong"

Three-Reel Lubin Drama Released April 13. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a well-presented play, consistent and interesting. A great deal is put into three reels, without undue crowding. The characters are clearly portrayed. George W. Terwilliger, who directed the play, also wrote the story, and to offer on "The Lightbearer," the three-act Essanay drama of the slums, by Charles J. McGuirk. And as honest criticism should be constructive, the reviewer should suggest a better way. Perhaps the author and producer will object but it seems to me there was an opportunity for a delightful touch of comedy in that scene in the bar room. Would it not have been better had the rejuvenated pugilist, who had taught the minister how to whip the saloonkeeper, put up the sign when the latter admitted his defeat as ruler of the district? Perhaps not. It's only a suggestion anyway and offered as an appeal that more light comedy touches be introduced to relieve what appear to some as impossible situations in too many photoplays.

Except for that point, which must be taken only as a one-person opinion, "The Lightbearer" is a delightful drama of modern times and is of value on any theater program. The author has whipped an understandable story into a pleasing play that has been produced with care and thought. It is a human yarn spun around a pastor of a rich church, played by Richard Travers and played well, who takes the place of a shepherd stricken at his work in the slums. He leaves his church to conduct the mission which is connected with his parish. There he meets the opposition of the saloonkeeper who is also a collector of rents and fixer for the leading layman of the parish which pays the pastor his salary. In spite of this situation, the preacher goes on with his work with the assistance of the pugilist, happily portrayed by Jack Dale, whom he, the clergyman has saved from the gutter and taken under his roof. And he has another helper in "the rose of the slums," as played by Betty Brown. "Bull" Grogan, the saloonkeeper, has been ruling by virtue of a strong right arm which he has used successfully on the heads of those who opposed him, not overlooking the minister. The pugilist has felt the sting of his blows many times and when his strength has been restored by proper living under the watchful eye of the pastor, he teaches the clergyman to pound Christianity into his followers after he has been deprived of his pastorate through the greed of the churchman-tenement owner. His success in whipping Grogan is rewarded by restoration to the pulpit and the love of Rose.

It is a convincing and pleasing story. Travers makes an excellent strong-armed preacher and Dale, who seems best in light comedy parts such as that of the pugilist, took advantage of the opportunity offered him. Betty Brown is always a joy to see in any picture but this one might have been written with her in mind, the part fitted her so well.

It might be well to state that the author seems to have the right idea as to subtitles. He had something to say and he said it well, an example some other writers might follow.

American Produces "April"

Kentucky mountaineers have furnished many a red-blooded story of feuds, moonshining and the law of self preservation and now Clifford Howard has seized the subject and wrung from it a gripping scenario called "April," which will be produced by the American company under the direction of Donald MacDonald. It will be released as a Mutual masterpicture de luxe.

Helene Rosson will play the part of the "backwoods" girl who is known as "April." The role opposite her. that of the poet from Philadelphia, will be in the hands of E. Forrest Taylor. Henry von Meter and Louise Lester play "Tim" and "Martha," April's father and mother.

Horsley's Tribute to Beecroft

Loving cups and gold watches as tributes to resigning associates are very nice, but they lack originality and they don't let the public in on the appreciation. When Chester Beecroft resigned as general manager of David Horsley Productions, Mr. Horsley was not satisfied to pay him an ordinary compliment. So he took the extraordinary course of advertising his regard for Mr. Beecroft in full page space. This remarkable tribute appeared in Motography last week and naturally has caused a good deal of comment.

Besides the virtues so enthusiastically enumerated in the Horsley eulogy, Chester Beecroft has had a lot of intimate experience with the motion picture business, from his connection with the Motion Picture Patents Company, through executive positions in producing and distributing lines to the general managership which he now resigns. As an advertising and publicity man his reputation is wide, and his ability in the producing end of the business has been thorougly established.

In choosing the method he did to pay tribute to his ex-manager, Mr. Horsley has indirectly shown his high regard for trade paper space; for he knows it will add more to the sum total of Mr. Beecroft's happiness through the years than any token of intrinsic value but ephemeral spirit.

TO FIGHT WHITE PLAGUE

"The Invisible Enemy," the Unusual Production of the E-K-O Film Company, to Receive Country-Wide Support

When one considers the growth of the great white plague in this country and the millions of dollars spent annually in combating this malignant disease, it is little wonder that the E-K-O Film Company is receiving a large number of inquiries for its production, "The Invisible Enemy," which deals with tuberculosis in all its various phases.

George Szirmay, E. K. O. Company.

George Szirmay, general manager of the E-K-O Company, whose offices are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has reasons for his confidence in the earning power of the film.

"The active cooperation of The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, with its 3,500 agencies scattered all over the country, is an invaluable asset to our enterprise," says Mr. Szirmay.

"The various local tuberculosis associations are leading citizens who are fully prepared to use every ounce of their personal influence to get our photoplay before the public. A complete advertising campaign will be carried out in each and every locality, initiated and stimulated by the desire of the local Anti-Tuberculosis Societies to render their own propaganda as effective as possible by using 'The Invisible Enemy' as a weapon in the crusade against the great white plague. In this crusade all classes, all faiths, all races are united.

" 'The Invisible Enemy' is a fair example of the series of sociological photoplays I am planning to produce and the encouragement so far received has only served to strengthen my determination to bring the motion picture industry and the promoting organizations of social welfare into close co-operation."

"The Invisible Enemy" was shown in New York on April 6th to a gathering of prominent physicians, social workers and press representatives. A definite release date will be announced soon.

Mutual Film Corporation: It is now generally believed the information exploited in regard to a combination of a number of the distributing companies was mostly talk, and, while it is possible that one or two of them may join forces, the big combination seems to be not only improbable but impossible, as a disinclination to even think of joining such a combination has already been expressed by five of the presidents of the companies mentioned. It is now widely admitted that many film companies generally understood to be large earners are making decidely less than rumors credit to them, and for this reason the combination would be a move in the right direction, as it would eliminate a reduplication of many executive officers, most of whom are not modest when it comes to indicating a salary which they think adequately covers their services. Mutual stocks still continue strong.

Thanhouser Film Corporation: Earnings are reported satisfactory, but the demand for stock is not as keen as it was around the first of the year.

New York Motion Picture Corporation: It is reported that while this company is promptly turning out its schedule of releases, they are not taken with the same degree of regularity by the Triangle Film Corporation as was the case in the early months when the Triangle absorbed all of the output of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. This may account for the easing off of the stock during the past ten days.

Triangle Film Corporation: This stock struck a new low level last week, and, from a high point of above $9 per share about six months ago, stock has recently sold at $2 per share.

CHICAGO NEWS NOTES.

SAM SCHILLER of the Schiller Feature Film Co., in the Schiller building, soon will release a new state rights picture called "The Honeymoon under Difficulties or Gebbibles Wedding Day." The titles on this film will be in the Jewish and English languages.

W. C. Brimmer, manager of the Milwaukee office of the General Film Co., visited the local general offices for a consultation with F. C. Aiken, western district manager.

Abe Heiligers, formerly under Mr. Van Ronkel at the V. L. S. E., expects to connect with another film concern soon.

One of the finest little theaters on Cottage Grove avenue is owned by L. Nathan. This theater is the Washington. It has a seating capacity of about 400 and is running the Universal service. On Saturdays, Sundays and Wednesdays high priced features are being shown at ten cents admission. This theater before Mr. Nathan took it over was considered a losing proposition but has been made into one of the best paying theaters in his section. And his secret as revealed to me was one little noun—COURTESY.

Frank Greenwald of Cleveland rushed into this town last week, with a wad of money; saw "The Unwritten Law" projected; took all that good hard-earned money out of his pockets; gave Mr. Beyfuss the money; took the print of the film under his arm; left a memorandum for the amount of paper he could use on it; shook hands all around, said good-bye to "Pathe" Holah and took the next train to Cleveland. That's why they call him "live wire Frank."

A. Rosenthal, general manager of the All Feature booking agency, is here with his feature "The Fire King," and from indications he will place is with a feature booking agency in the Schiller building.

Joseph Skirboll, district manager for Metro, visited Chicago for a week and departed for Des Moines, Kansas City, St. Louis, Louisville and Cincinnati offices.

Albert Silverman, formerly with the New Film Corp., Supreme Feature Film Co., and the Lewis Film Co., is on the road for the United Film Service.

Jack Schwartz of the Reliable Feature Film Company has gone on a booking trip to his old stamping grounds in Wisconsin. Jack is known by every Tom, Dick and Harry in the exhibiting game of Wisconsin and there is no doubt that with the many good features on the list of his concern he will send home some great bookings.

The Northern Feature Film Company, of which Mr. S. Decker is the general manager, says that the bookings received on his feature "A Mother's Confession" are keeping him busy.

Thos. P. Staniforth, of the Motion Picture Reporting Service, has gone on a trip through the southern part of Illinois to convince the exhibitors of that section of the value of his service. Although this service has been in operation only one year, still its authenticity and the thoroughness in which it covers all the releases of the motion picture field, have made it very valuable.

The Leabell Feature Film Company, of the Schiller building, under the able guideship of Jack Leaverton is gradually forging ahead. Jack is a hustler and has a number of money making features on his list.

Mr. Eichenlaub, the general manager of the Vaudeville Film Corporation in the Schiller building, reports that he has doubled his output and business within the last few months. This concern supplies a single reel service to all the F. & H. Amusement theaters and Keith circuit theaters, as well as the Allardt houses. Their releases are varied, consisting of educational reels, scenics and strong comedies. Mr. Eichenlaub reports that he will shortly come out with a big surprise for all interested in the moving picture business.

Max Linnick, of the Co-operative Film Brokers, has been appointed assistant to General Manager Fred Linick. This concern is enjoying a prosperous business throughout the United States.

Among the successful men of the film business, none is more deserving of notice than F. M. Brockell. Mr. Brockell took pot luck at this field a matter of about eight years ago, under the wing of James Steele. This was in Cincinnati; later he was appointed bookkeeper at the Pittsburg branch of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company, and at the amalgamation of all the branches into the General Film Co. was made assistant manager under Mr. Steele. He then launched into the supply business for himself in Cincinnati, but Mr. Steele wanted him in Chicago, so he went there as assistant to Mr. Steele. At the organization of the Paramount Pictures Mr. Brockell took charge of the office and has been in that capacity ever since. Mr. Brockell is well liked by exhibitors and employes, and they all have a good word for him, which is methinks too rare in this business.

Mr. Cuneo, the owner and manager of the Dearborn theater, and also owner of the De Luxe theater, can well be proud of both of them. It would seem that with two such beautiful and profitable theaters on his list there would be a tendency of his part to warm the swivel chair all day, but this method is not Mr. Cuneo's. He works from early till late and has a number of other successful business enterprises to his credit. He has made an unsuccessful theater turn a good profit.

The O. K. Film Exchange, of 525 South Dearborn street, is under the management of S. Perlman, who is also general manager of the Garden City Film Exchange. He is also the sole distributor of the Royal Projection machine, one of the latest model projectors for church and school. Mr. Perlman has been in the film business for the last seven years, and was the first man to sell motion picture projecting machines on the installment plan.

Should a straw vote be taken throughout Chicago as to who is the cleverest film salesman and publicity shark, there is no doubt that the name of Max Vutler of the Paramount would stand in the top row. Max has not only made two blades of grass grow where there was only one before, but he has cultivated many theatrical lemons into nice juicy peaches.

K. F. Love is interested, with Thomas Staniforth, in the Motion Picture Reporting Service. Mr. Love is a recruit from the newspaper field. Welcome to our fold, O Love!

L. M. Noto, of the Mutual Service, is knee deep in work, piling up bookings on "The Girl and the Game."

You have heard of people that can hynotize one by their eyes, but Mr. Kuh of the E. L. K. Film Corporation hypnotizes with his language. This item and the fact that this concern has some of the best money making features on the market explains the huge success made by this concern within the last year. Their latest release is a five-reel feature by the Hanover Feature Film Company, "Should a Baby Die," with Arthur Donaldson and Gazelle Marsh in the lead. They also control "Cabiria," "The Wonderful Maciste" and other noted productions.

The Theater Brokerage Exchange under the ownership of Robert Miller will move very shortly to newer quarters at 112 North La Salle. This concern buys, sell and rents theaters and theater supplies.

I. S. Cohen of the Public Service Film Corporation of 1446 Broadway, the producers of "Defense or Tribute," stopped in Chicago last week. He has made all the large film centers between New York and the coast. He left Chicago on Tuesday for New York. This feature is making a hit wherever it has been sold.

Stewart G. Honeck of the Milwaukee Pathe office was recently a visitor in the Chicago headquarters for a conference with "Pathe" Holah, the manager.

The Douglas theater at 3125 Cottage Grove avenue has been recently sold to S. C. Clagett, who will also manage it. Mr. Clagett is in the real estate business on the south side, and will run this theater as a side issue. The seating capacity of the house is 620, and the policy will hereafter be to run a feature every night. Mr. Clagett formerly controlled a chain of theaters in Southern Illinois and Kentucky.

Daniel "Toots" Pentozzi, the founder and present manager of the D. & D. Film Exchange at 167 West Washington street, is conceded to be one of the most successful young film men in this neck of the woods. The D. & D. conduct a buying and selling brokerage business as well as a department for the renting of the releases.

P. Plummer, the general manager of the Amusement Supply Company, advises that owing to their rapidly increasing business, they have found it necessary to move to larger quarters. After April 1, 1916, they will be located at 300-302 Mallers building. He extends a cordial invitation to all owners, managers and operators to visit the offices, where they will have on display all goods pertaining to the moving picture business.

The National Motion Picture Service, A. P. Desormeaux, general manager, is located at 117 North Dearborn street. They have concluded arrangements whereby they will release the entire output of the Urban-Eclipse Co., of London, as well as that of the Caesar Film Company, of Rome, for North America. They are at present booking "Damaged Goods" in the middle western states. Mr. Desormeaux will leave Sunday for a business trip to New York.

B. F. Rosenberg of the Imperial Photoplays Co., Denver, visited in Chicago on his way to New York. While in the Windy City he was constantly in company of Al. Rosenthal, so it looks as though Rosenthal has sold the Rocky Mountain rights for his pictures to him. The Imperial control a number of feature films for that section.

Times Signs, located at 401 Times building, Fifth avenue and Washington street, make a specialty of signs for the theater owner. F. C. Bell, one of the owners of this concern, has had seven years experience in this line, and C. H. Belts has been at the same game for about the same length of time. They are both enterprising and clever young fellows and produce real artistic show cards and other signs.

The Safety Projector and Film Company, at 127 North Dearborn street, has perfected one of the cleverest home, school and church projectors on the market. M. E. Scott, a prominent attorney, is the president of this concern; L. Cotsworth, secretary and treasurer; F. H. McMillan, vice president. Wm. J. Crowley, owner of the Garden theater at Lincoln and School streets, and Mr. Kenufick, a well known contractor, are on the directory. This concern has a meritorious article and with such live wire business man back of it success is assured.

I. L. Leserman, who has been for the last eight years in the motion picture business in this section and who is at present with the Laemmle Film Service, wants to tell all his friends, enemies and acquaintances that he is still alive and as spry as ever. He will meet all comers for a film argument right off the reel. Vive La Universale!

F. E. Chapman, the genial manager and owner of the Colonial theater of South Bend, Indiana, was a visitor to the Windy Village on Thursday. He says business is booming in his town. And Pop Hines corroborates this sentiment.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

Edward Sloman is working on his second five-reel feature for the American Film Company, with Franklin Ritchie and Winnifred Greenwood in the leading roles.

When her new Los Angeles bungalow received its New York furniture last week, Anna Luther celebrated with a "Broadway" party, having as guests only those who have been away from New York less than a year.

Hugh Russell, late of the Australian stage, is arranging for the sale of the motion picture rights to a story he wrote which was published in an English magazine. It concerns a London bachelor. A western film company is negotiating for the story and for Mr. Russell's engagement to play the lead.

Photographs of Nell Shipman in the windows of the smartest shops of Los Angeles announce her early appearance at Clune's Broadway theater in the eight-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "God's Country—and the Woman," which Rollin S. Sturgeon produced from the novel by James Oliver Curwood.

Harry Mestayer's contract with the Selig Company terminates May 1. Until the Holbrook Blinn theater in New York is completed, where Mr. Mestayer will begin a leading engagement, he will be available for screen work.

Nona Thomas has been ill for a week because of overwork.

Mary Anderson was recently presented with a silver ring which came from China, and is inscribed with the Chinese symbols insuring its wearer "health, happiness, affection and wealth."

Mary Anderson plays the part of a madcap little sister in a three reeler which William Wolbert is directing. Anne Schaefer appears as her aunt.

Gretchen Hartman recently underwent an operation for adenoids. She is now back at work in the Biograph play directed by J. Farrell MacDonald.

Harry Carey, at Laurel Canyon ranch, has earned the title of "the perfect host." The big bungalow houses a from-Friday-to-Sunday party each week.

Nine-year-old Lena Baskette, the little dancer who recently joined the Universal players, will play opposite Carter De Haven as a girl of seventeen, in a coming feature.

The visit of Louise Lester and Jack Richardson to Los Angeles recently was the occasion of a reunion party with Jack W. Kerrigan, Pauline Bush and Allan Dwan, the five people who, in the early days, established the name "Flying A" in popular fancy. Director Dwan and Miss Lester mapped out the "Calamity Ann" series for Miss Lester.

Gertrude Hoffman and her dancing girls visited the Fine Arts studio after a matinee at the Orpheum, where their "Sumurun" act is filling a headline engagement. They watched William Christy Cabanne's company in scenes for a Fairbanks comedy.

William F. Russell is playing in and directing "The Highest Bidder," an American Mutual masterpicture. Jack Prescott is assistant director.

Stella Razeto has adopted a dog which she found in the Mojave desert. Her former pet, "Paddy Wuffin," was killed by an automobile.

Tom Chatterton has an excellent role as the lead in the submarine serial which the American Company is filming at Santa Barbara. George Sargent is directing. Juanita Hanson is the leading woman.

Raymond West is directing the next Bessie Barriscale picture. William Desmond and Charles Miller are prominent in the cast.

George Melford's vacation was short. He was recalled to direct a story written by Willard Mack and Clinton Stagg, with Fannie Ward and Jack Dean in the leading roles. It is a Salvation Army story.

Hal Cooley, now at the America studios, was formerly with the Universal Company.

Frank Keenan and Charles Ray again appear as father and son, in a coming photoplay which Charles Giblyn is directing.

"Ramona" has proved to be one of those pictures which people like to revisit. It has run for seven weeks in Los Angeles. Donald Crisp is commended on the manner in which he caught the spirit of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel.

There is a rumor that Henry King is leaving the Balboa company, after having been with them since they started making pictures.

Jack Warren Kerrigan is said to be doing wonderful work in "Son of the Immortals," the Universal play.

In "The Test of Chivalry," Fritzi Brunette again appears in a "ragged" role. William Robert Daly is directing the play for the Selig Company. Edward J. Piel, Vivian Reed and James Bradbury appear in the cast.

Edith Johnson represented the Selig studios in a recent entertainment given by the Actors' Benefit Fund Committee at the Huntington hotel in Pasadena.

A large force of carpenters are rebuilding the south stage of the Selig Zoo studios which was damaged in a flood due to the breaking of a city dam.

The success of Corinne Griffith's work in "Bitter-sweet" led to her appointment to an important part in the cast of Rollin S. Sturgeon's next feature.

To produce a hurricane for a scene of "Into the Primitive," a coming Selig Red Seal release, written by Robert Ames Bennett, the huge propellors of an aeroplane were used.

"The Hard Way," a three-reel comedy featuring Jack Pickford, is being produced at the Selig studios by T. N. Heffron from a story by Russell E. Smith. Vivian Reed, Lillian Hayward, Harry Lonsdale and Sidney Smith are in the cast.

Sessue Hayakawa, the well-known Japanese screen actor who appeared recently in "The Cheat," will be starred by the Lasky Company in "Alien Souls," to be released in May.

Corinne Griffith's hobby is fine needlework, embroidery especially.

Alfred Vanderbilt and party were visitors at the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles, recently.

Jack Pickford has a new Hupmobile, designed by himself. It has a dark maroon body, white wire wheels and a tan Victoria top. Jack will use it in his next Selig play.

William S. Smith, business manager of the western Vitagraph offices, is taking a vacation at his ranch near Elsinore, Cal.

George Burkhardt wrote the comedy which Dave Smith is now producing.

Mary Anderson quickly caught the automobile fever and is now driving her own car.

A detective story by Cleveland Moffett forms the theme of Rollin S. Sturgeon's next feature, for which he is now selecting a cast.

The newest arrivals in the Selig Zoo nursery are a baby camel and a little snow-white sacred cow.

Rhea Mitchell, who recently signed a contract to appear in American Film Corporation pictures, began her picture career under Thomas Ince.

J. P. McGowan and Frank H. Spearman are completing the plans for the production of the latter's novel, "Whispering Smith," the next McGowan-Holmes feature.

Lena Baskette gave Egyptian and snake dances at an entertainment for the Actors' Fund benefit at the Hotel Huntington in Pasadena.

Ashton Dearholt won his position with the American Film Company on a wager made by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. When both were in Milwaukee, a year ago, Mr. Freuler offered Mr. Dearholt, just out of a military college, a position with the coast players if he earned his way out there. Mr. Dearholt did so, making the journey in a second-hand automobile.

Beautiful mountain scenes are a feature of "At Piney Ridge," the Selig V. L. S. E. release of May 1. Fritzi Brunette is starred in this story as a Tennessee mountain girl. Others in the cast are Al W. Filson, Leo J. Pierson, Edward J. Piel, Frank Clark, Vivian Reed, William Scott, Lillian Hayward and James Bradbury.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Bryant Washburn worked five hours in a steel mill at Gary, Ind., to obtain local color for "The Spider's Web."

Ernest Maupain who plays the leader of the London crooks in the Essanay production of "Sherlock Holmes," starring William Gillette, played that role on the speaking stage in Paris.

Lewis S. Stone, who appeared with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," will take the leading part in "According to the Code," soon to be produced by the Essanay Company.

Several cameras record each scene in the Essanay feature plays, and the best negative of each scene is selected.

Richard C. Travers and John Junior appear in the support of Sallie Fisher in "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row."

William Gillette is assisting Director Berthelet in supervising the make-ups and stage sets for "Sherlock Holmes." Costly sets are constructed to give the London "color."

"The Misleading Lady," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "The Daughter of the City" and "Vultures of Society," Essanay feature plays, have arrived in London and are meeting with success.

SOUTHERN NOTES

By William Noble

The opera house, Pensacola, Fla., has been taken over by H. M. Mavaratt. The house seats 1,500 and will operate on a 10-cent policy.

W. M. Clark has purchased the Alamo Theater at Gainesville, Fla., and will at once make extensive improvements.

Manager Catron of the Bonita theater at Tampa, Fla., has installed a new cooling system in his theater.

J. C. Moss, owner of the Fotosho and Colonial theaters at Miami, Fla., has commenced the erection of a new motion picture theater which will seat 1,200.

The Magic City theater, at Bogalusa, La., is being renovated, and new opera chairs installed.

C. L. Sherwood has opened the new Sherwood theater at Homer, La., and will use the General Film pictures.

M. W. Lawrence is now handling S. S. Moss productions in Louisiana, from New Orleans. Doc. Graham, former manager at New Orleans, is now located at Birmingham, Ala.

Plans are being made for the building of a new motion picture theater at Hattiesburg, Miss., on the site of the Auditorium theater which was burned early in February.

Plato Collins, owner of the Dixie and Palace theater at Kingston, N. C., has secured half interest in the Grand at that place. The Palace and Grand will continue to run, but the Dixie will be closed.

Howard and Wells have acquired the last opposing theater at Wilmington, N. C., the Academy of Music, which has been operated by the S. A. Lynch enterprise at Asheville. The Howard-Wells Amusement Company has been incorporated to operate the Grand, Royal, Bijou, Victoria, Royal and Academy of Music, with capital of $100.000. George W. Bailey will continue as manager of the Academy of Music.

Aaronson and Brown will open the new Chrystal theater at Raleigh, N. C., in the near future, to replace the old Crystal which burned down recently.

H. R. Mason, of the Acme theater, has commenced the erection of a new motion picture house at Goldsboro, N. C. The new house will seat about 800.

Airington Brothers have discontinued vaudeville at the Grand theater, Rocky Mount, N. C., and will confine their house to pictures exclusively in the future.

Batchelor Brothers are remodeling the opera house at Weldon, N. C., and will install new equipment.

J. L. Schultz has opened a new picture house at Thalia, Texas.

L. J. O'Malley will open a new motion picture house at Sweetwater, Texas, in the near future.

L. G. Bissinger is renovating the Washington theater at Dallas, Texas, and making a number of improvements. A new electric sign has been ordered and will be installed as soon as received.

The Lone Star Motion Picture Company is hard at work on rehearsals for their new five-reel feature production, most of which will be made in and near Dallas. Several of the scenes will be made at Birmingham when the next confederate reunion convenes there this summer.

E. A. Henderson has been appointed receiver for the Hippodrome theater, at Dallas, Texas.

Mart Cole of the Dreamland theater, West, Texas, will build a new theater at that place in near future, which is to seat 700 and will be strictly up-to-date.

E. A. Kinney has opened his new theater at Belton, Texas, and reports business good.

R. A. Carter has leased the Roseland theater at Dallas, Texas, and will change from vaudeville to pictures.

The Princess theater at San Antonio, Texas, has changed from straight pictures to Pantages vaudeville and feature pictures.

Jake Burke, manager of the grand Opera House, San Antonio, Texas, has reopened his theater and will show Triangle and other feature film pictures.

Judge Swayne of the Seventeenth District Court at Fort Worth, Texas, March 28, declined to grant an injunction restraining the city officials from holding an election in Fort Worth April 1 regarding Sunday pictures. Judge Swayne expressed the opinion that the city of Fort Worth had no right to hold an election, but decided that he had no right to interfere at this time. The election consequently will be held April 1.

J. A. Lemke, first of the motion picture show proprietors at Waco, Texas, to be tried for keeping open on Sunday, was acquitted in the County Court March 22. Several cases are still pending against other proprietors.

One thousand members of the East Dallas, Texas, Christian Church Sunday School were photographed in action last Sunday. The children of the primary department carried small flags as they marched before the camera. The picture will compose a regular reel and will be shown at the local playhouses.

The Sun Film Corporation of Springfield, Ill., is locating a permanent studio at Corpus Christi, Texas, for the production of motion pictures. Howard H. Temple, president and general manager of the Sun Film Corporation, stated that he expected to start work at once and to have the first picture ready by June 1.

That where the state law speaks, the city ordinance must be silent, where the state law is silent, the city may speak, was the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals, First District, at Galveston, Texas, in the case of the Zydias Amusement Company, et al, vs. the City of Houston. This formed the basis upon which the higher court affirmed the action of the district court of Harris county in dissolving the temporary restraining order obtained by the Zydias Amusement Company and refusing to grant an injunction against the city of Houston from prosecuting the company from exhibiting motion pictures without first having obtained a permit in accordance with an ordinance of the city of Houston regulating places of amusement. The case is a test for the purpose of learning whether city councils have the power to regulate their local affairs, when not in conflict with the state laws. The court held that the city ordinance was entirely consistent with state law and the city authorities had authority to enforce provisions of ordinances regulating appointment of censors and the handling of places of public amusement in accordance with the laws of the city.

BRITISH TRADE GOSSIP

George H. Smith of the Vitagraph Company has sailed for the United States to be gone about eight weeks.

Ellen Terry has been persuaded to enter motion pictures, and will appear in a film for the Ideal Film Renting Company.

The motion picture industry is facing a problem in the lack of skilled labor, due to the call of so many of its workers to the front.

The idea of having women pictorial operators is gaining favor.

The Davison Film Sales Agency has been appointed agents for the open market releases of the Kalem and Biograph Companies.

J. A. Saunders has been appointed manager of the Northern and Midland Exclusive Company.

Messrs. Harma and Company recently showed their latest purchases, "The Pretenders" and "Fortunes of the Wheel," both made by the Kalem Company.

The Selig Red Seal drama, "Thou Shalt Not Covet," has recently arrived.

The frequent nocturnal air raids are causing much anxiety to the managers on the East coast because of the danger of panic in the theaters.

The serving of "afternoon tea" in the picture houses is receiving the attention of many managers and patrons seem to appreciate the favor.

BEBE DANIELS A VETERAN

Little Bebe Daniels, who supports Harold Lloyd in the Pathe "Lonesome Luke" comedies, is only sixteen years old, but in dash, vim, and genuine humorous talent she is far beyond her years. Miss Daniels is a daughter of the sunny South and has been on the stage since she was only ten months old. She toured in "Richard III" and several years in stock. While playing in "The Squaw Man," she was made a partner in the producing firm to avoid the child labor regulations. She has been with several picture companies and is now playing in the Rolin Film Company's "Lonesome Luke" comedies. It is said "Bebe" can do all the popular athletic and artistic stunts from swimming to singing.

Pete Morrison and his educated horse "Babe-o'-Hell." Babe responds to Pete's softly spoken commands to "drop" or "buck" as though she actually understood the meaning of the words, and perhaps she does. Pete and "Babe" are in American films.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Tender Hearted Boy—Biograph—April 10.—Featuring Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. The boy gets employment in a butcher shop and secretly provides meat to an old woman whose misery he pities. He intends to pay for the meat himself, but when he is caught he is discharged as a thief. The old woman dies and the police find in her room a will leaving several thousand dollars to the boy. When they go to his house he fears arrest and hides in a closet until the truth is discovered and then the butcher himself congratulates him.

Otto the Bell Boy—Lubin—April 10.—Featuring Davy Don. Otto is given the job of Bell Boy on account of the bell boy fight. Otto falls in love with Lizzie, but hides the fact that he has no money with which to march up the aisle to be tied to her for life. He receives a greenback for assisting one who has filled up on liquor and enters a poker game. His luck is so good that after a short time Otto emerges from the game with all their money. He goes to meet Lizzie, shows her the money and they go to the minister.

Wives of the Rich—(Three Reels)—Selig—April 10.—A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

The Man Who Called After Dark—(Two Reels)—Biograph—April 11.—Robert Whitmore proposes to the editor of a newspaper a plan to increase the circulation of the paper. A mysterious murder has been committed and Whitmore suggests that he leave a trail of evidence, to be discovered by reporters, indicating that he is the murderer. The scheme works, but when Whitmore is pronounced guilty, the editor does not come forward to clear him, as was agreed, because the editor is the real murderer. Whitmore's sweetheart, however, discovers the secret of the editor's wife, and Whitmore is released.

Millstones—(Two Reels)—Essanay—April 11.—Featuring Darwin Karr and Nell Craig. Bill Dolan, burglar, rescues little Mary Ryan from her dissolute parents and raises the child. Ten years later finds her a member of the notorious Dolan gang, who are sought by the police. She tries to make Dolan give up his life and go straight and he consents to make his next robbery his last one. He is caught and jailed, but orders Mary to go to the home of Carstairs, the District Attorney, and steal the evidence. She is also caught by Carstairs and she tells him she is helping Dolan and he agrees not to use the evidence if Mary can reform the criminal. Later when Mary returns home she finds Dolan, he having escaped from jail. They decide to marry and flee together, and with Mary's money get a fresh start and "go straight."

The Stampede—(Three Reels)—Biograph—April 12.—Featuring Linda Arvidson and Charles Perley. Caught with his frightened horse in the midst of a stampeding herd of cattle, the young engineer is rescued by the girl he has spurned after having learned that she has Indian blood in her veins. It is an Indian trick that saves him from the maddened animals, beneath whose hoofs his enemy, an Indian who loves the girl, had planned to see him crushed. The climax of a big drama of love and politics, in superb settings.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Boston—Essanay—April 12.—A split reel release containing five hundred feet of views of historic and beautiful Boston. The other half of the film is taken up with scenic, showing the natural grandeur of the American west.

The Greater Wrong—(Three Reels)—Lubin—April 13.—A full review appears on another page of this issue.

The Battle Royal—Vim—April 13.—Featuring Plump and Runt. In the Kentucky hills lives the families of Plump and Runt. The eldest of the Plump sons was the future husband of the Runt girl and the stocky son of the Runts was the betrothed to the daughter of the Plumps. Life flowed on in one happy stream until one day Plump and Runt happened to hook the same fish and hot words and blows followed and the feud was born. The Plump stronghold is attacked by the Runts and when some unfortunate Revenue officers find their way to the hills and become targets for the combined fire of the both families, the joyful discovery that they are fighting the law blinds the feudists to their personal quarrel and joining forces they pepper the fleeing officers.

Haunted and Hounded—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—April 14.—Jim Lowell and Anne Lowell are unhappily married and one day after a fearful scene between them Anne hits Jim with a crockery jar when he attempts to choke her and escapes to the city thinking she has killed him. Later she marries a rich young man and ten years later she is the mother of two children. On her summer estate Joe Standing is engaged as gardener and Ida, his wife, and formerly the woman whom Jim had an affair with, learning of Anne's whereabouts tells Jim, who determines to try blackmail. Anne who has never told her husband of her past is heartbroken and that night Jim enters her room and threatens her. Joe, wandering in the garden, sees him and when Joe comes in the two men struggle, when Jim pulls the gun on Joe. Jim is killed and when Anne's husband rushes in from his room Joe explains that he followed the burglar and shot him in self defense.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Sleuths—Vim—April 14.—Featuring Pokes and Jabbs. Mrs. Newlywed receives a sacred jewel from her uncle in the far East, who tells her that the jewel once adorned the famous idol of one of the temples. She wears the jewel to a dance and the newspaper articles about it are seen by some Arabs, who have been commissioned by the Sheik to recover the gem. Missing the jewel, the Newlweds call in Pokes and Jabbs, the world-famous detectives, who undertake to find the precious stone. The Arabs learn that Pokes and Jabbs are on their trail and luring them into the house of one of the band succeed in imprisoning the sleuths in the torture chamber. The detectives indulge in some snuff, which causes them to sneeze, and the mighty blast blows down the torture chamber, wrecks the entire house and liberates Pokes and Jabbs, who triumphantly emerge from the wreckage.

The Last Adventure—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 15.—Featuring Lillian Drew, John Lorenz and Edward Arnold. Timotny Hayden some years before the story opens had won a small town girl and brought her to the city. He introduced her among his men friends and each of the wealthy clubmen at some time or other has given Beatrice expensive gifts and these gifts Hayden sells and provides cheap imitations for her to wear. Arnold Burton returns from Alaska with a fortune and Hayden forces Beatrice to sign an agreement with him that she will marry the millionaire and when he discovers her past she will divorce him upon payment of $100,000. Burton falls in love with Beatrice, but she will not marry him as her own love has become genuine. She is forced, however, by Hayden to accept Burton's proposal and shortly after they are married. Hayden visits Beatrice in her rooms and while she is telling him she is through with him forever, Burton enters and forces Hayden to leave. At the door Hayden levels a revolver at Burton, but the butler grasps him and in the struggle hurls him down the stairs and his neck is broken.

Mr. Housekeeper—Lubin—April 15.—Featuring Billie Reeves. Billie Henpeck marries his landlady to secure a home and soon begins to reap the fruits of his error. His wife's father dies and leaves her favorite boarder in charge of the house. This excites the ire of the other boarders and all leave the house. Billie sees his opportunity to make money while his wife is away and reduces the rates of the rooms and soon the house is filled again. His wife returns and the watchful Mr. Boarder tells her what has occurred during her absence. Taking the matter in her own hands, the matter is brought to an adjustment in an effective and permanent way.

The Beauty Hunters—Selig—April 15.—Featuring James Bradbury and Martha Mattox. John Queerphiz and Jane Apeface exchange bogus photographs and later are married by telephone. Consternation ensues when each spies the other's face. Each consult a beauty doctor and a transformation results in both of them. They meet while thus transformed and fall in love with each other. John follows Jane home and not recognizing him she orders him to leave as her husband will be home soon. Finally they recognize each other and a struggle ensues in which wigs and false hair are scattered around promiscuously.

The Corsican Sisters—Kalem—April 3.—Second episode of "The Social Pirates." Featuring Marin Sais and Ollie Kirby. Mona and Mary set out to teach Harrasford, a conceited man-about-town to whom woman's affections are but a toy, a lesson. Mona becomes acquainted with him and says that she is a Corsican living with her younger sister. Harrasford calls on Mona and immediately becomes attracted to Mary. A number of thrilling events keeps Harrasford in a maze of excitement between the two girls, who, as temperamental Corsicans, are intense in love and hate. Harrasford plans to flee at ten o'clock with Mary and at the appointed time Mona appears heavily veiled and followed by a detective, who forces from her a confession that she killed Mary. Harrasford secretly passes a bribe to the detective, who allows him to escape, and when he is out of sight Mona and the detective join in a hearty laugh and in a few moments Mary arrives to add to the rejoicing over the success of the plan to humble the conceited hearbreaker.

From Altar to Halter—Kalem—April 4.—Featuring Bud Duncan and Lloyd V. Hamilton.

Mutual humor films now going the rounds. They are, beginning at the left, "The Professor's Peculiar Precautions," "The Improbable Yarn of McQuirk," and "Jerry and the Smugglers."

Later it develops that it was only a nightmare—but while Ham and Bud are married—Ham is boss in his home, but Bud is a lowly worm. The worm turns—and there is an exciting time in both households. Ham finds himself battered and beaten, while Bud surprises his better half with a strenuous display of bossism.

Trapping the Bachelor—Kalem—April 5.—Featuring Ethel Teare and Victor Rottman. Jack's aunt and his chum are both seeking strenuously to cure him of the error of his ways. When Ethel, who has been left penniless, accepts the aunt's invitation to stay at her home for a while, the matchmaking plotters seize the opportunity to work up all sorts of schemes to get Jack interested in Ethel. Their schemes result in a whirl of excitement that is at times too serious for those concerned, but the close finds Jack about to foreswear his bachelorhood in the arms of Ethel.

The Fickle Fiddler's Finish—Kalem—April 7.—Featuring Rose Melville. Sis is a lover of music—she plays the harmonica. So it's all off for her chauffeur admirer when she hears the banana peddling genius play his violin in the park. The violinist is a faithful lover until he is taken by the professor and made into a maestro concert player overnight. Nell, who fears that Jack's affections are growing cold, invites the newly-found genius to play at her home—which is where Sis is employed. When Sis, who is mourning her lost love, hears the strains of his violin a real hot time begins for all concerned that ends the picture with a lively mix-up of excitement.

The Record Run—Kalem—April 8.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series, featuring Helen Gibson. The story is built around the rivalry of two railroads, and the record run that is to decide the awarding of large mail contracts. Helen learns of the rival road's plot to delay the mail train and speeds on an electric car which is derailed, almost costing Helen her life. The plotters send a wild engine down the track towards the mail train. Helen boards a small hand car from which she leaps to the speeding runaway. The mail train is almost upon her, so she reverses the engine and speeds the other way. Momentarily, the distance between the two engines is growing smaller, and collision seems certain when Helen's signal is seen by a switchman and her engine takes a flying switch a second before the mail train roars by.

Selig-Tribune No. 25.—March 27.—Modern methods of ice cutting enable the ice merchants to harvest their crop much quicker and at less cost, Waltham, Mass.; Fresno, Cal., boasts of the only jitney railroad in the country—five miles—five cents; the steamship Herman Winter, after catching fire sinks in the harbor at Portland, Me.; Battery A, Fourth Field Artillery and Field Hospital Corps No. 7 arrive at Columbus, N. M., awaiting instructions to join General Pershing in Mexico; General Carranza's crack cavalry troop passes through Chihuahua, Mexico, on way to cooperate with the American troops in capture of Villa; Manager Rowland has his "White Sox" on the job at Mineral Wells, Tex., limbering up before getting down to the real work of regular training.

Selig Tribune No. 26.—March 30.—Shore sports are not overlooked by the crews of the U. S. battleships at Guantanamo, Cuba, for target practice; Philadelphia Nationals and Chicago "Cubs" engage in a Spring practice game at St. Petersburg, Fla.; wounded soldiers from Charing Cross Hospital are taken for an airing in motor cycle cars, London, England; Irish Guards stationed at Warlley, England, win the military cross-country race; Fifth U. S. Cavalry leaves Ft. Meyer, Va., for Columbus, N. Mex.; thousands are rendered homeless by a fire which sweeps Nashville, Tenn., destroying thirty-five blocks and causing a property loss running into millions of dollars; devotees of the "Sport of Kings" see "Wolf's Bath," with Jockey Connelly up, win the last race of the season at Oriental Park, Havana, Cuba; the closing of the fashionable resorts abroad brings to Havana, Cuba, thousands of pleasure seekers who participate in the "Passo de Carnival."

Mutual Program

Girl and the Game No. 15—(Two Reels)—Signal.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Pendulum of Chance—(Two Reels)—American—April 10.—Featuring Edward Coxen, George Field and Lizette Thorne. Alice Churchill, the wife of Carl Churchill, who is head of his own business and who is pleased with slow steady development and follows the customs inaugurated by his father, tries vaguely to awaken Carl's ambition at least to the point where he will change his business policies. Ned Wallace, formerly in love with Alice, establishes a brokerage business in competition with Carl and Alice's admiration for Wallace is discovered by Carl and he commences to reconstruct his business. Carl is ruined by Wallace and Alice's eyes opened to Wallace's methods, is only too glad to receive Carl's forgiveness and go with him to start anew.

Sapville's Stalwart Son—Falstaff—April 10.—With Frank McNish and Claude Cooper. The man who has hailed from the country and become prosperous bores his friends at the club by talking about the virtues of Sapville. He makes a bet with one of his clubmates that after his long absence from the town he can return to it as a tramp and be received "like a king on his throne." The "loyal hearts" do not respond, however, and after a painful experience he returns to the city to pay his wager.

The Romance of the Hollow Tree—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—April 11.—A friend of a young inventor, to pay for his own dissipations, steals a large sum of money from him and also his submarine plans. He has not time to make away with the money, so deposits it in the hollow of a tree. It is found here by a young girl whose father was supposed to have hidden a large amount of money before his sudden death. The girl meets the inventor in the city and learns she is using his stolen money. She locates the thief, however, as well as the submarine plans and the story closes with her marriage to the inventor.

Peanuts and Powder—Beauty—April 12.—Puff, an inventor, invents a peanut of high explosive power. Crex, a foreign power, wants to marry Kreemie, Puff's daughter, so that he can gain possession of the formula, but he is foiled in his attempt by Arthur, her lover. Crex steals the formula and also carries off Kreemie. They are chased by Puff and Arthur on motorcycles. They have also abducted a pet monkey and he proves their undoing, for he eats a peanut which blows up their shack and the villians, while Arthur and Puff escape with Kreemie. John Sheehan and Carol Halloway featured.

Silent Selby—(Three Reels)—Mustang—April 13.—Featuring Tom Chatterton and Anna Little. Silent Selby, a cowboy on the Whitney ranch, loves Helen, the only daughter of Ward Whitney, the owner of the ranch. He incurs the enmity of Cliff Merton, the foreman, and one evening when he takes an undue liberty with Helen by violently seizing her by the wrist, he is knocked down by Silent Selby, and Cliff Merton vows vengeance and discharges Selby. That evening when Helen is returning after meeting Silent Selby she is attacked by Merton, who takes her to his shack and binds her to a chair. Cliff drinks himself into a stupor and at dawn Helen escapes and rushes to her father. Later Cliff is found strangled and Felipe, a Mexican ranch hand, and Silent Selby are accused. However, Whitney confesses that he killed Cliff, detailing the indignities suffered by Helen as the reason.

A Flickering Light—(Two Reels)—American—April 14.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Almost Right—Cub—April 14.—Featuring Billy Armstrong. Luke Sharpe, a detective, and his assistant, Jiggers, get on the trail of a crook, to their own hurt, however, for not only does the crook escape, but the two fake detectives are recognized by a band of angry officers and put under arrest themselves.

The Wayfarers—(Three Reels)—American—April 15.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Overworked Oversea Overseer—Falstaff—April 15.—With Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish. The lazy caretaker of a country estate learns that he is to be superseded by another, an unsophisticated Englishman, and tries to make the latter's terror of wild American life redound to his own gain. The Englishman learns at length, however, that he is being "spoofed" and he prepares a little surprise for his persecutors which elevates him in their estimation.

Under Azure Skies—(Three Reels)—Mustang—April 8.—Featuring Art Acord and Nita Davis. Bill Hardy, who has lost his pay, and ashamed to face the boys with the story of his mishap, drops off at the Flying U. Ranch owned by "Pop" Dennis and secures a job. Jim, the foreman, knocks Bill down and he is discharged and he plans to get a big bunch of cattle before he goes. Mrs. Dennis is an invalid and Bill sends for Nell, the little nurse who cared for him when he was beaten up and his pay taken from him. Bill and Nell are captured by Jim, but Nell escapes, and as Jim is about to string Bill up she rides through, cuts the rope and Bill jumps on behind the cowboy who has come to warn them and escapes. In the end Bill is happily married to Nell.

Knocking Out Knockout Kelly—Vogue—April 9.—Featuring Arthur Moon, Paddy McQuire, Jack Gaines and Priscilla Dean. When Dowdy Donnelly learns that Knockout Kelly has stolen his sweetheart he begs her to return and she agrees to do this on condition that he knock out Kelly. Donnelly has an attack of cold feet owing to the favorable reports from Kelly's gymnasium and Dugan, who is aiding him, hits upon a brilliant idea of knocking out Kelly. The plan works O. K. until Donnelly's sweetheart, incensed at the frameup to knock out Kelly, exposes Dugan and Donnelly and marries Kelly.

Universal Program

Putting Her Foot In It—Nestor—April 10.—With Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher. Mr. Cutter, proprietor of a shoe establishment, is so effusively polite to the newly married Billie that Ray, her husband, objects to her trading at the store. Ray later learns that Cutter is calling at his house to bring shoes to his wife, and fearing the worst, he goes home with a gun. A terrible fight ensues, and it is a long while before the unreasoning husband comes to his senses.

The Voice of the Tempter—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—April 11.—Featuring Juan de la Cruz and Stella Razeto. Ralph Hartley's rich uncle dies and leaves a will which places Ralph in a strange situation. He is compelled to find a cousin whom he has never met and marry her in order to get his share of the fortune. The girl, Fern Roberts, is in poor circumstances and is already in love with a tough of the slums. However, she agrees to marriage upon the condition that she will be allowed her freedom afterwards. Following the marriage Fern is so often seen with Joe, her lover of the slums, that a scandal is started. Ralph finally allows the two to elope, but kidnaps Fern during the process of eloping and confines her in a lonely cabin. Here, under the influence of all the love-making and mating of the birds and beasts, new desires spring up within the girl's breast and she finally realizes her duty to and love for her husband.

Held for Damages—Imp—April 11.—With Harry Benham and Edna Pendleton. Bob Norton, in love with a thrifty milliner, asks his father to "come across" with enough money to marry on. He is indignant on being turned down by his millionaire father, who has just purchased a $500 dog. Father tells Bob, however, that if he can prove himself to be worth as much as the dog he will reconsider the marriage question. Fate takes a hand, with the costly bull as its instrument, at first makes a mess of things and then with characteristic caprice brings the dilemma to a happy conclusion.

The Brink—Laemmle—April 12.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church. In the mad fight to save his financial standing, Wilson neglects his wife. When the long period of business stress is over, he returns home repentant of the way he has forgotten her. Meanwhile the wife is tempted by a "man about town" and is about to step over the brink to which she has been forced, when a queer turn of fate prevents. The two married people are then happily reunited.

Lathered Truth—(Two Reels)—Victor—April 12.—Featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry C. Myers. Selma von Sable pretends to be what she is not by cutting a figure on Fifth Avenue, where she passes for a member of the smart set. The bluff is so effective that Karl Clifford, a leading man and motion picture producer, is ashamed of his business and does not confide his great need to her—that of a suitable leading woman. Karl is finally about to abandon all hope of continuing his interrupted production, when he discovers the very type he has been seeking in the person of a girl barber. And the latter, on closer inspection, proves to be Selma, minus her pretentious finery. There is no time lost in getting to the studio.

Public Approval—(Three Reels)—Laemmle—April 13.—Featuring Agnes Vernon. Elliott Cook, a young attorney, is sent abroad to occupy a diplomatic post, leaving behind Bertha Deverill, the girl to whom he is engaged, and his close friend, Alvin Parker. The latter loves Esther, the daughter of Newton, the banker, who is indebted to the political boss for his support as nominee for mayor. Bertha is persuaded by her parents to become engaged to Newton. Parker marries Esther in secret, and when he comes upon Boss Aldrich trying to embrace her, he strangles the man to death. Cook, returned from Europe, is accused of the murder. Alvin confesses, but at the trial he is released on the plea of self-defense. The story ends with Bertha and Cook happily reunited and the bar to the happiness of Parker and his wife removed.

The Doctor of the Afternoon Arm—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 14.—With Edith Roberts and Sydell Dowling. Dr. Rolfe, a man of good breeding, goes to the Northwest to practice medicine. Here he becomes a confirmed drunkard. The doctor is still man enough to save Sue, an orphan, from the wild embraces of a drunken miner. He is shot, however, and Sue reciprocates his kindness by resorting to prayer as efficacious in his recovery. The remembrance of his mother kneeling at his bedside long before in the same manner stirs Rolfe with new resolve and from that time on he forsakes drink. Later on Sue is saved from the designing Lou, the owner of the Afternoon Arm Saloon, and the latter place is turned into a small church.

Some Honeymoon—Nestor—April 14.—With Billie Rhodes and Lee Moran. After the wedding breakfast, Lee tells his friends that on account of the high cost of living he and his bride will take their honeymoon right in the city where they are, but that his friends will not be able to locate them. His best man makes a bet to the contrary, but up until ten o'clock that night, as agreed, they honeymooners cannot be found. Thus Lee and his wife, who have been disguised as bell hop and maid in a hotel, win $500 and start off to enjoy a more appropriate honeymoon.

The Rival Pilots—(Two Reels)—Bison—April 15.—With Lee Hill. Jack Worth, an engineer, is discredited in his job and ruined with the girl he loves by his rival, Steve, who marries the girl. Later Jack's friendliness with Margaret's baby incites the anger of Steve and he tries to shoot Jack. Finally, after Jack has saved the baby from being run over by his train, Steve realizes how despicable he has been and kills himself. Then Margaret and Jack, the old lovers, long separated by Steve's villiany, renew their love and the child is given a more worthy father.

Hubby Puts One Over—Joker—April 15.—Featuring Wm. Franey and Gail Henry. Binks, who has fallen for "La Belle," a dancing lady, hires Drew, a wizard at impersonations, to take his place with the Frou while he dines "La Belle." A lively time ensues at the restaurant when the dancer's husband puts in appearance, but Drew, who takes Mrs. Binks to the ball and back, is not discovered. With a sigh of relief Binks resolves to forego further expeditions on "The Great White Way."

The Stolen Melody—Powers—April 15.—With Doris Pawn and Sydney Ayres. Homer Pasmore, a composer, has his opera score stolen and marketed by his rival in love, Walker. With the help of his sweetheart, however, the theft is discovered and Walker is put under arrest, while Pasmore receives his just reward for the music.

The Double's Troubles—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—April 16.—Featuring Alice Howell and Harry Coleman. The resemblance that the hotel chambermaid bears to Countess Troubleskoy, a female Raffles, underlies the trouble recorded in this film. The Countess' clothes are taken by the chambermaid, who attends a grand ball planned for the getting of more loot and has a fine time with the Countess' suitor, Oscar. The crooks cannot understand the queer actions of the latter and make war upon him. The melee finishes with a wrecked hotel and a repentant chambermaid.

The Sham Reality—Rex—April 16.—While his wife is away, James Brooks, an actor, moves into new apartments and decides to send his wife the key. He sends his wife the key to the apartment of his friend by mistake and she arrives and finds him in a love scene with his friend's wife. Brooks explains to his wife that he is only rehearsing a new play. The friend, who has been watching all along, shoots his wife, and at the end of the play the spectator is left to puzzle out whether or not the shooting was merely a part of the rehearsal.

The Hidden City of Crime—(Two Reels)—Episode 18 of "Graft."—Featuring Richard Stanton, Jane Novak and Glen White. Stone, learning that Dorothy Maxwell is bound for Chinatown with a slumming party, gets her into his hands there. Harding, who has by chance trailed a band of smugglers to the same place, is in the act of saving a Chinese girl from the designs of Graham, a white-slaver and opium dealer, when he discovers Dorothy and realizes he must save her at the cost of the other girl. The latter, realizing his position, helps him to escape through the dives with Dorothy safely. The next day Mayor Harding has Graham arrested and the Chinese girl, who has managed to elude her captors, testifies against him.

The Dance of Love—(Split Reel)—Powers—April 6.—A novelty in which Lena Baskette, the eight-year-old dancing marvel, appears. First comes the "Dance of the Serpents," then an Egyptian dance, followed by a Polka Coquette to the Dance of the Honey Bees, by Richmond. A ballet to Theadore Bendix's "Cricket's Senenade" completes the film. On the same reel is:

The Brush Industry.—These scenes show the manner in which brushes are made from the raw product, which comes from the hogs of Poland, China and the Indies, right up to the finished product.

Feature Programs

World

Then I'll Come Back to You—(Five Reels)—Equitable—April 3.—Alice Brady and Jack Sherrill featured. In the prologue we are introduced to Barbara Allison, Steve O'Mara and Archie Wickersham as children. Steve and Archie get into a quarrel and Barbara sides with Archie. So the little Steve tells her when he is good enough to merit her attention he will come back to her. Ten years later he keeps his promise. He finds Barbara engaged to Archie. Archie has planned to get control of the railroad which Steve is building and has so arranged a contract that unless Steve finishes the work by a certain time, the road falls into his hands. Archie's attempts to stop the construction furnish some exciting incidents and Steven's endeavor to win Barbara gives the picture a pleasing element of romance.

On the present site of the Orpheum theater in Oil City, which will be razed, a most up-to-date and attractive picture theater will be erected, as announced by Manager F. J. Dion.

It has been announced that P. L. Mikalarias, proprietor of the North Pittsburg street candy store, Connellville, has leased part of the Royal hotel property and will transform it into a motion picture theater. About $25,000 will be spent in the transformation. The new house will seat 1,000 persons, all on one floor, there being no balconies or boxes included in the plans. It will be ready for opening in about two months under the name of the Orpheum.

Frank Emmett, manager of the Regent and Lyceum theaters, has added one more to his string of prominent photoplay houses through the acquisition of the Madison theater. Mr. Emmett has leased this prominent West End playhouse, near Thirteenth and Chew streets, for a long term of years and has made arrangements to give its patrons the same high class of motion pictures that are being offered at the Lyceum and Regent now.

South Dakota.

P. G. Rosenberry of White Rock has purchased the Ruby theater in Webster from J. L. Jenkins.

The Idle Hour theater in Aberdeen, which the McCarthy Brothers have remodeled and made into a very attractive picture house, has been opened as the Rialto.

Tennessee.

The Knickerbocker, the splendid new house on Sixth avenue, North, Nashville, was opened by W. H. Wassman, March 22. The Knickerbocker is absolutely fireproof and seats 1,200 people.

Texas.

Southern Theater Equipment Company of Dallas; capital stock, $10,000; incorporators, N. E. Depinet, C. B. Peterson and William Oldknow.

Certificates of dissolution were filed as follows: Mutual Film Corporation of Texas, of Dallas; Kelly Bros. & Company of Trinity.

The Rex theater, 2211 Market street, Galveston, is closed for improvements. It will be made larger, a new Simplex machine and a Minusa screen will be installed.

Utah.

Tooele is to have a modern picture house, erected by John J. Gillett on his property on Main street. This house will be built in the near future. H. H. Johnston, manager of the Johnston moving picture house and of the Tooele opera house, will direct and manage the new picture house upon its completion.

Washington.

The Regent is to be the name of Tacoma's new motion picture palace which will open at Ninth street and Pacific avenue early in April. The name Empress is to be obliterated and the remodeled, refurnished house will start a new career as the home of Triangle pictures in Tacoma.

Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Droske have sold the Idle Hour picture theater in Neenah to C. Peterson of Omro.

The Janesville Amusement Company expects to open about May 1, in Janesville, one of the most elaborate picture theaters in Wisconsin.

Architect H. G. Lotter has completed plans of the moving picture theater for O. L. Meister, which will be built on Third street, north of Grand avenue, Milwaukee. It will be one story high with balcony and basement, and 50 by 150 feet.

According to designs drawn by Architect B. S. Scheiderer, a moving picture theater will be built at Stevens Point for J. R. McKinley. It will be of solid brick or brick on tile construction, one story and part basement, and 40 by 130 feet. There will be a fan ventilating system, tar and gravel roofing, stone trim, indirect lighting, and a seating capacity of five hundred. The cost will be about $7,500.

The Fairyland theater, Sheboygan, is now in charge of Christopher German of St. Louis.

VIOLA DANA WITH METRO

"The Poor Little Rich Girl," who became so well known on the stage in the Belasco play by that name, is now one of the Metro constellation of stars. Her name is Viola Dana and she is already beloved by screen fans because of her work with the Edison company. Some of her picture successes are "The Blind Fiddler," "The Stone Heart," "The Innocence of Ruth" and "Gladiola." In the latter production the seventeen-year-old star took the part of a young mother. Miss Dana is already at work in her first Metro picture, the title of which is not yet announced.

ERNEST TRUEX IN NEW FEATURE.

Ernest Truex, who appears opposite Dorothy Kelly in the forthcoming Vitagraph feature comedy, "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," has had an interesting career on the musical comedy and straight comedy stage.

Mr. Truex won particular attention because of his delineation of character comedy parts. He was born in Kansas City, Mo., in 1889. His first big opportunity was with Ethel Barrymore in "Alice Sit by the Fire." After this engagement Mr. Truex made a name for himself in other comedy roles. He was the jockey in Lillian Russell's success, "Wildfire." He played Abija Flagg in the premiere of Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," was "Dennis" in "Doctor de Luxe," and scored a hit when he worked opposite Madge Kennedy in "Over Night."

Dorothy Green, the Metro player featured with Clifford Bruce in "Hearts Aflame," celebrated her twenty-first birthday recently at a dinner attended by more than two hundred guests.

Thomas H. Ince

announces that his cinema-spectacle

CIVILIZATION

By C. Gardner Sullivan

will be presented for the first time anywhere at the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, Monday night, April 17.

CIVILIZATION will be in ten reels. It is the most astounding and daring production ever known since the beginning of cinematography and the theatre. Thousands of actors were engaged in the making of CIVILIZATION. One hundred and ninety thousand feet of film were taken to secure ten thousand feet for the final screen display.

Immediately after the Los Angeles production CIVILIZATION will be presented in New York at an important Broadway theatre to be announced later.

Mr. Ince desires to give credit to the following assistants for their aid in the production of CIVILIZATION:

RAYMOND B. WEST

Jay Hunt	J. Parker Reed
Reginald Barker	Walter Edwards
Irving Willett	David M. Hartford

A special orchestra of thirty-five will interpret the incidental music by Victor L. Schertzinger.

Film Men Support Trade Shows

CONVENTION TIME NEAR

THE motion picture industry is fighting for the spotlight again. What with wars and rumors of wars; mergers and murmurings of million-dollar combinations; trade shows and rival trade shows; conventions and new theaters, every person in the industry is on edge. Atlanta reports a successful gathering of film men from not only the South but the entire country; Minneapolis is next with the northwest convention scheduled for the first of May; then Chicago with the national meeting in July, with other sessions set for other dates in between in various centers. The next few months will be busy for those interested in motion picture efforts.

There will be a trade show in connection with the convention in Minneapolis and during the same week New York exhibitors will have an exposition at Grand Central Palace which is being supported by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The following week the Motion Picture Board of Trade will hold its show in Madison Square Garden.

It is deplorable that the exhibitors' league and the board of trade could not have got together for one big exposition in New York but the rivalry has been discussed at length and is best forgotten as soon as possible. The experience this time should mean an understanding next year. Let the shows go on.

THE sudden death of Arthur H. Spiegel of Chicago was followed by rumors that the companies of which he was the head—the World and Equitable—would be taken under the wing of William A. Brady, who recently became the active head of the Paragon. This is another merger story that has not been confirmed. There are other stories this week to the effect that there would be a new organization which would include the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and those affiliated with it. There are dozens of other merger rumors but they seem to spring from nowhere in particular and die over night.

THE board of trade is gratified over the support given its coming exposition in New York. Under the management of J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the board and Harry A. Cochrane, experienced exposition manager, the success of the show seems assured. An expensive program has been arranged. S. L. Rothapfel, known for his original ideas in decorations and his music arrangements for motion picture playhouses, will be in charge of the artistic work for the garden show. Mr. Rothapfel has put himself on record by saying—"It's up to me, and I'll do it." The color scheme will be green, white and gold. The show spaces will be placed around the sides and each exhibitor has promised to do his best in the way of decorating. Heretofore one of the great troubles at Madison Square Garden has been the lighting system. Naturally some of the exhibits will be of small articles and the visitor will want to see them closely. To meet this difficulty an arrangement has been entered into with the Cooper Hewitt Company to supply the lights. A large stage with studio attachments will be constructed at the Fourth avenue end of the building. In front will be placed a motion picture screen. There will be 2,000 comfortable opera chairs where the tired out visitor may sit and watch a motion picture show with the latest and most entertaining feature plays and comedies. On the large platform also, a typical studio will be assembled and the general public will be shown the mysteries of producing a picture play. Stars from many companies have offered their services and under the supervision of directors of the first rank they will enact scenarios each day. Then as soon as possible the pictures will be placed on the screen without editing or making over. The center of the garden will be set aside for dancing. A reception committee of motion picture actors and actresses will be at the garden each day. This committee will include Anita Stewart, Leah Baird, Naomi Childers, Jewell Hunt, Billy Billings, Rose Tapley, Dorothy Kelly, Arline Pretty, Anne Schaefer, Mary Anderson, Eulalie Jensen, Louise Beaudet, Betty Howe, Virginia Norden, Robert Edeson, Adele Degarde, Julia Swayne Gordon, Mary Maurice, Belle Bruce, Frank Daniels, Ralph Ince, Joseph Kilgour, William Shea, William Duncan, John T. Kelly, Anders Randolf, Charles Kent, Denton Vane, Evart Overton, L. A daily newspaper will be published for the eight days of the exposition. It will have the distinction of being the first daily in the world to be illustrated by means of motion pictures. It will be of standard size and will be composed of eight pages. The name will be the Motion Picture Daily Trade Show Bulletin. Thomas A. Edison will write a signed editorial for the issue of May 7. Cartoonists, headed by Hy Mayer and Winsor McKay, of national reputation, will have drawings on both humorous and serious subjects. The news department will be looked after by an editorial board composed of men who write about pictures and nothing else.

Nearly all of the space available in the garden has been contracted for by such organizations and concerns as these:

Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles; Board of Trade, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Mutual Film Corporation, Paramount Pictures Corporation, Eastman Kodak Company, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Vitagraph Company, Bluebird Films, Fox Film Corporation, International Film Service, Nicholas Power Company, J. ATLANTA broke into the trade show and convention news columns with a success in the session that was closed on the first day of the month with a ball which was attended by men high in the industry as well as many of the stars of the screen. Southern exhibitors and exchange men are happy over the success of the gathering, and already they are dreaming of a national convention. The convention visitors were welcomed by Mayor Woodward, who invited them to return for another meeting next year. Mrs. Louise Desverges Everett, nineteen years old, won the Universal beauty contest. She will have a tryout in New York.

WITH an invitation performance at Alfred Hamberger's Fine Arts theater, "The Ne'er-do-well," the Selig production of Rex Beach's Panama canal story of the same title, and released through V. L. S. E., by arrangement with Sol Lesser, opened for what seems likely to be a record run in Chicago. The Michigan avenue playhouse was crowded with leading film men, several prominent exchange men being especially interested in the way the production was received. The opening was a success from every point of view. The play has been reviewed in an earlier issue of Motography.

WHEN C. Furness Hately, representing in Chicago the Triangle Film Corporation, turned over the Colonial theater to the Strand theater company for the continued presentation of Triangle films, he was given a sendoff he is not likely to forget. Forced by the orchestra to take the baton for the closing number, he directed more like a musician than the business man he is. At the close he was presented with a gold cigar case and a loving cup. Mr. Hately contends that the smile is the secret of success in the show business and he is taking it with him into another venture in the amusement field which he is not ready to announce as yet.

CUSTOMS officials in Washington will make no official comment on the pictures taken of the Willard-Johnson fight on the boundary line between Canada and the United States, but it is plain that the enterprise of the promoters of the scheme has produced a hard nut for the treasury department to crack. Apparently the method as reported to the treasury department is not an evasion of the law, but one that would have been prohibited if it possibly could have been foreseen. The report before the treasury department is that the pictures were taken near Rouse Point, on the northern border of New York, Sunday, April 2. A tent was pitched over one of the stone boundary posts which marks the New York-Canadian line. The line ran through the center of the tent. On the Canadian side were piled boxes containing the original pictures; on the American side were packages of films on which were made the reproductions. On a table set up directly in front of the post on the Canadian side was the transferring apparatus, with the original film descending from its reel into a box entirely in Canada. Strong lens and electric light produced, it is stated, a perfect reproduction. The representative of the customs service was present and made the report. It is stated to be the intention to produce the films only in New York state as they cannot be transported in the mails or by the express companies or railroad companies. When they are produced, it will develop whether the government intends to bring a test case. The opinion in Washington is that it will not, but objection may be made by welfare workers that will bring on a test in the courts.

THE House Committee on Education has failed to get a quorum for the consideration of the Hughes bill and indications are that it will be some time before action will be taken on the measure. The statement is made at the committee that there is no significance in the failure to get a quorum other than that the early meeting of the House each day has made it impossible for members to give the same attention to committee work as under ordinary circumstances. It is also declared that the committee has progressed on the measure to such an extent that another meeting will be sufficient to complete it and report it to the House. Chairman Hughes declares that it is his intention to urge the committee to report a measure in time to be considered by the present Congress, that is, before the adjournment is taken for the summer recess.

CALVERT GOES SOUTH

Director and Company Sent to Chattanooga by George K. Spoor to Make Civil War Feature for Essanay

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has sent a troupe of players to Chattanooga, Tenn., to film a new feature play, "According to the Code," in the exact locality in which the author has laid his plot. The play, written by Charles Michelson, deals with a love story of the civil war and the meeting of the aged principals today—more than a half century afterward. Lewis S. Stone, the famous stage star, who recently finished "The Havoc" for Essanay, will take the lead with Marguerite Clayton. E. H. Calvert will direct the piece and take the heavy lead. Sydney Ainsworth will take the other principal part, also a heavy.

The few interiors of the play will be taken in the Chicago studios upon the return of the players from the south. A dozen members of the stock company went to Tennessee from Chicago. Mr. Stone, who had been on a shooting trip in the Rocky mountains following his work with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," joined the party at Chattanooga.

The play requires the use of cavalry, which will be obtained in the south. It also requires a close adherence to type and settings which Mr. Spoor believed could not be better obtained than in the natural locality of the subject. The same country in which Director Calvert filmed the famous "Tish" series of Mary Roberts Rinehart will provide the locations for "According to the Code."

As Calvert, Stone and Ainsworth all have had military experience they are well cast in the new play. The piece is not designed as distinctly a civil war drama, but had its original settings during the great conflict.

"According to the Code" is only one of the several strong features which Essanay will offer soon. "Sherlock Holmes" with William Gillette, in seven reels soon will be released, following "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row" with Sallie Fisher, Richard C. Travers and John Junior. "That Sort," taken from the stage play, is now being constructed with Warda Howard, Ernest Maupain and Duncan McRae. One of the beautiful scenes in "That Sort" is that of a woman of the demimonde, repentant, kneeling in church before the image of the Savior. The scene was taken in the Essanay studio. Nell Craig and Darwin Karr are featured in "Her Naked Soul."

A new crop of fables in slang, just raised by George Ade on his farm in Indiana is being picturized by Essanay. These fables form the best work of this kind ever attempted by this famous author.

"The Fable of the Preacher Who Flew His Kite, But Not Because He Wished to Do So," is the first of the new series.

BIG THANHOUSER BALL

Proceeds of Elaborate Charity Party at Jacksonville, Florida, to Go to Actors' Fund and to Children's Home Society

Between 1,000 and 1,100 people attended the elaborate charity ball given by the Thanhouser Club at Jacksonville, Florida, last week. This is said to be one of the largest social events ever witnessed by the city.

According to an announcement made by W. Ray Johnston, business manager of the Thanhouser Company, under whose auspices the ball was given, the gross receipts were $1,050. This will leave about $800 to be turned over to the motion picture committee working for the Actors' Fund of America and to the Children's Home Society of Florida.

Long before the dancing began, says the Florida Times-Union, a large, curious crowd gathered about the Windsor Hotel to catch glimpses of favorite actors and actresses as they passed from motor car to entrance. Some of the local Lotharios who attended the ball mustered up courage to ask and receive dances with pedestalized stars with whom they were well acquainted, so far as appearances upon the screen go.

The grand march was led by Mayor J. E. T. Bowden and Miss Marguerite Courtot. There followed the two hundred or more prominent players in couples, an announcer designating them by name for the benefit of the guests as they passed a given spot in the ball room.

A feature of the event was the three huge turtles, one the backs of which were painted the meaning of the occasion, which were placed in the fountain as mascots of the Thanhouser club, whose forethought was responsible for the ball and its final success.

"WHO'S GUILTY?" IN MAY

Pathe to Release Series Made by the Arrow Film Corporation Featuring Tom Moore and Anna Nilsson

On May 8 the Pathe exchange will release throughout the country the first of the fourteen two-reel photo-novels which comprise Pathe's newest series, "Who's Guilty?" These photo-novels are, in every case, complete in themselves, yet all are based on the one major theme of "Who's Guilty?"

This theme is broad and intensely human. It concerns the biggest problems that beset the American people today. It portrays those questions—domestic, sociological, political, and psychological—which enter into the lives of all Americans and which must be answered from day to day by every individual.

"Who's Guilty?" series is produced by the Arrow Film Corporation for Pathe with a most careful regard for the demands of the ultra-modern photoplay. Under the personal guidance of W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow company, no item of plot, acting, direction, setting or other detail of successful motion picture production has been overlooked.

Every one of the fourteen photo-novels has a plot that, under ordinary circumstances, would make a corking five-reel feature. Never are the same settings used for any two of the photo-novels, nor are the actors appearing in this Pathe series permitted to wear the same clothes in one story after another.

Co-starred in the "Who's Guilty?" series are Anna Q. Nilsson and Tom Moore. Four year ago Miss Nilsson, seen until then only in one and two-reel pictures, leaped into fame by her brilliant performance in "Shenandoah," the powerful American war-play. Since then she has been starred in a great number of Kalem and Equitable features and has proved to be a drawing-card for the General and World programs. Mr. Moore comes of the talented Moore trio.

Staging and directing these fourteen photo-novels are two of America's premier directors, Howell Hansel and Lawrence B. McGill. Mr. Hansel made a name for himself as the director of "The Million Dollar Mystery," and a number of other brilliant Thanhouser photoplays.

Lawrence B. McGill is one of the small number of directors who made good pictures in the early days of the screen play and still is a highly successful producer. Some of his many features are "Pierre of the Plains" and "Arizona," for All-Star, "The Sealed Valley" for Metro and "How Molly Made Good." His latest feature success is "The Woman's Law," the Pathe-Arrow feature.

One of the few great women writers of our day is turning each "Who's Guilty?" photo-novel into a fiction story that will appear in a large number of newspapers throughout the country simultaneously with the release of each two-reel screen play. She is Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, a relative of President Wilson and a magazine writer of note. Mrs. Woodrow has also supplied six of the plots.

The actual scenarios of the "Who's Guilty?" series have been written in their entirety or else re-edited by E. A. Bingham, long the head of the Metro scenario department.

Distribution of the "Who's Guilty?" series is under the direct supervision of George A. Smith, serial director of Pathe Exchange, Incorporated. Prior to his present work Mr. Smith was on the staff of The New York Journal. He has had charge of the newspaper arrangements for the appearance of the "Who's Guilty?" series, which will be published simultaneously in

The Detroit Times, Providence Tribune, Buffalo Evening News, Indianapolis Star, Altoona Tribune, Philadelphia North American, Pittsburgh Press, New York Evening World, Cincinnati Times Star, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Dallas News, Los Angeles Record, San Francisco Call, Atlanta Journal, Chicago Herald, New Orleans Item, St. Louis Times, Omaha World Herald, Salt Lake Tribune, Kansas City Star, and other papers.

The titles thus far selected for some of the photo-novels of the "Who's Guilty?" series are: "The Stroke of the Scalpel"—"Sowing the Wind"—"The Tight Rein"—"The Tangled Web"—"The Second Offense"—"The Silent Shame"—"The Moral Coward"—and "Sold Out."

Spoor Replies to Chaplin

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has issued a statement in reply to the threat of Charles Chaplin that he would enjoin the showing of the "Burlesque on Carmen" in four reels. This is one of the last two photoplays produced by Chaplin for Essanay, the other "Police," not yet having been released.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

Win a Real Place in Your Community

By Percy W. Wells,

President Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., owners of the Academy of Music, the Royal, the Grand and the Victoria theaters.

OUR beginning was about the humblest in this territory. We are now the largest individual operators of theaters in North Carolina.

The firm of Howard and Wells, composed of myself and James Howard, started business in Wilmington ten years ago, being the pioneer motion picture enterprise of Wilmington, operating the Bijou Theater in a tent. The floor was six inches of sawdust on the ground and the seats were rough benches. A string of incandescents from the center pole of the tent furnished illumination, and a coal heater the heat in winter. A phonograph was used as a ballyhoo outside.

Percy W. Wells

That was ten years ago. Three years ago the tent was replaced by a modern building on the same lot, purchase of lot and building representing an investment of $50,000.

In the early spring of 1915 we purchased a lot on the busiest block of the down town shopping district, upon which we built our Royal Theater, which was opened last September, representing an investment of $75,000. In November last we concluded negotiations whereby we took over the Grand and Victoria, the other two down town theaters, the former a picture theater and the latter a combined vaudeville and picture house with a seating capacity of 1,100 and representing an investment of $70,000.

James Howard

Three months ago we took over the Academy of Music, also of this city. We therefore, at the present time, control the theatrical situation in Wilmington.

We attribute our success chiefly to two causes: The injection of our personality into the management of our theaters, and the firm conviction from the very beginning that the good people of Wilmington could very easily get along without us but that we could not exist without them.

For nine years that we operated the Bijou theater before branching out in our activities, either myself or Mr. Howard was continuously on the door at the theater from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. We consider this, above everything else, as the chief factor in our success. We met every patron of the theater personally, and each one knew us personally.

Questions were not answered nor patrons attended to by a careless usher or doorkeeper, but by one of us. In this way we soon built up a state of companionship between ourselves and the people of the city which was worth more than any financial capitalization or newspaper advertising. This personal touch, we are glad to say, has made for us thousands of steadfast friends in Wilmington, and we number among them the leading ministers, educators and business men of the city.

Almost every exhibitor would tell you off hand that he caters to the wishes and wants of his patrons, but I believe that we have gone a step further in this direction than the average exhibitor, and this has been another big factor in our success. Every patron of our theaters has been made to know that we will stop at no expense nor trouble to get any picture or do anything that they wish, and we have often booked expensive features merely upon the request of one patron. Catering in this manner to our public year after year has gradually brought us a circle of friends who have implicit confidence in us and stand by us "through thick and thin," to use a trite expression.

We have co-operated with the ministers of the city in every way possible and number among our patrons the pastors of every church in the city. We co-operate with the educational leaders in presenting picturized versions of various works that are being studied in the schools. We take an active interest in civic improvements and co-related matters, and are members of the Chamber of Commerce.

In short, we have won our own personal places among the people of Wilmington and are looked upon not as impersonal objects with the idea of simply making money. The people know we are really interested in them and in the welfare of the community.

Boosts Other Fellow's Good Shows

By Harry Van,

Booker of Features, The Strand, Huron, South Dakota.

The moving picture manager in a small town nowadays must put his theater on the same business basis as any other business. It takes a man of good habits, good reputation, farseeing and levelheaded to run a picture show—one who believes in and knows how to advertise his business correctly.—a man who can see his competitor get an increasing business and not get jealous—a man who will and does spend every minute of his time to boost and attend to his own theater.

I make friends by boosting the other fellow's feature when he gets a good one. Oftentimes this winter I have told friends not to miss the feature at another house; that I also have a fine show, but on that particular night I know his is the best. Of course a man must know what he is talking about so that he doesn't give his friend a "bum steer." When that friend goes to that show and is pleased, your word will go all the stronger with him the next time you tell him or them that you have a good one at your own house. Too many managers book a feature on the strength of the title. They don't take a trade journal.

The Strand was opened in Huron, with two other fine theaters as opposition. The town is only six thousand. We have built up business by carefully informing ourselves what the fan wanted and then booked accordingly. The opposition advertised very extensively such stars as Robert Edeson, Clara Kimball Young, Beatriz Michelina and stars and players from "The Birth of a Nation," which set the people wild here. Several of those stars are now with Triangle and others. I am booking a list of those Griffith and other stars who previously appeared under other brands of film. I get fine copies and win out. The publicity was paid for by the opposition. Slurs in a large variety were used by the opposition in the papers, but I kept quiet and we are now holding our own very nicely. As a feature booker of the Strand, R. C. Gibbs, the manager, gives me full scope to work under.

I started in the picture game in August, 1897, by buying a Lubin Cineograph. It was a crude affair with 50-foot reels.

I have lost out on occasions when all my showmanship couldn't help me. I found out later it was too much showmanship and not really enough sound business principle. The swell head is the curse of the exhibitor. He gets people coming his way and thinks he is the king of all. Then some one else comes, sets up in opposition, the king gets mad, abuses, ridicules, and behold—in a few months "Theater for Sale."

I talk from experience. Talk your own theater. Advertise your particular house, not your name or your brand of film. I talk Strand Theater features. I am paying for them and can call them what I like.

Make your patrons feel at home. Meet them at the door, going and coming, and above all give them good pictures, in good condition, and good morally. Licentious features get the money, but what do your patrons say after they have seen them? Above all keep your programs clean.

Condemns Indecent Plays

By A. D. Pedley,
Pedley and Burch Theatrical Company, Owensboro, Kentucky.

We have been consistently opposed to salacious, indecent plays, and have not permitted any of them to go on our screen. We prefer to build upon the firm foundation of merit rather than to step aside for the momentary profit offered by vampire stuff or anything of this nature that appeals solely to the baser passions.

We have seen a great many plays that were so indecent that clean-minded people had no business watching them. We have seen plays that were much worse in their presentation on the screen than the vilest burlesque show because of the subtle way in which emotions were portrayed. We hold firmly to the idea that as soon as all persons interested in the business agree to get away from this stuff the better the business will be.

We remember the beginning of the motion picture business—the five-cent picture show in a storehouse, with phonograph accompaniment, giving 15-minute shows. We believe in the permanence of the business and its great possibilities in the future.

We are firm believers in all manner of publicity, newspapers, poster advertising, mailing list, hand bills, blotters, ballyhoos, and we are using a Deagan electric unaphone on the streets and in front of our theater. This unaphone consists of an arrangement of electric bells played by piano keyboard, which gives a calliope effect, only much better, and is quite novel and attractive. It is driven about on a small wagon.

One of the pieces of advertising matter we got out recently was a handbill about eight by twelve inches in size, printed upon real wall paper furnished by one of the city stores. We headed this: "Look! We are tearing the paper off the walls of the Grand, to make room for the crowds who will want to see," etc. At the bottom of the bill the program was given.

Another strong point in our policy is never to allow a patron to go away dissatisfied. If we have not given a good show, we insist upon refunding the money.

Smiling Attendant Is Theater's Biggest Asset

By Dr. E. R. Braly,
Proprietor Princess Theater, Lawrenceburg, Kansas.

I started in the show business when I was very young and have always liked it. At eighteen, among others, I wrote a play called "The Dixie Kids" and traveled from town to town putting on the show with local talent. I found the people of Lawrenceburg very appreciative and so decided to remain here. This has been my home ever since.

The manager of the Princess Theater was not succeeding very well at that time so I bought the house at a reasonable price. I immediately remodeled the entire theater.

At the door of my theater stand Courtesy, Attention and Service. The words "Thank you!" have a wonderful value in the show business. There is no doubt but that politeness is one of the main keys to success. And don't forget that lack of courtesy on the part of your attendants is due to the manager of the house and to no one else. The manager must set the example, and be always on the job.

People must have fresh air to enjoy a performance well, and cleanliness cannot be overemphasized.

The theater's biggest asset is a smiling attendant.

It is a fine thing for a house to have ushers who smile politely when showing patrons to seats as though it were a pleasure. It makes the patron start the show right, with a favorable attitude of mind. The spectator has been made to feel at home. By a smiling attendant I do not mean one who giggles or who is constantly grinning.

The theater should be well lighted, but one thing must be avoided, and that is lights that glare.

I co-operate with different organizations and encourage them to visit my theater in a body. This is good advertising and places my house in good social standing.

The exhibitor must tell the people clearly and correctly what he has to offer, by means of advertising. I use billboards and catch newspaper advertisements.

Princess Theater, Lawrenceburg, Tennessee.

Your advertising is a show window for your "goods" just the same as your lobby is. Keep both of them clean and inviting.

I have studied my patrons, and know they are of the "family" type. Therefore I never allow any vulgar or sensational films to be shown in my house. Film corporations who make such pictures as offend the tastes of the discriminating are lowering instead of aiding the business. The flashy advertisements of cheap, sensational services which I receive through the mail I throw into the waste basket. I use only the best. Run your house so that the children of today will be your patrons when they are grown up, which will not be long. Do nothing for a temporary gain.

I have found serial pictures good drawing cards. Every Thursday night is feature night in my house and I raise my price for it. The patrons do not mind, as they know they are going to see something good. It is a great pleasure to me to stand at the door and hear people say the show was fine, when they come out. Many of my patrons sometimes even shake hands with me to show their appreciation. That makes life worth living. The features I use come from the Metro and World companies and I know that these concerns are striving hard to give the best of service and place the business upon a higher plane.

The secret of perfect projection is inspection. We inspect our apparatus every day and keep it in perfect condition. Last but not least, good music is always a drawing card. Being in a musical town I got busy and rounded up a splendid seven-piece orchestra with Otto Chaffin as a very capable leader. Pictures with music set to them are much more enjoyable to the audience.

Ohio Exhibitors for Federal Regulation

By Max Stearn,

President, Ohio State Branch, Exhibitors' League of America.

We read with a great deal of interest the statement made by Mitchel H. Mark in last week's issue of Motography, with reference to censorship.

The exhibitors of the state of Ohio had a censor bill passed for the purpose of protecting themselves against the "fly-by-night" manufacturers and the unscrupulous exhibitors, whose sole desire was to get a little quick money, regardless of the injury it caused the business at large. The object they had in mind at the time this bill was drawn up was to eventually create a federal board, thereby doing away with the necessity of having state or municipal censorship.

The people who are now opposed to regulation in any form have been asked time and time again to offer a substitute measure, or to show us a way to control the "get-rich-quick" element in our business. The only answer we have heard is that censorship is "un-American" and that the police power of every city will regulate the showing of improper pictures. In other words, they say, place the burden upon the exhibitor and let the manufacturer of smutty pictures go unharmed.

The exhibitors who know which side their bread is buttered on will do all within their power to bring about federal regulation.

A Beautiful Theater in a College Town

By H. P. Wareham,

Manager, Wareham Theater, Manhattan, Kansas.

In the first place we have a house that is conceded to be unusually excellent, and we try to book the best attractions available. We believe in extensive advertising and we also believe in honest advertising. If we have a picture that we know is not up to our standard, we withhold advertising it; in fact, we would rather tell our people just what it is rather than to have them believe that it was a good attraction. We run features of every company that produces the very best.

In advertising we use the daily newspapers, the billboards (see illustration), a weekly program, and a mailing list.

In the daily papers we have a standing ad in which we have our today's program and our tomorrow's attractions. On the better pictures we use extra space for cuts and display. We maintain two billboards on which we post a six-sheet for each day's program. One of these boards is in a very desirable location on the main street of the town, and the other board is near the campus, where all the students of the Kansas State Agricultural College see it.

We have a mailing list of 500 to which we mail a herald of each attraction and a weekly illustrated program. We were very careful in selecting this mailing list and to show how people appreciate receiving our attractive programs, if for any reason any one has missed getting one he usually tells us about it.

In our dealings with the different exchanges we are just as fair and honest with them as we are with our patrons and every one else. We use the Sturtevant heating and ventilating system in connection with the Webster air washer; iced air in the summer. Our seating capacity is 1,100. College boys like pictures and as our house is new, modern and in good taste, our receipts are very satisfactory.

Attracted to Business by "Bum Shows"

By J. H. Kurtz,

Manager, Pastime Theater, Stewartville, Minnesota.

What first interested me in the business was the inferior grade of service being used by my predecessors and the fact that if business could be done on bum shows how much more business could be done on the best stuff on the market. I immediately made up my mind to have a try at it with the result that I bought the local house, fitted up a building on the ground floor and at once set about to get the best pictures obtainable.

My policy was appreciated by the people with the result that patronage increased four fold and I have always stuck to my first idea—"The best is none too good."

Although my town is only about 1,150 in population, I invested about $3,000 in my new theater, buying the best goods and keeping up the highest standard on pictures. In a very short time it ceased to be an experiment with me, but became a good, paying business, although sadly run down when I bought it. I do not try to get rich in a week. I pay good prices for my service and give my patrons as good as it is possible for me to get for them. The result is my business has had a steady growth and profits are always sure.

Any time I raise my prices my patrons feel sure of seeing something extra good and I try never to disappoint them. It is my firm conviction that if exhibitors would pay more attention to the class of service they use and less to making a big profit on an inferior service, they would be money ahead in the long run besides helping to educate the people to the better stuff which would mean better prices everywhere.

Appeal to Women and Children

By B. L. Converse,

Proprietor Temple Theater, Owosso, Michigan, and President of the Michigan Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

I do not consider myself a better exhibitor than many others, and I know I am not so good a one as some. The policy I have always followed is a good, clean show, inside and out, and a program that appeals to women and children.

I cater to only the best class, advertising only that which I am sure of showing. I am prompt in paying the exchanges for service and use the films as though they were my own.

I have been in the show business twelve years, having had houses in Owosso, Albion, Ypsilanti, Corunna, Caro and Jackson, Michigan, and Warren, Illinois.

Only a Side Line

THE other day we wrote to a certain theater manager for a description of his house and his method of achieving success in the presentation of pictures. In his reply, which was quite brief, he said: "The motion picture business is only a side line with me."

He didn't tell us what constituted his main line. In the old days (meaning four or five years ago) he might have held a job daytimes as a bookkeeper or a janitor, or he might have owned a hardware store. The theater that he ran evenings, if carefully managed, probably would have contributed three or four dollars a night towards Johnny's education and Susie's piano lessons.

In the year of our Lord nineteen hundred sixteen, the side-line picture theater is an anachronism. In the swift-moving evolution of our industry, it is relatively as out-of-place as a dodo—and should be as extinct.

In the first place, of course, no business that is worth running should be a side line. But that is particularly true in the show business; for it is a jealous mistress and resents any division of attention. No man can do justice to the possibilities of picture presentation by giving it a third or a half of his time and thought. If there seems to be profit even in such half-hearted operation, so much greater is the folly of neglecting and ignoring the multiplied profits resulting from concentrated attention.

Generally the man who is active in the operation of the theater is also the investor—that is, the owner. But exceptions to that condition are growing in number. Sometimes the active manager of the theater has not a dollar invested, and the real owner—or owners—take no part in the operation of the house.

We believe it is better for the manager to hold at least a small financial interest in the theater he manages, although we often see a high degree of efficiency maintained on salary. At any rate the manager, whether he be financially interested or not, should give all his time to that particular job. And the actual owner, or major stockholder, should give either all or none of his time to it. That is, if he is not the actual manager himself, he should not interfere with the man who is, beyond receiving his reports and giving him his instructions.

The manager, whatever his financial connection with the business, is the man who knows what the people want and gives it to them; and that is a full-time job in any community.

A picture theater may be only a side line with the investor; for it makes no difference whose money represents the capital. But with the manager it should never be a side line, nor should he have any other side lines. The picture presentation business is as big a proposition as most men ever have an opportunity to tackle. Exhibitors who make a big success of it find enough to keep them busy and happy from eight to fifteen hours a day; and they have no inclination to think about other lines or side lines of business.

The picture theater business has had too many side-liners working at it. Year by year they grow less, however, and we hope that before long all that are left will either get in or get out.

What Has Become of Them?

WHAT has become of the old-fashioned talking picture, and the inventors who had "perfected" the synchronism of film and phonograph so that the result was, in the words of the press agent, harmonious and wholly delightful? Where are the films in nature's own colors whose problem the investigators had "just solved" some years since? When will we see that stereoscopic projection of images that stand out in three dimensions and scorn the support of the screen, promised to us long ago by enthusiastic students of optical physics? Where did the "flickerless" projector go—that ingenious mechanism that moved its film continuously, and threw a steady picture at any speed, and was all ready to market? What has happened to the bigger film, with a surface broad enough to hold a stageful of people close-up, and cover a fifty-foot screen, that MOTOGRAPHY predicted years ago and an eastern manufacturer later announced as the "next step"?

Evidently the picture business has its mysteries. Full many a genius, loath to blush unseen, has tried to revolutionize the screen; but time rolls on, and still the black and white moves silent on its simple beam of light. In other words, it seems to be good enough the way it is. The talking picture never was popular, synchronically perfect or not. The colored film is pretty—no one will deny it that. That it has any value beyond mere prettiness has not yet conclusively appeared. The stereoscopic picture is still only a promise, and hardly even that in a serious sense. "Maybe some day"—that is about all we can say about it, in spite of the inventors.

As for the machine that moved its film continuously and threw a steady picture no matter how slowly it was revolved—possibly that ingenious mechanism, if born and raised in the factory of any of the well-known makers or proprietors, would now have a name. But, like any other invention whose stock certificates are considered its most important feature, it has vanished; the practical field of projection knows little of it.

That "bigger film" we still hope to see. The limitations of a photographic area of three-fourths of a square inch have been reached. The larger spectacle must have a larger base. For a fifty-foot screen a film picture at least two inches wide is optically almost essential. And why not? No exhibitor of the big stuff who pays hundreds of dollars for rentals or rights would object to the cost of a special machine for projecting it.

Talking, and color, and stereoscopic pictures may be lifeless issues so far as the box office is concerned. But bigger films will be a physical and optical necessity of the future, and we would like to see some one start their action in that direction.

The Library of the Art

ALL living arts, and most dead ones, have their literature. The motion picture, up to the time it (technically speaking) attained its majority, had practically none. A few more or less serious "hand-books" for machine operators constituted the whole shelf. In due course appeared a scattering of volumes, mostly paper-covered, instructing scenario writers how to do it. A two-volume cyclopedia of the art, quite pretentious, was the first serious work. There followed then with greater rapidity several books telling what went on inside the studios. "Trick" pictures helped to fill the pages with diagrams and explanations revealing the hidden secrets of the trade.

Gradually the library expanded. Serious and labored volumes came forth telling something of the art itself—the art of the art, we might say. Some of these deserve to be classed as real literature of unquestioned merit.

And now we have an analysis of the photoplay's psychology—by none other than the renowned Professor Hugo Münsterberg himself. In literature our art can ask no higher recognition. Not even a treatise by Theodore Roosevelt would give us more intellectual satisfaction.

The library of the motion picture has assumed respectable proportions and weight—and the production, we may presume, has only started. Some day we expect to publish a voluminous catalog of books pertaining to the art-science of motography—and maybe the day isn't very far away.

How Edison's "Black Maria" Grew

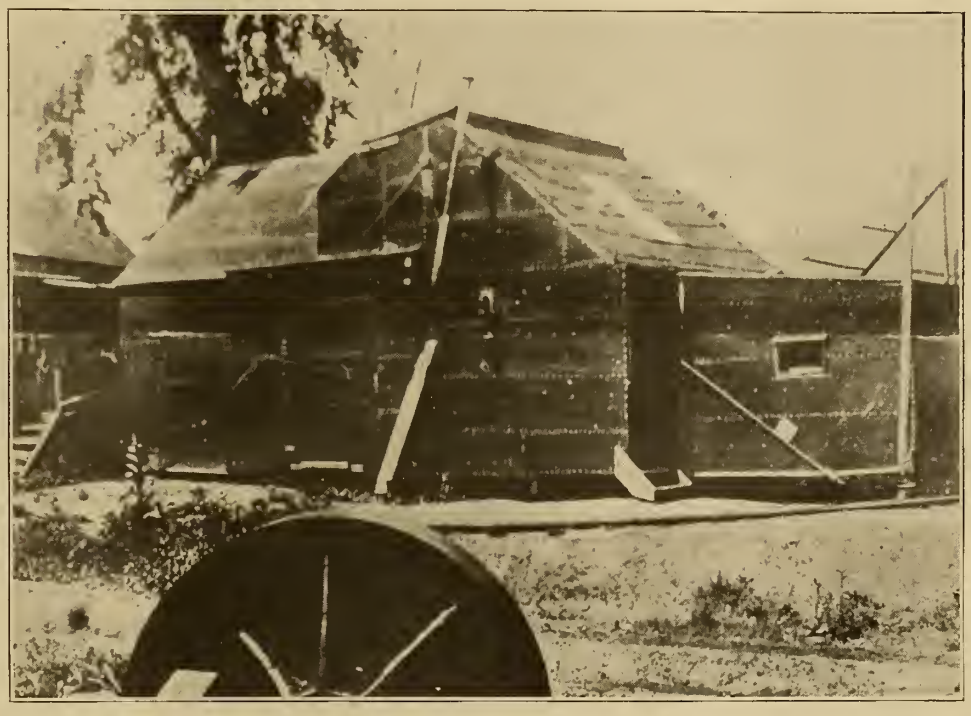
BY ALAN CROSLAND

THE motion picture interest ranks fifth among the industries of America.

To have that humdrum statement thrown at one by the enthusiastic recruit in the midst of a busy day is almost as monotonous as it is annoying. At best, it is certainly not impressive. But these same talismanic words arranged in that identical order, appearing in a statistical reference, immediately assume a startling significance.

"The fifth industry of America, the Fifth Estate of the U. S. A.!" There is a meaningful statement!

The most optimistic and daring dreams of the Edison pioneers when they turned the first crude camera in the embryonic and still experimental studio at Orange, New Jersey, in 1893, have been realized and discarded for limitless ideals, resultant with the growth of the business and the art of the screen. It is noteworthy to chronicle the striking similarity in the comparative development that necessarily affected both the motion picture industry and the Edison studio in the sturdy strides of the progress of the perpendicular stage.



The first motion picture studio in the United States, built upon wheels and called "The Black Maria" because of its epidermis of tarred paper. The acorn planted in 1893 from which grew the present Edison studios at Orange, New Jersey.

As wide a stroke as the industry pulls from production to projection, the Edison master touch is ever in evidence. If the wizard had never become interested in the actual production of motion pictures, he would, nevertheless, have been the inspiration of the industry—the man who gave the world the motion picture.

The tireless application of a master mechanician developed the first simple projection machine through a score of years to the present Edison super-kinetoscope that now represents the utmost in projection. Demonstrations by Thomas A. Edison have proven finally that steady projection can be obtained through the employment of the three-blade shutter, giving alternately sixty degrees light and sixty degrees dark, which is ideal when revolving at normal speed in ratio to sixteen pictures per second. This innovation has made the screen absolutely flickerless. Probably no single improvement in the mechanics of the presentation of picture dramas is of more importance than this wiping out of the jerk and flicker from the screen.

This is an age of the printshop and picture. The world is educated, entertained, and carries on its business by the aid of the printed word. Everybody reads and as a result of the continual perusal of lines of black characters upon white paper, the eyes of the races are becoming more and more sensitive, more and more enervated, particularly among dwellers in the cities. As a result, motion pictures had from their birth to fight against the flicker.

The first films were decidedly hard on the eyes. And exaggerated hearsay added to the fact made the struggle of active photography at this particular angle so much the harder. Most people were rather wary of anything that had the reputation of being "hard on the eyes." And even today, when the Edison three-blade shutter had made possible steady and smoothly flowing dramas of the film, many people feel, or imagine they feel, an optical strain from an evening before the screen. This, however, does not signify anything of great importance, as any use of the eyes necessarily means more or less fatigue. The Edison Super-Kinetoscope has accomplished projection as nearly perfect as it appears possible to achieve at the present day.

Long before the actor thought of scorning the screen as a vocation, an inspired mind had reached a determination to launch a wonderful invention, and the same Edisonian genius had sufficient confidence in its discernment to erect the first practically equipped motion picture studio, which stands today at Orange, New Jersey, the definite starting point of an all-absorbing craft—the acorn from which grew the great oak of the industry of today.

The studio was built near Mr. Edison's experimental laboratory, and was a wooden structure covered with tar paper from which it derived its name "The Black Maria." The entire studio was built on a truck, so that it could be moved from place to place, and was mounted on a turntable, so that with the added advantage of a removable roof, it was convenient to obtain the sunlight from any angle. The initial subjects were education, for Mr. Edison believed and still holds to his belief that in the final analysis the effective permanency of the motion picture could only be obtained through the intelligent production and distribution of subjects of a distinct educational value.

At the realization of the immediate and spontaneous success of the endeavor, the serious purpose and progressive application of the prospectors resulted in the construction, in 1905, of the present Edison studio, at Decatur avenue and Oliver place, Bedford Park, New York.

In March, 1914, a fire seriously damaged the Edison studios, destroying offices, film storerooms, projecting rooms, dressing rooms. The total damage was estimated at about $50,000.

The work of bringing order out of chaos was begun even before the flames were entirely extinguished and provisions were made for the continuance of the established schedule of releases. Luckily, the fire destroyed only the central stages and property rooms, leaving sufficient "floor" for the making of the average interior scene. Manager Plimpton, who was about to sail for Europe the morning of the fire, drove to the ruined studios and began rearrangement plans immediately.

To aid in the emergency the Biograph Company generously turned over to the Edison forces its Fourteenth street studio.

An interesting sidelight on the 1914 fire is found in the fact that the players and other employes risked their lives in saving valuable equipment, films, scenarios, and so on. The spirit which permeates the Edison company to this day is expressed in the telegram sent after the fire by Thomas A. Edison, who was in Florida at the time:

> I learn that the artists, at great risk to themselves, helped to save all they could. This is very fine. I appreciate it. We are all one big family, anyway.

Since this fire the demands of an increasing production have necessitated an almost continual enlargement, until today the Edison studio enjoys a distinction that results with proficient adaptability.

From the time when actors of reputation thought it only in keeping with their dignity to change their names to their screen portrayals until now when stage stars ardently seek screen reputations, the Edison studio has expanded in exact ratio with the industry.

Today, with the motion picture the fifth American industry, the Edison studio has at its helm Manager Leonard W. McChesney, whose progressiveness, energy and keen commercial sense distinguish him among the captains of the craft. Like the business itself, Mr. McChesney's youth gives promise of a boundless success —an illimitable horizon for industrial expression. Having studied the screen from every angle in actual experience and applied diligence, Mr. McChesney has gained a broad knowledge from which his severe penetration draws the formula for success. His unusual analytical powers enable him to see the possibilities of every angle of the business.

Mr. McChesney has gathered around him a studio staff that combines the qualities of creative production with commercial balance.

It includes Director General Frank Smithson, whose ability to sense the public pulse equals his reputation of being an efficient disciplinarian; and Directors Richard Ridgely, John H. Collins, Benjamin J. Turbett and Burton George, whose individual productions are highly artistic creations.

Adolph F. Gall, whose widely traveled experience is of great value in almost every branch of the motion picture production, is the technical director and negative expert.

E. H. Griffith, at the head of the scenario department, is one of the most promising of the younger group of successful script men in making adaptations and in writing original manuscripts, as well as in directing the work of the department.

John Theiss, the master of analysis, takes care of the mechanical supervision and has direct charge of the camera force.

Bernard J. Durning, who holds the post of stage managership, is a student of technical screencraft, and the responsibility of planning and dressing the sets to maintain the high Edison quality is happily placed in his capacity. B. S. Dawley is the veteran of the cutting and assembly division, and excels with the shears and paste.

The sales, photographic, casting and auditing departments, every branch of the Edison production, co-operate to the best advantage under the influence of progress and the enthusiasm of Leonard W. McChesney's personality.

The scenic and carpentry units are composed of the most experienced and skilled craftsmen. The dressing rooms are conveniently arranged and offer a comfortable accommodation for some two hundred artists. The property rooms catalogue every conceivable article. The wardrobe includes character wardrobe, costumes of every period, in addition to a varied assortment of modern gowns of every description that are ever undergoing substitution at the commanding nod of Dame Fashion.

The electrical department embraces innumerable overhead carbons, an army of side lights, spots, and baby spots, et cetera, the intelligent blending of which is so instrumental in determining the perfect photography that marks the Edison production. The cutting, assembling and developing rooms are modern in every effect.

The projection room is equipped with an Edison Super-Kinetoscope that shows the Edison production to its most critical advantage. This little "professional theater" has a seating capacity of two hundred and fifty. The feature of the Edison projection room is the installation of three Edison dictating machines upon which the manager and directors record their criticisms with facile expression, while viewing the production.

The studio floor spaces five stages, in which as many directors may work simultaneously in comfort. Here again the broad invention of Thomas A. Edison is utilized. In taking scenes, the Edison diamond disc records have been instrumental in moulding and setting an atmosphere that is a wonderful aid to creative expression. The artist that is not further affected to inspiration by music is not enrolled in the Edison company. In a summation of its facilities, the mechanical equipment of the Edison studio represents one of the most complete and efficient in picturedom.

This efficient equipment, which stamps the most advantageous environment, combined with an atmosphere of cultured endeavor, makes the Edison studio an ideal setting for the creative work of the company of excellent artists that form the Edison stock company.

So, the Edison studio, through the eyes of Manager

The imposing new Edison building of today.

Manager Leonard W. McChesney. Edison.

Edison Director-General, Frank Smithson.

McChesney, is privileged to contemplate an enviable position in the world of the motion picture. The present chapter in the development of the business culminates in the realization that new fields for cultivation are continually opening within the camera lines, and the Edison studio appreciates the personal pride it feels in the fact that the fifth industry of America found its cradle in the inventive genius of Thomas A. Edison.

At the beginning of the construction of the great electrical studio at Universal City last November, President Laemmle of the Universal company invited Mr. Edison to lay the cornerstone.

The great inventor gladly accepted and performed the honorary ceremony before a huge crowd who cheered wildly the veteran of the motion picture, who thus marked another epoch of progress of the industry in whose birth and development he has been so important a factor.

Had it not been for Edison's peculiar mentality, which refuses to recognize anything as impossible, the production of motion pictures would certainly have been delayed for years, if not for all time. The suggestion of the art of the photoplay was original with him.

The status of the work which had been done when Edison entered the field was simply that it had been recognized that if a series of instantaneous photographs of a moving object could be secured at a very high rate, they might be passed before the eye and give the effect of a reproduction of the actual movements.

Edison's first motion picture camera consisted in the main of a sensitized cylinder about the size of a phonograph record. Upon this the attempt was made to secure the microscopic photographs, arranged spirally. The cylinder was to be given an intermittent movement so as to be at rest during each exposure. Reproductions were to be made the same way, positive prints being observed through a magnifying glass.

From this germ of a beginning Thomas A. Edison has generated and perpetuated what has been designated the only new form of art since the age of Pericles. The Edison studios of today are only inadequate concrete manifestations of the achievements of Thomas A. Edison in the present day Edison companies.

From a slight cold, which he had neglected for his business, Mr. Spiegel contracted pneumonia and passed away after a courageous battle against the dread disease and a severe attack of grippe at the same time. His office at the film organization has been assumed by William A. Brady.

Mr. Spiegel, although but a few days over thirty-one years of age, was one of the country's prominent business men. A few years ago, in the back room of his father's furniture store at 126 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, he began selling furniture and house furnishings by mail order. He conceived the advantages of selling by mail order and allowing for payment on the period plan. His success is best seen in the extensive plants of the Spiegel May Stern Company, Martha Lane Adams Company, the Clement Company and American Ladies Tailoring Company, located at 1061 West 35th street, Chicago. The plants occupy six city blocks and employ permanently three thousand people. His genius for organization and his grasp on the immensities of great businesses established him as a foremost commercial figure in the western metropolis and his grasp upon the new industry, motion pictures, was being recognized in the industry as one of the surest means of eventually bringing order out of the chaos at present existing in the field.

The merchandising propensities of the Spiegel enterprises can be understood when it is known that they have over two million customers a year on their books.

Burial of Mr. Spiegel took place in Chicago, his former home.

Mutual Films Stolen

Exhibitors managing five theaters in the vicinity of Chicago received a disappointment last week. The mental drinking of the wormwood was, however, brief, thanks to the prompt action of the North Dearborn street branch of the Chicago Mutual exchange.

That office was making its usual shipments of films to exhibitors one morning when it became the victim of the theft of thirty-two reels of film. The Mutual delivery wagon was drawn up before the building and employees were in the process of loading on the reels to be shipped to the theaters by express. While it was left alone for a few moments the wagon and its precious cargo suddenly disappeared.

The Mutual exhibitors who were expecting the films of course swept the horizon for them in vain, but their suspense was soon relieved by the arrival of substitute films rushed to their destination by the Mutual office. The houses kept in temporary suspense over the delay of the coming Mutuals were the Lyceum of Peoria, Illinois; the Willard, of Michigan City, Indiana; the Idle Hour, Canton, Illinois; the Grand of Rock Falls, Illinois; and the Court Theater of Sycamore, Illinois.

No trace of the missing films has as yet been found. Following are the names of the plays represented, with their numbers:

4291	"A Necklace of Pearls"	Thanhouser
4380-81-82	"In the Name of the Law"	Thanhouser
4324-25-26	"Their Last Performance"	Thanhouser
4449-50-51	"The Extra Man and the Milk Fed Lion"	Mustang
4401-02	"The Gamble"	American
4340	"Jerry's Revenge"	Cubs
4350	"The Optimistic Oriental Occults"	Falstaff
4412	"Sammy's Dough-Full Romance"	Vogue
4423	"Lucky Larry's Lady Love"	Falstaff
4266	"The Conductor's Classy Champion"	Falstaff
62 M. P.	"Mill on the Floss"	Thanhouser
26 M. P.	"Up from the Depths"	Reliance
4593-94-95	"Snow Stuff"	American
4456	"Fickle Madge"	Vogue

It is probable that, somewhere, some time, an attempt will be made to dispose of these films to exchanges or exhibitors. Any notice of such action should be given to the Chicago branch of the Mutual company.

Serve Tea with Pictures

Have you ever considered serving tea to the afternoon patrons of your theater?

It sounds like the height of something to propose such a service to motion picture goers in this country, but the practice is common among British theaters, according to our valued contemporary, The Bioscope, of London. That publication states that the serving of afternoon tea is often the factor which determines the house which women attend and that managers should "give their serious attention" to this detail.

The Kensington theater, "presided over by J. E. Park," has originated a method of serving the feminine beverage upon small trays which hook over the backs of the seats, forming a tiny temporary table. In his house organ Mr. Park advertises his house as the place "where refreshing tea and excellent pictures can be enjoyed in absolute comfort."

Villagers Want to "Act"

After waiting ten days at Franklin, Pa., for the sun to shine, Edgar Lewis and his company have finally begun to work on the exterior scenes of "The Toilers," a Lubin V. L. S. E. feature. This is the first moving picture company to visit Franklin, and its coming has created no end of excitement. The response to an advertisement Mr. Lewis placed in the local papers for extras would indicate that many "Franklinites" consider themselves natural born moving picture actors.

In honor of Mr. Lewis' visit, the Orpheum theater is running "The Great Divide" and the Princess theater "The Bondman," both of which were directed by him.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

MY APPEAL for more specific questions seems to have had its results for recently the theater men have been careful to tell me just exactly what they want to know. This is important to me right now for I'm kept rather busy opening my new theater in New York and watching details to see that everything runs smoothly. However I will try to answer these few questions this week and promise more time in future issues.

13—My theater is on a good business street in the outlying district of a large city. I have been running it for five years last February. I know most of my patrons personally. Recently two new theaters have been built in my section—one a block away, the other two and a half blocks. We all charge ten cents; but they have more money invested and more luxurious theaters and they are gradually getting my business away from me. I have only managed to put away a little over four thousand dollars but I am willing to spend that if I can get my trade back on a fair competitive basis. What should I do?

In the first place don't wory. Don't lose the smile that in your five years of work has made you acquainted with nearly all of your patrons. Then, having found yourself again, study your theater, your competitors, their theaters, your patrons and their patrons.

Probably you have done these things already. If you have you are ready to get to work. In the five years you have been in the business you have watched the film industry grow out of its swaddling clothes. It probably has moved you along with it. Have you used it as a pacemaker or have you tried to get ahead of it?

You have watched your patrons and their children grow up. They have been educated to demand better and better pictures. Have you anticipated this demand by presenting the best photoplays obtainable for the money you had to spend? You have deafened them with a noisy piano and you have added a trap drummer. Possibly you have seen far ahead enough to put in a good organ. Possibly you have a little orchestra, but is it a good orchestra? Are the members of the orchestra musicians? Or are all the musicians in the theaters of your competitors?

Are you using the same projection methods that served their purpose when you first opened the house? Is your house a remodelled store and is the lobby jammed with flaring posters? Are your theater chairs comfortable? And is your theater absolutely clean?

You see I am going at your questions with questions of my own—Yankee fashion—but I believe you can understand better if we talk to each other that way. While four thousand dollars won't go very far toward a new house, your banker must know you pretty well by this time. The real estate owner with whom you have been doing business must have confidence in you after five years in the same location. For those two reasons alone you should be able to have a real theater of your own in a very short time. And if you have a store front house it seems to me that your move should be a better house than either of your competitors.

Bu[illegible] you tear down look around a bit. Which[illegible]e population been moving? Perhaps you c[illegible]a block farther away from your competitors and increase your business. There may be a piece of land that could be obtained for less ground rental than the lot your present theater occupies. Ask your landlord. Let him in on it. He might be able to dispose of your lease to advantage for other business purposes and obtain a better site for the new house. Meantime you could be running your present theater—unless it is losing money now. Undoubtedly your banker would loan you the money to build. His business is making money just as yours is and loaning money on good security is his method. He might even want an interest in the theater with you. The three of you—landlord, banker and yourself—might organize a company to build a theater that would defy competition for years to come. Now is your problem a difficult one to solve?

And all the while don't forget to keep in touch with your patrons. They were your friends in the old store-front days and they want to see you prosper and present the kind of shows they want to see. Get busy and look around. Read Terry Ramsaye's article in MOTOGRAPHY dated April 15 (page 863) and learn how one theater owner keeps in touch with his patrons. Also read "What Theater Men Are Doing" in each issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

14—Is there any rule for determining the proper investment for a picture theater in a "city" of 1,000 population in a good farming center in Southern Michigan? It seems to me foolish to put very much money into a theater for such a small place; still I want to make the house as good as I can. Lots of the people here take the interurban and go fifteen miles to see a ten-cent show. Most of the population walk up and down the main street every night and I think they would be steady patrons. It is not exactly a wealthy community—few automobiles and practically no amusements.

Here is an opportunity for a small and artistic house which should make a good return on the investment if some judgment is used in design and equipment. In the first place I wouldn't advise a house larger than 400 seats, all on one floor graduating easily to the sidewalk. The house should be constructed as nearly fireproof as possible and the front should be in good taste—not gaudy—and attractive. With little or no competition in the amusement line, the theater, if artistically decorated and lighted on the front, should be the most attractive place on the main street.

The interior should be arranged for comfort. The lighting should be soft, yet sufficient for safety. The projection should be as nearly perfect as possible. But with all that the investment can be comparatively small. A good architect can give you the cost in your own territory much easier than can I for these figures vary in various localities.

Now about getting the money back with a profit. It seems to me that with evening shows and a matinee especially for women and children on Saturdays, a four hundred seat house should be well filled most of the time and if you give them good pictures you can get a minimum of ten cents with little trouble, especially as you expect no picture competition. But give good pictures. It is more profitable in the long run.

15—I have heard something about a projection machine that moves the film continuously. It works with mirrors and it is said it works without any flicker on the screen at all. I am interested because the machine I have, a ..... of 1911, is almost worn out. Can you tell me anything about this new machine?

While the machine you probably have in mind is interesting from a laboratory point of study, my advice to you would be to stick to the standard advertised projection machines. The type you mention seems to have possibilities but for the present it is not satisfactory because it does not seem to have the "staying qualities" of the standard makes. And as these known machines are virtually flickerless, it would not pay you to experiment.

16—Our climate here is very cold in winter and very hot in summer. My heating and ventilating systems are all right and the house is always comfortable but I cannot seem to get a crowd out except when it is pleasant. The population is about 11,000 and mine is the only good theater. I seat 550 and when the weather is nice I "hold 'em out" but when it isn't I lose money. Do you think it possible to make a show so interesting and attractive that people will face discomfort to come? I would like to know your experience in this line.

I think your trouble must be in the show. The photoplay's the thing, always has been my contention in running a motion picture theater. True, there are many days when people will not attend the best show in the world but I contend that weather will not keep them home when they know a good show is booked. It is up to you to have a good show all of the time as you cannot gamble on the weather with any degree of success. You need box office plays and I should say that you are well situated to book them for two and three days at a time. Plays that make the people talk are what you need. With a population of 11,000 and your 550-seat house the best theater, you could show a high-class picture three nights to capacity if you advertised it well and kept in close touch with the people of your city. You have a wonderful chance to "make a killing" but you must let the people know you have something before you can induce them to put on their rubbers and borrow umbrellas. Advertise and keep at it.

Edison Reappears in General

The General Film Company announces that beginning April 25 Edison will again start releasing through the regular service of the General Film.

Confirming this, the Edison company says:

"The elapsed time since we discontinued releasing through the General Film Company has given us a long-hoped-for opportunity to 'get our breath,' so to speak; to make certain necessary changes in our producing organization; to secure a new and better line of stories; to improve our mechanical facilities—in short, to 'clean house' and prepare for a fresh start. Of the results of our period of apparent idleness we are justifiably proud."

Film Fire Costs $150,000

Fire, which was as spectacular as though it had been arranged especially for the camera, last week destroyed the studio and manufacturing plant of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, 20 East Herman street, Germantown, Pa. The loss, estimated by J. Burton Mustin, treasurer and general manager of the company, is between $140,000 and $150,000.

Thousands of dollars' worth of completed motion picture films were saved because they were stored in fireproof vaults in buildings distant from the main building, which was destroyed. Among the contents of the building were thousands of dollars' worth of aniline dyes, used for coloring films, which cannot be replaced because of the war.

Thanhouser to Give Ball

The nucleus of a very commendable movement for film folk is the forthcoming Thanhouser minstrel show and ball at Germania Hall, New Rochelle, on Thursday, April 27.

The proceeds of the affair will make the foundation for the Thanhouser Relief Fund. This fund will be used for the relief of any players who in their work at the New Rochelle studio are either incapacitated or otherwise in need of aid. This is entirely separate and apart from any benefits that may accrue to a performer by virtue of accident or liability insurance.

Florence La Badie, escorted by Mayor Griffing of New Rochelle, will head the grand promenade, which will be made up of the film stars who attend. She will also take part in an old time minstrel torch light parade through the streets of New Rochelle the night before the ball. Gladys Hulette will be there in her usual radiance, and other players who will make the ball a memorable occasion are Grace De Carlton, Kathryn Adams, Ethyle Cooke, Carey Hastings, Gladys Leslie, Doris Grey, Isolde Illian and Frances Keyes.

Mary Pickford in New Play

On April 10 Paramount released "The Eternal Grind," the vehicle for Mary Pickford which followed "Poor Little Peppina."

The new story deals with the hardships of a factory girl who enjoys the responsibility of caring for two younger sisters. The play is said to differ from other Pickford subjects in that it depicts a young girl of a very determined character who runs things to suit herself.

"The Eternal Grind" was directed by John B. O'Brien who produced "The Foundling" in which Miss Pickford starred. To the development of the note of personal appeal there has been added to this film many big factory scenes, among them a panic caused by the cave-in of the factory floor, in which Mary's lover is seriously injured.

In support of the star there appear several well-known players, among them John Bowers, Robert Cain, Loretta Blake, Dorothy West and J. Albert Hall.

Ruth Stonehouse with Universal

Ruth Stonehouse, who has been associated with Essanay for the past five years, has gone to Universal City. She has signatured a Universal contract calling for a year's playing at a generous stipend. Her first work will be in "Peg o' the Ring," which is now in the making, with Eddie Polo, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in the other leading roles.

Jacques Jaccard is directing the play.

An employment agency for those engaged in the motion picture industry has been incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, for $10,000. The title of the concern is to be the Amalgamated Photoplay Service, Inc. The incorporators are J. P. Phillips, W. H. Wooley and S. Orr.

What We Are Trying to Do

BY RUPERT HUGHES

THE best that the motion pictures have achieved is mighty good. To deny this is to criticize yourself rather than the pictures; to substitute stubbornness for intelligence. The worst that the worst motion pictures have done is mighty bad. Yet it is no worse than the worst that has been done in the other arts. Nothing could be.

The cameramobile has opened long-closed worlds of human life to expression; it has made possible the picturing of our existence in ways that never have been, never could have been, seized and presented by any other art.

In a few years the moving picture has passed through all the phases that older arts were centuries in passing through. It has had the advantage of their attainments and the help of science and immense popularity. Under the stimulus of occasional pieces of brilliant workmanship, the audience has itself grown better and better, promoting itself every year to higher and higher demands; and offering a glorious opportunity for story tellers who wish to enlarge their resources and get constantly closer to real life.

The demand for genuine art, craftsmanship, imagination, observation, drama, comedy, literature, is being supplied more and more honorably. In the shorter forms, the one-reel, two-reel, five-reel pictures and the feature films that occupy a whole evening, some of the creators have accomplished splendid things that would adorn any art.

There is a general feeling that the serials have not done their opportunities full justice. The difficulties and anxieties are great and there is a natural temptation to feel that in a continued story the interest can only be held by piling crimes on mysteries and mysteries on crimes. As a matter of fact, there is nothing that tires people quicker than an overdose of excitement. Too many killings are more wearisome than none at all. The European war has proven this.

Some of the directors seem to be convinced that when a picture begins to drag, the only way to enliven it is to push a motor off a cliff or make the villain a little more devilish than before. As a matter of fact, the moment any story begins to drag, the surest way to get the audience back is to get back to where the audience is—on the solid ground of humanity.

With a few exceptions, the serials that have been offered to us thus far have been largely made up of mysteries that were too artificial to interest us long. In such films incidents that could not conceivably occur happen to people who could not possibly exist. Grotesque gorillas of crime who would be clubbed to death on sight by the first policeman, steal about the city streets unnoticed, take cabs without difficulty, enter millionaires' homes with ease and steal their daughters and their ducats. They fight ludicrous battles, put on and take off disguises that could deceive nobody, and make use of marvelous machines that science never heard of. They are everywhere and nowhere at the same time and never pause to explain how they got from one place to another.

The managers may like these concoctions, but the audiences seem to endure them because they must in order to get to see the next film. I have watched audiences of all sorts sit puzzled and annoyed by the impossibilities; they have laughed or yawned aloud at the scenes of most blood-curdling intent. The same audience would sit up and respond with laughter, tears and applause to a film in which real emotions were portrayed with a basis of human possibility.

Invitations to write such serials have been extended to me, as to most other authors, and very glittering terms offered. But I was not interested.

When, however, an opportunity came to write a serial for Miss Billie Burke, the situation was different. She is not only a famous beauty, but an actress of unusually thorough schooling and magnetism, high spirit and peculiarly human appeal. She has also an extraordinarily flexible pantomimic gift, and what is known as "screen value," to a degree that might be called "screen genius."

With great enthusiasm I undertook the task, in collaboration with my wife, who has been of greatest help to me in my other work. We have omitted the usual master criminals, the secret panels and ghoulish gangs. We have laid most of the scenes in an atmosphere of wealth and beauty, but we have tried to avoid the usual ridiculous millionaires of the film. Our heroine has adventures and we hope that they will be interesting—we know that they are not impossible.

We have tried to carry a fascinating young girl of today through a succession of events that might happen to a young girl of her character. We have tried to show her character in all its moods and to make her motives and the motives of those about her human and convincing. And to play out the story in scenes that picture our life most charmingly and most vividly.

In this ambition we have been aided and guided with the utmost enthusiasm by the star herself, by the important and experienced people who are backing the enormous enterprise, by the gifted director and by a splendid company.

We are sure that we have done nothing to be ashamed of. In fact, we have all taken sincere pride in building for the public a big, honest, beautiful, brilliant structure in which everybody concerned has done the best that he or she could do.

"Feathertop" is Gaumont's second Mutual Masterpicture release for April. It is scheduled for April 17. This five-reel feature will be the second done by Miss Marguerite Courtot. In her support are Sydney Mason, her leading man, John Reinhard, Mathilde Baring, James Levering, Gerald Griffin, and Charles Graham.

UNIVERSAL PRESENTS TROPHY

Trade Racing Association to Stage Unusual Twenty-four Hour Race in June for Splendid Silver Cup

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has presented to the Trade Racing Association of New York City what is said to be the finest trophy ever given in an automobile race. The Universal trophy will become the temporary property of the winner in the twenty-four hour stock chassis automobile race which the racing association will stage on the Sheepshead Bay speedway on June 16 and 17.

The Universal Trophy.

According to the Trade Racing Association, it would hesitate at this time to undertake the duties connected with this movement, were it not for the fact, that it is able to present to the manufacturers who participate in this enterprise with it a valuable national advertising campaign to advance the interests of the motor car.

Before accepting this responsibility in the interests of the New York trade, the Trade Racing Association approached Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The negotiations with Mr. Laemmle resulted in his putting up a trophy manufactured by Black, Starr & Frost which is to be contested for, under a deed of gift for stock chassis cars, in twenty-four hour events.

Together with this, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will take moving pictures of all the entrants to be displayed on the screens throughout the United States who are under contract for Universal service.

Further Mr. Laemmle places at the disposal of the entrant his scenario and publicity departments to assist in an attractive presentation of the car. He is making arrangements for the Animated Weekly to give considerable space in advance of the race, scenes at the track, entries, et cetera. It is also the intention of the Universal to produce a five-reel moving picture drama the vital action in which will be hinged on, or will center around the actual race.

The race will start at ten o'clock Friday evening, June 16, and will finish the same time Saturday evening, June 17. The officials are considering a preliminary event to be known as a "Star Race." The entrants in this event will be moving picture stars, and it is hoped that King Baggot, Hobart Henley, Ben Wilson and Harry Benham will enter their cars and compete for the handsome trophy, which Starr and Frost are putting up for this particular race.

In addition to the Universal Film Trophy, which will be the grand prize, the Trade Racing Association are going to give away ten thousand dollars in cash prizes. Every effort will be made to smash all speed records.

The Universal Film trophy is made of solid silver and stands thirty-six inches high, and is fifty-two inches around the base. It rests on a base of Italian marble. Every portion of it was made by hand, and it represents the Universal trade mark.

"BATTLE CRY" STILL HUMMING

Big V. L. S. E. Feature Depicting Invasion of America Still Breaking Records in Various Corners of the Country

That the famous V. L. S. E. production, "The Battle Cry of Peace," continues to act as a magnet in the box office, is made manifest by the telegrams and letters received daily at V. L. S. E. headquarters from exhibitors throughout the country. Not only in the big centers, but in the smaller towns where it is shown, does the great spectacle tax the resources of the picture houses to accommodate audiences, as is illustrated by the experience of an exhibitor in Masontown, Pa., a town of 950 people. The seating capacity of the picture theater there is 300.

Recently, the manager of the house booked "The Battle Cry of Peace" for one day, at more than double the price he had ever paid for any other production. He also arranged for a ten-piece orchestra to furnish suitable music, and in order to meet expenses, announced a price schedule of from 25 to 75 cents admission.

Despite the advanced scale of charges an official estimate set the attendance for one day at 1,600, or 700 more than the community's total population. Farmers know a good thing—when it's properly advertised.

"The Battle Cry" was booked at the Grange Theater, Cashmere, Washington, for one day, April 10. This theater is in the heart of the noted apple growing district of the Wenatchee Valley and many wealthy farmers drive in to see the shows. Three weeks before the date of the showing of the big war film, R. M. Parrish, manager of the Grange, called up the Seattle branch of the V. L. S. E. over the long distance telephone and stated that the entire house was sold out—and the performance more than 20 days away. He booked the feature for two additional days.

Pittsburgh Condemns Censorship

That motion picture censorship is a nuisance, a menace to a gigantic industry, un-American and certain to be short-lived, was declared in the mass meeting held last week in the Pitt theater, under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Screen Club. Censorship was ridiculed as "conceived in iniquity, born in sin and dying in disgrace."

"The motion picture industry is an educator, a newspaper and a public forum," said Jacob W. Binder of New York, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. "The President placed his stamp of approval on the industry at our recent national dinner in New York."

Frederick J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, said: "The citizens are the only right and competent judges."

Chaplin Makes "The Floorwalker"

TO BE READY MAY 15

"THE FLOORWALKER" is the first of the new Mutual-Chaplins. Mr. Chaplin and his company have started to work at the studios in Hollywood, Cal. They are working up material which Chaplin gathered in a certain big New York department store while he was in the east in connection with the signing of his $670,000 contract. "The Floorwalker" gives Chaplin a role that fits him like his alleged moustache. The script is from the pen of Vincent Bryan, who utilizes the material and ideas which Chaplin hoards in his mental "trick bag."

"The Floorwalker" will be released according to schedule on May 15. This and the following Mutual-Chaplins will be in two reels. Bookings have been signed with exhibitors in all parts of the country and the demand is growing as release date nears. Seventy-five prints of this picture will be used in the city of New York alone to cover the present booking schedules.

A cast of players with wide experience in high class film comedy will support Chaplin in this and subsequent releases. Edna Purviance, who will play leads opposite Mr. Chaplin, will be remembered for her excellent portrayal of similar roles with Chaplin for Essanay. Miss Purviance is a blonde, twenty years old. She is a graduate of Vassar college. While appearing in an amateur performance for charity at San Francisco she was discovered by Mr. Chaplin. He was so attracted by her beauty and ability that he offered her a place in his company, which she accepted and which she has since filled with much success. During the short time she has been appearing in film productions, she has made a host of friends and already has a big following. The report that Miss Purviance was a stenographer in San Francisco she wishes denied as untrue. She is the daughter of a prominent Nevada man.

Another player of note in the Chaplin company is Charlotte Mineau, a titian-haired Junoesque beauty who was with Essanay for five years and who, for the last six months, has been supporting Otis Harlan in the picturization of the Hoyt farces at the Selig studios. Miss Mineau was born in Bordeaux, France, and educated at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Paris. Ingenue roles will be played by Leota Bryan, who attained fame in musical comedy and with the La Salle Theater stock company of Chicago.

A familiar figure in Chaplin comedies, Leo White, was born in Manchester, England, in 1886. His first stage appearance was with the Gus Edwards Gaiety Theater Company, London. He was in the original Mlle. Modiste Company with Fritzi Scheff. Eric Campbell, who will play heavies, left "Pom Pom," which is now one of the biggest musical hits of the season, to join the Chaplin company. He was for seven years with the Lyric Theater stock company of London and played in several productions under the management of Klaw & Erlanger in this country. He wrote and produced film comedies for the London Film Company in England. Lloyd Bacon, of the Mutual-Chaplin Company, was educated at the Jesuit College, Santa Clara, Cal. He has appeared in stock for several seasons and entered the picture field last year. William Foster, considered one of the best cameramen in the business, will be head cameraman. He was with the Selig studios for three years and went to the coast in 1912 with the Universal. Roland Tetherch will be his assistant.

Beautiful and artistic exterior scenes are shown in "Feathertop," forthcoming Gaumont-Mutual "masterpicture, de luxe edition," based partially on the story of the same name by Nathanial Hawthorne. Director Henry Vernot, who was brought from France for the specific purpose of directing the Gaumont-Mutual features starring Marguerite Courtot, obtained the consent of one of the nation's wealthiest men to use his beautiful winter home just on the outskirts of Jacksonville, Fla., for this feature.

"SOCIAL" FILM READY

"The Heart of New York" About to Be Released by the B. S. Moss Motion Pictures Corporation

"The Heart of New York," the new feature to be distributed in New York and northern New Jersey by the B. S. Moss Motion Pictures Corporation, treats on the white slave traffic, but does it in a new and admirable manner which does not aim for cheap appeal.

The film has been passed by the Board of Reviews and now all that stands between the picture and the exhibitors is the approval of the commissioner of licenses.

"The Heart of New York" unwinds with an absorbing story which strikes home with facts regarding the social conditions surrounding the working girl. The play really is a powerful lesson in the form of entertainment. The capable cast is headed by Robert T. Haines, the former Belasco leading man.

An interesting incident in connection with "The Heart of New York" was the fact that it sailed along smoothly through the various authorities until it was learned that the sponsor, Walter MacNamara, had been the author of "Traffic in Souls," which caused such a furore among the New York police two years ago.

One of the most completely detailed interior sets ever made for a film will be seen in the new play now being made at Ince's Culver City studios featuring the powerful Frank Keenan. The picture shows the "force" working out the acting of a detail of the story.

AT FINE ARTS STUDIO

Number of Unchristened Plays in the Making, at the Griffith Corner of Triangle, with Several Welcome Players

Among the shadows of the thousands of photoplay theaters the country over which are showing Triangle plays will soon appear such welcome shining lights as Norma Talmadge, Lillian Gish, Douglas Fairbanks, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Harron and Mae Marsh in brand-new Fine Arts plays.

"Playmates" is the name of Norma Talmadge's new story, which deals with a girl with a "past." With Miss Talmadge will appear Ralph Lewis, who was Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," Eugene Pallette and the "Fine Arts kiddies."

A high-bred, spirited Kentucky girl who is taught to be snobbish by her parents, is the next characterization to occupy Lillian Gish's attention. Miss Gish is well remembered from "The Birth of a Nation," "The Lily and the Rose" and other Triangle plays. Her new film has not as yet been christened.

Everybody knows that Douglas Fairbanks is an athlete and a fighter, from his work in "His Picture in the Papers" and other strenuous films. In his coming release Fairbanks and W. E. Lowery are said to spend all of ten minutes throwing chairs and other gentle weapons and massaging each other generally. The title of the new one is not yet out of the bag.

But the new Mae Marsh-Robert Harron picture has a name—"A Child of the Paris Streets," which, by the way, was changed from "The Little Apache." It seems that the first baptism didn't take, as is often the case in real life. The action of the play is laid entirely in the Momarte section of Paris and the settings are wonderfully true to the real "Latin" stuff in the French capital.

Exhibitors and patrons who enjoyed the wonderfully accurate and convincing work of Wilfred Lucas in "Acquitted" will welcome the announcement of his appearance in a new Fine Arts film which is as yet sans title. With Mr. Lucas will be the capable team of Mae Marsh and Robert Harron. These three once played together under Griffith in Biograph days.

Dorothy Gish is playing hookey. She has been given a vacation of three weeks by the Triangle company. And considering her delightful and conscientious work in "Jordan Is a Hard Road," "Betty of Graystone," "Little Meena's Romance" and "Susan Rocks the Boat," it would seem that she deserves it. A new play for her is on the scenario department fire.

GAUMONT BACK TO FRANCE

Head of the Societe des Establissements Gaumont of Paris Sails Optimistic After Investigating Conditions Here

Leon Gaumont, head of the great firm of Societe des Etablissements Gaumont of Paris, who has been visiting America since March 13, sailed for Europe on the American liner New York on April 8. Mr. Gaumont spent only three weeks in New York, but he made detailed investigation of conditions and carried back to Europe a thorough understanding of the present status of the film industry in America.

"My stay in the United States has not been so prolonged as I might wish," said Mr. Gaumont, just before sailing, "but after having transacted my business here and after having met President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, through which Gaumont photodramas are released, I thought it best to return immediately to France. I came to America somewhat influenced by what I had been reading of unsettled conditions here. I am going home thoroughly satisfied with conditions as they apply to my own interests and the Mutual Film Corporation, and highly optimistic for the future.

"Present conditions are natural, inevitable. My own companies, however, are in excellent condition to meet any changed circumstances brought about by economic demands. In addition to the Gaumont photodrama work done in America, at the Gaumont laboratories, Flushing, N. Y., we also edit and manufacture the Mutual Weekly and the interesting split-reel which contains the scenic series, "See America First," and the Kartoon Komics animated by Cartoonist Harry Palmer.

"This is my first trip since the war started. I hope that it will be possible for me to get over again next season."

Brooklyn Exhibitors Form Association

Forty-three live exhibitors of Brooklyn have formed an association for the purpose of advancing and protecting their business.

A temporary organization was made under the title of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn. The temporary officers elected are William Brandt, president; William Hollender, vice-president; J. E. Lesslebaum, secretary; Julian Loeb, treasurer, and Michael Glynn, sergeant-at-arms.

A constitution was adopted and a committee appointed with the idea in view of applying for a charter for the association as a branch of the New York State Exhibitors' League. In time it is expected that practically all of the 300 managers in Brooklyn will come into the new organization.

Leon Bories Goes to Universal

Leon Bories, formerly manager of the General Film Company, has severed his connection with the latter and will be connected with the California Film Exchange, distributors for the Universal Company. This announcement, which comes through The Rounder of San Francisco, is one of the most important changes made recently in coast film circles.

Screen Nation Works for Fund

ACTORS AND EXHIBITORS CONTRIBUTE

VIEWED with the scrutinizing close-up of charity —a very telling view-point indeed—the motion picture industry again justifies the prominent place which is now given to it in the circles of the dramatic art-business of America.

When it was planned to raise one million dollars for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America the motion picture industry promptly and generously pledged itself to raise one-half of that amount. And it now appears more than likely that that amount will be reached when the campaign is finished. No cause can be more worthy than that of providing for an endowment to take care of the needs of actors and actresses of stage and screen when they have reached the period just preceding their final exit into the scenes beyond.

The force of the great campaign is already being felt in all parts of the country. In the Northwest, the branch committee is most active. Led by F. S. Fountain, of Seattle, Washington, one of the big film men of the West, the motion picture men of the section, big and small, are striving to show the East what they can do. Mr. Fountain says that in the competition of cities on National Tribute Day, May 15, on which a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown will be poured into the fund, the houses of his district will head the list with their donations.

"We are contemplating a number of plans and schemes which among other things comprise a grand ball, getting the big dry goods stores to give part of their advertisement free—to announce National Motion Picture Tribute Day—preliminary tribute entertainments in theaters, two of which will give 75 per cent of the receipts, and the selling of post cards of pictures of stars," says Mr. Fountain. "One theater owner is having printed 10,000 tickets for his house good at any time. These are being sold in stores. A big luncheon at one of the hotels, 50 per cent of the proceeds of which will be given to the fund, and benevolent association entertainments given by such organizations as the Knights of Columbus will net big returns."

All for the Actors' Fund. Lillian Gish, the mayor of Los Angeles and scores of actors break ground for the stadium where "Julius Caesar" will be staged for the benefit of the fund. The man in the white shirt near the farmer is Douglas Fairbanks.

The northwestern campaign covers Washington, Montana, part of Oregon, North Dakota, Wyoming, Idaho and a few cities across the border in the Dominion of Canada.

Middle West Also Working

In the Middle West also the work is booming. John Kunsky, who is the active chairman of the Detroit committee, has thrown the force of his ten big theaters into the campaign in addition to his valuable personal services as the head of the canvass in that district.

Buffalo is preparing for big doings. Chairman Brandon, of the Buffalo Screen Club, is arranging a mammoth grand ball and entertainment to be held in the near future. Besides providing an undoubted large sum for the cause, this affair will tend to awaken the interest of the public in National Tribute Day.

In Philadelphia on April 24 another grand ball and entertainment is to be given by the local committee. The proprietors of the big Philadelphia newspapers have interested themselves in the camgaign and, besides giving it the hearty support of their journals, are serving actively on the various sub-committees of the fund.

In New York last week a fine tribute performance for the cause was given at the Eighty-first Street Theater. On this occasion no less than nineteen motion picture stars appeared in person and were presented to the audience to loud acclaim. Here again the spirit of the film people themselves was shown. Many of the young women came to the theater direct from studios where they had been working hard all day and put in a long evening autographing photographs and selling them to their admirers.

Geraldine Farrar to Sing for Fund

Geraldine Farrar, who has added "Queen of the Films" to her already assured "Queen of the Opera," is the latest recruit among the active workers of the campaign. She has volunteered her services in the "Grand Tribute Matinee," which is to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House on May 16.

This Grand Matinee is to be the biggest performance ever given for any cause anywhere. It comes the day after National Tribute Day. This mammoth performance will thus be the grand final fire-works of the campaign.

Miss Farrar through her double notable association with both the films and opera, will be the bright particular star of the proceedings and the committee in charge promises that she will be backed by the greatest collection of artists ever gathered together on one program.

Entire Proceeds for Fund

Miss Lillian Gish, the Fine Arts star, and Mayor Sebastian broke ground recently in Los Angeles for the mammoth stadium to be built in Beechwood Canyon, Hollywood, where will be staged an elaborate outdoor production of Julius Caesar.

At a signal from Raymond Wells and Tyrone Power, who are directly responsible for the project, Miss Gish pushed the gold spade into the ground and turned the first sod. The ceremony concluded, about 200 actors, headed by Tyrone Power, Frank Keenan, Theodore Roberts and Douglas Fairbanks, the Triangle star, all clad in overalls, cheerfully attacked the earth with picks and shovels.

The stadium will be finished in ample time for the stupendous production of Julius Caesar, to be given May 19, under the auspices of the Hollywood Carnival Association. The entire proceeds from this monster production will be turned over to the Actors' Fund.

The "Iron Claw" company has contributed liberally to the fund. Edward Jose, who is producing the big Pathe serial, collected $100 from his players, cameramen and assistants. Mr. Jose gave $20 of this, Sheldon Lewis $25, Creighton Hale $10, Miss Carey Lee $10, and John Dunn $5. Pearl White put another $10 into this collection which brings her total up to $110.

Pathe's Minneapolis office, at the suggestion of Branch Manager Sampson, has contributed a day's salary to the "Actor's Fund." Every one in the office down to the office boy came in on that basis, and thereby furnished an excellent example to everyone in the trade.

Appeal to Exhibitors

Exhibitors are by no means in the background in the Actors' Fund campaign. Hundreds have pledged themselves to join the country-wide National Tribute Day and upon May 15 to turn over to the committee a share of their receipts.

Motography's issue last week printed the names of several hundred of these live managers who are boosting the good cause along. Other exhibitors who are to join in the Tribute Day scheme or who wish to contribute a separate sum, should notify Motography or J. Stuart Blackton, Treasurer, Locust avenue, New York City. Motography will continue to print the names of contributing exhibitors. Following is a part of the appeal to exhibitors made by the committee in charge of the campaign:

> This is your cue, Mr. Exhibitor, to come through with something more substantial than your well wishes.
> The part the actor plays in keeping your business going is the part the mainspring plays in keeping your watch going. He's more than necessary—he's indispensable. He's the keystone of the motion picture industry, the pivot about which the whole cinema activity functions, from scenario writer to operator. His art indirectly furnishes you and us with our daily bread, and we feel it a welcome obligation to show our material appreciation for services which are in reality not payable in coin of this realm.
> As we said before, the film industry has pledged itself to raise $500,000 to endow the actors' fund. We shall do our share, and we appeal to you, your employees and the public that patronizes your theater to do yours. We know you won't need to be convinced about a matter that makes its entire appeal to your sentiment, and we know the big-hearted American public well enough to know that it will open its purse strings gladly to its darlings of the stage and screen.

The Southwestern Section of the Motion Picture Campaign is extraordinarily active. This appeal to exhibitors and theater owners is meeting with generous response.

The people of stage and screen toil to perfect themselves in the art to please the public, and therefore, have not so much time to provide for the sunset days of life; consequently this fund is a necessity. $70,000 a year is spent in relieving sick, disabled members of the theatrical profession throughout the country as well as in caring for old retired members in the home on Staten Island.

"There was no adequate way of meeting the demands except by an endowment of this fund with one million dollars and the Motion Picture Campaign will give $500,000 of it," says President Daniel Frohman. "The total will be deposited in an authorized trust company and the interest accruing therefrom will go far towards saving the fund from disintegration; it will not pay all the annual expenditures but the annual benefit performances by the drama will make up the difference."

Noted Psychologist on the Photoplay

BY CHARLES E. MOYER

PROBABLY the most dignified and important piece of literature that has yet been written relative to the motion picture industry is that issued during the past week, "The Photoplay. A Psychological Study," by Professor Hugo Münsterberg, one of the leading psychologists of the age.

Despite skeptics that still write relative to the non-importance of the industry, he gives it full credit in its every phase, and traces its psychology from its inception.

During the past many years, Professor Münsterberg has been conceded to be the most proficient writer on psychology in America, and since 1899, has written no less than twenty-four books on the psychology of different subjects. For many years he has been keenly interested in motion pictures and was one of the first of the educators who realized their advantages from an educational standpoint. Because of this latter fact, he has entered the field and has written a large number of scenarios entitled "Testing the Mind," which have formed a part of the "Paramount Pictographs" and has been doing a wonderful work in helping people decide whether or not they are "square pegs in round holes."

His latest literary contribution comprises a book of 233 pages. In his introduction the psychologist discusses "The Outer Development of the Moving Picture" and "The Inner Development of the Moving Picture." He expresses the underlying purpose of the entire discussion by saying—"We have at last reached the real problem of this little book. We want to study the right of the photoplay; hitherto ignored by esthetics, to be classed as an art in itself under entirely new mental life conditions. What we need for this study is evidently, first, an insight into the means by which the moving pictures impress us and appeal to us. Not the physical means and technical devices are in question, but the mental means. What psychological factors are involved when we watch the happenings on the screen? But secondly, we must ask what characterizes the independence of an art, which constitutes the conditions under which the works of a special art stand. The first inquiry is psychological, the second esthetic; the two belong intimately together. Hence we turn first to the psychological aspect of the moving picture and later to the artistic one."

In the study of the psychology of the photoplay Professor Münsterberg discusses first, "Depth and Movement," "Attention," "Memory and Imagination" and "Emotions." Under the second division of the book, "The Esthetics of the Photoplay," he discusses "The Purpose of Art," "The Means of the Various Arts," "The Means of the Photoplay," "The Demands of the Photoplay" and "The Function of the Photoplay."

Professor Münsterberg says that it is arbitrary to say where the development of the moving pictures began, and it is impossible to foresee where it will lead, yet, in tracing its development from "that camera obscura" which allowed one glass slide to pass before another and thus showed the railway train on one slide moving over the bridge on the other slide glass to its present day accomplishments. He emphatically asserts that "the last achievement in this universe of photo-knowledge is 'the magazine on the screen,'" discussing at length the accomplishments of the Paramount Pictographs.

In this discussion of the highest development of the photodrama from an educational standpoint, he says, "It is a bold step which yet seemed necessary in our day of rapid kinematoscopic progress. The popular printed magazines in America had their heyday in the muckraking period about ten years ago. Their hold on the imagination of the public which wants to be informed and entertained at the same time has steadily increased, with the power of the moving picture houses.

"The picture house ought therefore to take up the task of the magazines which it has partly displaced. The magazines give only a small place to the news of the day, a larger place to articles in which scholars and men of public life discuss significant problems. Much American history in the last two decades was deeply influenced by the columns of illustrated magazines. Those men who reached the mililons by such articles cannot overlook the fact—they may approve or condemn it—that the masses of today prefer to be taught by pictures rather than by words. The audiences are assembled anyhow. Instead of feeding them with mere entertainment, why not give them food for serious thought?

"It seemed, therefore, a most fertile idea when the Paramount Pictograph was founded to carry intelligent messages and ambitious discussions into the film houses. Political and economic, social and hygienic, technical and industrial, esthetic and scientific questions can in no way be brought nearer to the grasp of millions."

In the conclusion of his book, in speaking on "The function of the photoplay," Professor Münsterberg says that motion pictures "have become the most popular entertainment of the country; nay, of the world, and their influence is one of the strongest social energies of our time. Signs indicate that this popularity and this influence are increasing from day to day.

"The richest source of the unique satisfaction in the photoplay is probably that esthetic feeling which is significant for the new art and which we have understood from its psychological conditions. The massive outer world has lost its weight, it has been freed from space, time, and casuality, and it has been clothed in the forms of our own consciousness. The mind has triumphed over matter and the pictures roll on with the ease of musical tones. It is a superb enjoyment which no other art can furnish us.

"No wonder that temples for the new goddess are built in every little hamlet."

"The wholesome influence emanating from the photoplay must have an incomparable power for the remolding and upbuilding of the national soul."

Professor Münsterberg closes his work as follows:—

"Yes it is a new art—and that is why it has such fascination for the psychologist who in a world of ready-made arts, each with a history of many centuries, suddenly finds a new form still undeveloped and hardly understood. For the first time the psychologist can observe the starting of an entirely new esthetic development, a new form of true beauty in the turmoil of a technical age, created by its very technique and yet more than any other art destined to overcome outer nature by the free and joyful play of the mind."

Jack Barrymore Comedy and "Molly Make Believe" with Marguerite Clark Coming, Along with Unusual Pictographs

Comedy—played as only Jack Barrymore can play it—and a delightful film adaptation of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's charming story "Molly Make-Believe" in which Marguerite Clark will star, were the two five-reel offerings on the Paramount Program for the week of April 17. Both are from the studio of the Famous Players.

Barrymore will appear in a picturization of "The Red Widow," the popular comedy by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, and will have the support of several members of the cast in the original production. Flora Zabelle, co-star in the stage production, appears as Anna Varvara, and John Hendricks and George E. Mack are seen in the roles of the Baron and Popova, as they were in the original version.

An excellent cast will appear in support of Miss Clark in "Molly Make-Believe" including J. W. Johnson, Edwin Mordant, Mahlon Hamilton, Gertrude Norman and others.

Henry Reuterdahl, probably the greatest naval expert in the United States, will start the naval series of the "Preparedness" films in the thirteenth release of the Paramount Pictographs. The startling inadequacy of the United States army revealed by statesmen and army experts through the screen campaign of the Paramount Pictures Corporation has already attracted widespread attention throughout the nation. The inadequacy of the navy is shown in a similar manner beginning with the release of the week of April 17. Also included in this week's features for the "magazine on the screen" will be "Better Babies," a political cartoon by J. R. Bray, "Things We Should Know," "How Submarines Go Down," and a new chapter in the "Hazards of Happifat."

"Through the Lowlands of Luzon with Burton Holmes," the twelfth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, and "Colonel Heeza Liar Wins the Pennant," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon will be the two other single reel releases on the Paramount program for the same week.

Hugo Münsterberg, the psychologist who first realized the advantages to be obtained by using the motion picture screen to forward the country-wide movement of having every man realize whether or not he was "a square peg in a round hole," is soon to utilize the same methods for the teaching of fundamentals in psychology in colleges, and within a few weeks will show his series of pictures "Testing the Mind," which has been released through Paramount in the Paramount Pictographs, as one of its special departments, to the student body of Harvard University.

Testing the child's mentality as a means of deciding whether it is normal is another interesting feature being shown in the Paramount Pictographs, co-operating with the country-wide movement for "Better Babies." So unusual are these visualized tests on the screen that they are being heralded in every section of the country by different organizations who are forwarding the movement as being the greatest help towards a "bringing up of a better race" than any other medium that has ever before been conceived.

In successive releases Paramount has shown in a particularly vivid manner how to bathe the baby, feed the baby, dress the baby, measure and weigh the baby, but none have carried with them such intense interest as the "mental tests for the child."

Pathe Films Help Catch Criminal

Some time ago the papers were full of the exploits of Jean Crones, who attempted to poison each member of a large gathering of churchmen in Chicago. Crones has escaped the officers ever since. The Chicago police have been using Pathe News films to acquaint its men with the anarchist's appearance. The Pathe News last fall filmed a gathering in which Crones appeared prominently. Manager Holah of the Chicago Pathe exchange, remembered the occasion and offered to show the pictures to the detectives of the city. The offer was gladly accepted and the police are hot on Crones' trail.

New Link Joins Stage and Screen

WILLIAM A. BRADY ACTIVE HEAD OF WORLD, EQUITABLE, AND PARAGON

ONCE upon a time the motion picture was looked upon by the stage, and others, as one might a waif who chanced to wander into the scheme of affairs for a time.

But almost before it was fully aware of the fact, the stage found that the photoplay was a giant crowding its older brother out toward the edges of popularity.

And next, stage and screen joined forces and began to work together.

William A. Brady has just formed what is probably the strongest of the new connecting links between the old drama of the stage and the young drama of the films. Mr. Brady has completed arrangements to assume active control of all productions of the World Film Corporation, the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation and Paragon Film, Incorporated. It is not as yet known whether or not the sudden death of Arthur H. Spiegel, former president of World-Equitable, will in any way affect the above arrangements, but it is not probable.

Mr. Brady has been identified with these corporations before, but not officially. Now he is to exercise supervision over the productions made by the affiliated companies. In assuming his new duties, Mr. Brady will not lessen his activities in the speaking stage. On the contrary, he states that his theaters in New York, Chicago and other cities would be busier now than ever, and he would make more theatrical productions than usual in the coming season.

One of the immediate results of his taking an active interest in both fields, he explained, was that he would be able to make motion pictures of his New York successes and release these in the smaller cities where the original companies and plays could never go.

"The arrangement," said Mr. Brady, "provides a substitute for the number two, three and four companies whose day has passed. The smaller cities refuse to take imitations of the players whom they know were in the Broadway productions. And it is absolutely impossible to hold a company together for a long tour through the country. Actors of prominence can remain in New York the larger part of the year, taking parts in the productions at many theaters here, and at the same time doing work in the studios. It is with the greatest difficulty that a manager can persuade them to go out of town even for a limited tour of the largest cities.

"What I propose to do now is to make motion pictures of my New York productions, with the original cast in each case, and then release these at the close of the Broadway run, when the play is being given on the stages of the large cities. In this way I can give the one-night stands and places other than first-class cities the best version available of a New York hit; I can reach every hamlet and cross-road with the original production."

Mr. Brady announced, also, that his activities in the field of motion pictures proper would be on the broadest scale. He made the agreement with the late Arthur H. Spiegel, who was president and general manager of the World and Equitable corporations, to assume entire charge of all productions of those companies, while Mr. Spiegel was to conduct the business affairs. This means that Mr. Brady will oversee the work in all five of the studios controlled by these companies and all the productions turned out by their directors. Pictures made by the Premo Film Company, the Frohman Amusement Corporation and the Triumph Film Company, all of which are affiliated with and release pictures on the World-Equitable program, will have to meet with Mr. Brady's approval. Many well-known stars appear in these productions, and the equipment of the companies is most elaborate, with studios on both coasts. Mr. Brady spoke of the Paragon studio at Fort Lee, N. J., in particular, as being the last word in equipment.

Plans for the immediate future of the companies, Mr. Brady announced further, include the erection of a motion picture theater on Broadway which will be one of the world's largest and most elaborate picture theaters. Detailed arrangements for this have been completed. The planned seating capacity is 5,000.

As for the kind of picture that he would strive to provide for these corporations, Mr. Brady said:

"I shall use the great facilities and the unlimited capital at my disposal to turn out what may truly be called great productions. Some of these will be on a big scale, reaching to eight, ten and twelve reels. I shall put into picture form the works of great authors. I shall make productions such a 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Ingomar,' 'Faust,' the novels of Sir Walter Scott, of Dumas, the plays of Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Sudermann, as well as subjects of the hour, and more especially of America.

"In the immediate future I shall have screened 'Friday the 13th,' by Thomas W. Lawson. I hope to see all of this work done intelligently and in good taste. The hour for bedroom drama, for salaciousness in pictures, has passed. Censorship is upon us, and I am in favor of censorship if it is necessary to keep pictures clean, but I am sure it will not be needed for these productions. They will be suitable for any audience of ladies and children.

"And in scope, I shall be able to do things now that in the regular theater I found impossible. I know something of the opportunities, for in the past six months I have devoted the larger part of my time and energy in gaining a detailed knowledge of the motion picture industry, including every branch of studio activities, everything having to do with production. For experience, I directed and produced pictures myself, and though I do not expect to have time to make individual productions myself in future, I can say that I have gained first-hand, detailed knowledge of exactly how they are made. I discovered, for one thing, that an enormous amount of expense could be eliminated merely by using efficient business methods in the handling of material and people, without sacrificing one iota of artistic value. All of that experience will count for the future, a future of big things.

"Among the directors with whom I shall be associated is Maurice Tourneur, who produced 'Trilby' and other important feature pictures. I can say truly that I am proud to be associated with him and with other important directors, including Albert Capellani, Emile Chautard, Frank Thornby, Edwin August, Barry O'Neill, George Lederer, Frank Crane, John Ince, Travers Vale, James Durkin, S. E. Taylor, Harvey Knoles and Ray Physioc.

"These are some of the players permanently associated with the World, Equitable and Paragon companies:

Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn, Gail Kane, Ethel Clayton, Carlyle Blackwell, House Peters, Doris Kenyon, Kitty Gordon, Jane Grey, Clara Whipple, Arthur Ashley, Frances Nelson, Mollie King, Muriel Ostriche, Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Ross, Edwin August, John Mason, Bruce McRae and others."

BOARD AFTER CENSORS

Session of Motion Picture Board of Trade of America Continues Fight Against Various Pending Bills—Other Business

The Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America met in regular session last week, the most important matter for consideration being the report of officers and counsel on pending legislation affecting the motion picture industry.

Executive Secretary Binder said the death of the Ahern bill in the Assembly at Albany proved conclusively that the censorship efforts of the political reformers and place-holders in this state had failed. The Cristman-Wheeler bill, which was jockeyed through the Senate for the purpose of giving local capital to some of the members of that body, will come up in the Assembly soon. One amendment to this measure has been killed already which, according to William M. Seabury, general counsel of the Board, indicates that the popular branch of the legislature will not take snap judgment on a proposition which is held by many to be unconstitutional and is admittedly un-democratic and un-American.

While Gov. Whitman has made no official expression, it is believed that he is opposed by principle to any pre-publicity censorship in this state whether of motion pictures, the newspaper press or the public rostrum.

The Maryland censorship bill which was slipped through the Senate at 2:30 o'clock on the closing night is now on the desk of Gov. Harrington, who granted a hearing on the measure. The motion picture industry was represented by P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; J. W. Binder and William M. Seabury of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America; Guy L. Wonders, of Baltimore, and the full force of the Maryland Exhibitors' League. Speakers from the American Federation of Labor and the Maryland labor organizations were present also. Constitutional points against the bill are now before the governor.

The Board of Directors decided on a tentative program for the First National Motion Picture Exposition to be held at Madison Square Garden, May 6-14, inclusive. Letters were read from exhibitors' leagues of six states, wherein it was stated that these leagues would be fully represented at the exposition.

Arrangements were made for participation by the Board of Trade in the meeting of the General Federation of Womens' Clubs, here next month at which seventy-five thousand women from all parts of the country will be present. Samuel L. Rothapfel, one of the exhibitors' directors of the Board, and well known to Motography readers, will provide at his Rialto theater a model entertainment for the visitors on the morning of the opening of the convention. This entertainment will be followed by others on several other mornings during the progress of the great meeting. For the showing of pictures in the convention hall Director Nicholas Power of the Board, will supply a projecting machine of the newest pattern as one of the industry's contributions.

Pathe Serial Department Busy

Unusually keen activities are going on in the Pathe serial department. The old standby, the beehive, is no busier.

G. A. Smith, the serial director, has added to his staff Irving Weil, a capable newspaper man, for a number of years connected with the editorial department of the New York Evening Journal. Harry J. Walsh will also aid in the serial department in addition to his work in the advertising department, of which P. A. Parsons is the manager.

Four men are now traveling through the country lining up the newspapers in every important city and town on current and future serials.

The new series, "Who's Guilty?" will be released on May 8. This novel is evolved from an entirely new idea and one that will arouse keen interest. Another big feature is also under preparation, to be released at the close of "The Iron Claw." Several prominent players have been engaged for this production, but the details are being kept secret for later release.

A Rolin-Pathe Expansion

The Rolin Film Company, which makes comedies for the Pathe program, has moved to its new studio, 5813 Santa Monica building, Hollywood, Cal., where it will have a spacious stage, first-class dressing rooms and every modern studio appliance. A large force of carpenters is actively engaged in putting in fine properties and scenic effects.

The popularity of "Lonesome Luke," the series of fun films which have pleased so many fans and exhibitors' purses, is responsible for this studio expansion.

New Film Corporation

The Tefft Johnson Film Corporation has been incorporated in the state of New York for $25,000. Its activities will include motion pictures, theatrical and vaudeville enterprises. J. A. Schubert, C. Abrams and T. Johnson are the organizers.

News From Washington

BY THOMAS O. MONK

INQUIRIES have reached here as to the text and scope of the recent ruling of the Federal Trade Commission on the subject of the right of a producing or manufacturing film company or a distributing company to supply films to exhibitors or others. This is the text of the ruling:

Refusal to Supply Films to More Than One Exhibitor in Same City.—On application of the issuance of a complaint, it was alleged that a motion picture distributing company refused to supply the applicant with films on the ground that another exhibitor in the same city has been given the exclusive right to exhibit the films of the distributing company.

Held, That under ordinary circumstances, and in the absence of intent thus to accomplish an unlawful purpose, neither the Federal Trade Commission act nor the Clayton act prohibits a corporation dealing exclusively with one firm in a given territory. Upon the facts presented, a refusal to supply others in such territory is therefore not unlawful.

Other rulings of the Commission which may be of interest are:

Infringement of Registered Trade-Mark.—Public Interest.—On application for the issuance of a complaint it was alleged that certain registered trade-marks of the applicant were being infringed. It appears that Congress has provided a special federal remedy for the redress of alleged infringements of registered trade-marks (sec. 17, Trade-Mark Act, 33 U. S. Stats. at Large, 775; and par. 7, sec. 24, Judiciary Act, 36 U. S. Stats. at Large, 1092), whereby unusual advantages are given a complainant by being permitted to bring suit in a federal court irrespective of citizenship of parties or of amount of damages sought. Held, That where the conditions complained of involve nothing more than a question of infringing registered trade-marks, a proceeding will not be instituted in the absence of important considerations of public interest.

Price Discrimination.—Agency.—On application of a jobber of iron pipe for the issuance of a complaint for violation of Section 2 of the Clayton act, it was alleged that a manufacturer of such pipe discriminates in prices of such product in favor of a certain large jobber. Upon investigation of such charges it appears that such jobber sells the product of the manufacturer at prices fixed by the manufacturer under a contract of agency on a commission basis. Held, That as the contract is not one of sale, but of agency, it does not come within the provisions of Section 2 of the Clayton act.

Discrimination.—Charges Not Sustained on Investigation.—On application for the issuance of a complaint, it was charged that a company engaged in the manufacture and sale in interstate commerce of paving brick discriminated in price between purchasers in different cities and between different purchasers in the same city. Upon investigation, the concern complained of denied the practices charged and the commission was unable to obtain any evidence sustaining the charges.

Held, That the commission, having no reason to believe that the party complained of has been or is practicing the alleged discrimination, will not proceed further, and the application is, therefore, denied.

While news of these rulings has been published in Motography, it is believed the detailed findings are of interest enough to print in full.

Many motion picture theaters in Washington will co-operate with the committee that is arranging for "Baby Week," May 6-13, and will donate the use of their theaters for matinee lectures preceding and during the week of the campaign. The committee is to furnish the films or slides and also a physician to make an instructive talk. The object of the campaign is to reduce infant mortality and develop healthier babies.

Chaplin a Tragedian?

The release through V. L. S. E. of the anxiously expected Essanay four-part feature which exhibits Charlie Chaplin in a burlesque on "Carmen" has aroused interesting speculations as to just how the world-famous comedian would appear in a genuinely serious role.

"Carmen" is funny throughout, and uproarously funny, but at the close, before the stabbing of Carmen, there is just a glimpse of what Chaplin might do in a tragic part.

Should Chaplin ever essay the romantic, it would be difficult to conceive of a more pleasing foil for him than Edna Purviance, who as a singularly handsome and sensuously attractive Carmen, gives a portrayal in the burlesque that invites an interesting comparison of her attractiveness with that of any other "Carmen," the stage or screen has presented.

NEW ARROW OFFICERS

Arrow Film Corporation, Pathe Producer, Elects New Heads and Moves to New, Elaborate and Spacious Quarters

At the semi-annual meeting of the directors of the Arrow Film Corporation, which produces pictures for release through the Pathe Exchanges, held last week, two new officers were elected to fill vacancies. John F. Shallenberger, of Chicago, a brother of W. E. Shallenberger—who has been the president of the Arrow company since its organization and is one of the big figures in the motion picture industry—was elected vice-president. Warren H. Small was elected secretary. Both Messrs. Shallenberger and Small became, ex officio, members of the board of directors.

John F. Shallenberger is one of the three brothers whose money financed the late Charles J. Hite in the acquisition of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. He is also financially interested, as is W. E. Shallenberger, in the Mutual, American, North American and other motion picture organizations. He never has been as active as W. E. Shallenberger in the industry, but he intends to devote more of his time to the supervision of his already large holdings.

Warren H. Small is a member of the law firm of Prindle, Wright & Small, of 111 Broadway, New York. They are counsel to the DuPont powder company and other large manufacturing concerns. Mr. Small was for several years the legal representative of the Motion Picture Patents Company and had charge of the preparation of its organization and general business affairs from its inception. He also was attorney of the General Film Company during the presidency of Frank L. Dyer.

Owing to the growth of the Arrow Film Corporation new office space became necessary, and the Arrow Film Corporation now is quartered in a suite in the Times Building. Albert S. LeVine, who was secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation from its organization and has been closely associated with W. E. Shallenberger for some time, has been appointed assistant to the president.

President Shallenberger now divides his time between the Arrow studios in Yonkers and the New York office. He has taken personal charge of all Arrow productions, including "The Woman's Law," in which Miss Florence Reed is starred and which recently was released through the Pathe Exchanges, and the new "Who's Guilty?" series for Pathe.

Edfrid A. Bingham, who had been scenario editor of the Metro producing companies for a year, was put in charge of the Arrow scenario department, cooperating with Mr. LeVine in the creation and arrangement of Arrow scripts. Mr. Bingham is the author of several best sellers, his most recent publication being "The Heart of Thunder Mountain."

The publicity and advertising departments were placed under the direct supervision of Mr. LeVine, who is charged also with the Arrow's editing of all its productions through the Pathe exchanges. In collaboration with Mr. Bingham, the "Who's Guilty?" scripts have been revised and edited. Four of the episodes of these fourteen photo-novels have now been delivered to Pathe from the scripts supplied by Messrs. Bingham and LeVine. The Arrow's studios in Yonkers, have been enlarged, a completely new lighting system installed, new dressing-rooms built, and a big negative vault constructed. Mr. Shallenberger's production methods have made it possible for a complete two-reel "Who's Guilty?" episode to be produced every seven days. This production schedule is being adhered to with railroad regularity.

With the completion of the tenth "Who's Guilty?" chapter, the Arrow will resume its production of five-reel Gold Rooster features for Pathe.

Hearst Has No Wharton Interests

With the idea of setting at rest the rumors that have been launched through various sources to the effect that William Randolph Hearst has become interested financially in Wharton, Inc., of Ithaca, New York, the latter producing concern has issued a statement to the contrary. "We have no desire to make capital of Mr. Hearst's name nor to have him annoyed with unnecessary inquiries," the announcement states.

The fact of the matter is that Wharton, Inc., is affiliated with the International Film Service, of which Mr. Heart is president, as contracting producers. "We are proud to acknowledge this," states Theodore W. Wharton, "and we hope the affiliation will be of long standing."

The Sunday Question

Largely attended meetings of ministers in the cities of New Haven, Conn., and Cambridge, Mass., have endorsed Sunday picture shows. On the other hand, the Ministers' Union of Stoughton, Mass., has opposed Sunday opening on the grounds that it "commercializes" the Sabbath.

The same question is to come before the city commissioners of Fort Worth, Tex., in the near future. In the meantime the picture houses are running on Sundays, charging no admission. A sign is displayed advising patrons that the labor unions are hosts.

Brisbane Lauds Marcus Loew

BY C. R. CONDON

MARCUS LOEW is the Henry Ford of the show business. He returns the purchase price to unsatisfied patrons. Long before Montague Glass wrote "Potash and Perlmutter" Marcus had learned to make his customers smile. He handles a larger volume of business than any of us. Marcus is one of the quickest thinkers in the theatrical business. He plays on the square. I pay him the highest compliment that one man can pay another—Marcus Loew is a regular fellow."

So spoke George M. Cohan at the dinner to Marcus Loew at the Hotel Astor, New York, April 9. C. F. Zittel of the New York Evening Journal is accredited with having arranged this affair in honor of this showman who calmly lists fifty-seven theaters as among his theatrical holdings. Mr. Zittel, as toastmaster, introduced Mr. Loew who spoke modestly of his progress in the world, concluding by saying that if the wealth which he has accumulated in the show business defines the term "success" he treasures even greater than this achievement the true friendship of the men with whom he has been associated in commercial life.

Marcus Loew.

After smiling through George Cohan's pertinent and humorous remarks, Toastmaster Zittel (alias Zit) introduced A. L. Erlanger, Arthur Brisbane, and Percy G. Williams who told of Marcus Loew's climb to prominence and prosperity. The following speech by Mr. Brisbane is of especial interest to the motion picture industry:

"The answer to the question, 'What has he done?' referring to Marcus Loew, is this: He has given happiness to millions of human beings. Marcus Loew is a successful man; he has built his own success, inheriting nothing save his thinking head and his working hands. All the credit that goes to the builder, to the citizen helping to create the country, belongs to Marcus Loew.

"But many build, and few make others happy. We honor tonight not the successful man, not anything that he has done for himself, but the man whose work has made others happy. He has kept families united in their pleasures; father, mother, children and the grandfather and the grandmother, all sit together in Marcus Loew's house.

"And thanks to the economy of organization, the amount of money that a man formerly paid for one good seat for himself will now provide an evening's entertainment for the whole family.

"When his work is done and his men have telephoned him the exact number of tens of thousands of dollars added to his bank account that day, Marcus Loew can sleep with a clear conscience and dream happily of the crowds that fill his theaters.

"Thanks to him, tens of thousands are laughing, and there is nothing better for bodily and mental health than wholesome laughter. Young faces of children and old wrinkled faces, shine with the light of fun that drives away all the day's worries. Thanks also to him, while many are convulsed with laughter watching his humorous motion pictures or living actors, other tens of thousands are weeping with oppressed heroines, clinching their fists at the baseness of double-dyed villains, exulting when the police arrive in time, or the forged will is exposed, or the misunderstood turned-out-of-doors son drops in to pay the mortgage.

"It is a good thing for tired worried human beings to laugh at least once a day. Sympathy with goodness and hatred of villains stimulate the hearts and minds.

"Marcus Loew in his enterprises confers the blessing of laughter, paints vice as hideous, virtue as beautiful and real. He is a blessing to the community and a banquet should be organized in his honor at least once a week.

"Now, since nearly all the men here are personally interested in theaters and in motion pictures, and since the motion picture—its future possibilities, especially—interest the entire country, I want briefly, to discuss the newest and most powerful means of getting through the human skull into the human intelligence—it is the motion picture, of course.

"Recently, in the presence of some of you, I discussed the motion picture, and thanks to the witticism of my friend Frank O'Malley and others I found myself famous or infamous, I am not sure which. I confessed that I had never seen Mr. Chaplin or Miss Pickford or Miss Theda Bara, and apparently thus demonstrated my unfitness to mingle with intelligent human beings.

"To atone for that, if the matter can be mended, I wish to say that I am going to see all three of them alive and photographed, as soon as possible.

"And incidentally, this part of what I have to say, I have taken the trouble to dictate to the obliging stenographer of this hotel to save my friend O'Malley trouble.

"The moving picture is to the theater what the one cent daily newspaper is to other literature. I leave it to you to imagine the importance which attaches to one cent daily newspapers and their beneficent influence on the community. What the one cent daily newspaper has done to and for other kinds of literature, the motion picture will do for other kinds of stage and theater work. The one cent newspaper has greatly increased the sale of high priced books, literally creating new readers for such books. When Harper & Brothers published 'Riddle of the Universe' that scientific book was reviewed in a one cent daily newspaper which asked its readers to buy the book. George Darvey, under whose direction Harper & Brothers published the book, will tell you that the sale which occurred instantaneously in a week was amazing. One book store sold six hundred copies of it within a few days.

"The same thing happened when that newspaper reviewed Herbert Spencer's book "Facts and Comments." The firm publishing that book, Macmillan or Appleton, I forget which, wrote expressing their amazement that one single review should have produced such results. Their letter was sent to Herbert Spencer just before he died in the hope that it might soften the old gentleman's antagonism toward yellow journalism. It was a yellow journel that published the review.

"The one cent daily newspaper has made it possible for the high priced magazines to attain the circulation and prosperity never dreamed of. The same is true of weeklies. It was thought that the cheap daily newspapers would destroy them, but on the controry, it has created for them such a success as could not have been imagined twenty-five years ago.

"What the one cent daily newspaper has done for other forms of literature the motion picture will do for other and all the forms of theatrical enterprises. First and foremost and very important, the picture will give immortality to the genius and grace of the great actors, as the talking machine gives immortality to the singer and musician. Of Garrick and Mrs. Sydons and the Great Rachel, there is left to us only a faint memory. Generations to come will actually see Bernhardt and Beerbohm Tree and Pavlowa, the stage geniuses yet to be born, and very likely Abe Erlanger boxing with Willard—it would be a pity for posterity to miss that.

"What would we not give if we could see upon the screen Shakespeare rehearsing his actors, or Voltaire playing impish tricks in the chorus of his own play, or the wonderful Taglioni dancing?

"The motion picture seen by tens of millions will create new actors and actresses, stimulate the imagination of genius, and that is more important than the creation of new millionaires, already accomplished. The picture will multiply the demand for great plays, fine theaters, and companies of living actors. For he who sees the motion photograph becomes anxious to see the real living actor. It was thought that the talking machine reproducing at will the voices of great artists would cheapen those artists, and many at first refused to sing for the records. I am certain that Otto Kahn, the godfather of modern grand opera in America would tell you that the phonograph that has enabled every poor child and bed-ridden invalid to hear the voice of Caruso, has greatly increased the desire to actually hear and see him and increased the opera attendance.

"The so-called old-fashioned stage with its company of living actors compares with motion picture exactly as the expensive magazine or book compares with the one cent daily newspaper. And as the newspaper has increased the prosperity of the book and magazine, so the picture will increase the prosperity of the theater devoted to the old-fashioned performance.

"Finally the motion picture is barely beginning its work. More than ten years ago I attended with Mr. Erlanger and Mr. Williams and other gentlemen here, an annual dinner of the Theatrical Managers' Association. I was asked to speak on the subject, 'After the Motion Picture, What?'

"I told the managers that after the motion pictures there would be more moving pictures greater and better. I predicted, as Mr. Erlanger will tell you, the conversion of great theaters to picture uses. I advocated there and in my newspaper articles the use of pictures for the education of children—as the greatest possible educating force.

"Therefore my sensitive feelings are hurt when my friend O'Malley portrays me as one who does not feel the motion picture's importance.

"The picture within two or three years, and perhaps this year will be the greatest weapon in political fights. The picture tells the truth with deadly simplicity and effect. You may say 'He murdered his poor old grandmother,' and the public will reply, 'Perhaps he didn't.' But if you put on a screen the actual photograph, 'This is Snooks, choking his poor old grandmother, now will you vote for him for mayor?' the audience will yell 'Never.'

"The picture will make education attractive. It will do more for the mind of youth than all the educational methods have been able to accomplish. It will show the lives of great men. And children will follow them eagerly. The picture will make science simple, natural history familiar, astronomy a beautiful, clear idea in the child's mind.

"The picture is destined to be what the newspaper ought to be, and will possess power that the newspaper cannot match—an entertainment, a relaxation, an education, a political weapon to protect the people. It is the only possible method of reaching the human mind directly and effectively, regardless of that mind's intellectual training.

"The motion picture in history will equal in importance the discovery of the printing press. Therefore honor to those who honorably and successfully devote their energies to motion picture development."

At the speaker's table were seated: A. H. Woods, F. Ziegfeld, Jr., H. N. Hempstead, William Courtleigh, George M. Cohan, W. R. Hearst, A. L. Erlanger, Arthur Brisbane, Aaron Jones, Marcus Loew, C. F. Zittel, B. S. Moss, P. G. Williams, F. F. Proctor, Lee Shubert, William A. Brady, Theodore Rousseau, William Fox, George Bell, Daniel Frohman and Sam Scribner.

Several vaudeville acts followed the speaking. The floor was then cleared and Ziegfeld's Midnight Frolic held reign. Following this came dancing, ending at —What time did you leave?

New Film Company

The Ruth J. MacTammany Motion Picture Corporation is the most recent of companies incorporated under the New York state laws, with paid-in stock amounting to $25,000. The officers of the new firm are C. J. Allenbaugh, president and general manager; Ruth J. MacTammany, vice-president and secretary; and Hal Clarendon, general director. Offices have been opened in the Godfrey Building.

Miss MacTammany will be remembered as the heroine in "One Day," which was produced by the B. S. Moss Company, but at the time of this appearance she was using the name Jeanne Iver.

The first step of the young corporation was to buy the state rights of "One Day" for the states of Ohio and Kentucky. The next thing that the firm will do will be to produce a picture.

The Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association is to join with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest in making a success of the big motion picture exposition which is to be held in Minneapolis on May 2, 3, 4 and 5.

"The Lightbearer"

Essanay Drama by Charles J. McGuirk Released April 8. Reviewed by John Fiske

TOUGH saloonkeepers "never get no credit" from playwrights. The public doesn't want to admit that there is any good in the barkeep's makeup and the playwright must not forget his public. But usually it takes more than one beating to convince a saloonkeeper and ward boss who is in good standing with the powers that be, to pin a "closed" sign on his own door. That's the only criticism I am going to offer on "The Lightbearer," the three-act Essanay drama of the slums, by Charles J. McGuirk. And as honest criticism should be constructive, the reviewer should suggest a better way. Perhaps the author and producer will object but it seems to me there was an opportunity for a delightful touch of comedy in that scene in the bar room. Would it not have been better had the rejuvenated pugilist, who had taught the minister how to whip the saloonkeeper, put up the sign when the latter admitted his defeat as ruler of the district? Perhaps not. It's only a suggestion anyway and offered as an appeal that more light comedy touches be introduced to relieve what appear to some as impossible situations in too many photoplays.

Except for that point, which must be taken only as a one-person opinion, "The Lightbearer" is a delightful drama of modern times and is of value on any theater program. The author has whipped an understandable story into a pleasing play that has been produced with care and thought. It is a human yarn spun around a pastor of a rich church, played by Richard Travers and played well, who takes the place of a shepherd stricken at his work in the slums. He leaves his church to conduct the mission which is connected with his parish. There he meets the opposition of the saloonkeeper who is also a collector of rents and fixer for the leading layman of the parish which pays the pastor his salary. In spite of this situation, the preacher goes on with his work with the assistance of the pugilist, happily portrayed by Jack Dale, whom he, the clergyman has saved from the gutter and taken under his roof. And he has another helper in "the rose of the slums," as played by Betty Brown. "Bull" Grogan, the saloonkeeper, has been ruling by virtue of a strong right arm which he has used successfully on the heads of those who opposed him, not overlooking the minister. The pugilist has felt the sting of his blows many times and when his strength has been restored by proper living under the watchful eye of the pastor, he teaches the clergyman to pound Christianity into his followers after he has been deprived of his pastorate through the greed of the churchman-tenement owner. His success in whipping Grogan is rewarded by restoration to the pulpit and the love of Rose.

It is a convincing and pleasing story. Travers makes an excellent strong-armed preacher and Dale, who seems best in light comedy parts such as that of the pugilist, took advantage of the opportunity offered him. Betty Brown is always a joy to see in any picture but this one might have been written with her in mind, the part fitted her so well.

It might be well to state that the author seems to have the right idea as to subtitles. He had something to say and he said it well, an example some other writers might follow.

"The Greater Wrong"

Three-Reel Lubin Drama Released April 13. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a well-presented play, consistent and interesting. A great deal is put into three reels, without undue crowding. The characters are clearly portrayed. George W. Terwilliger, who directed the play, also wrote the story, and while he showed skill in weaving the threads of the plot, one regrets his choice of material. For, as the play stands, it is not one which will interest exhibitors whose patronage is chiefly among the young people. It is not an uplifting play for boys and girls, who make up a large percentage of the audience in many houses.

While evil which is true to life may be presented in screen plays—in fact, must be presented if they are to mirror life as it is—the danger in this play lies in the fact that here evil is presented almost as a mere incident to complicate the plot.

Leslie Austen has the principal role, of James Cannon, a young engineer, whose weakness of character is shown in the early part of the play, when he spends time wishing for wealth instead of working for it. He soon finds an easy way to gain it, when he meets and wins the love of a wealthy girl, Helen Maitland. He marries her, but she soon discovers that her money was the attraction for Cannon, and the two are very unhappy. At this time Cannon turns for sympathy to Grace Andrews, his stenographer, who had loved him before his marriage. The husband and wife are reconciled after the birth of a daughter. Cannon breaks off his intimacy with Grace and goes west to earn his own fortune. He is successful. A letter comes one day from Grace, but he destroys it unread.

While Cannon is in the west, his baby daughter dies. Mrs. Cannon, fearing the effect of this loss on her husband, accepts the doctor's suggestion that another child be substituted, one whose mother has died.

Years later, when the daughter is almost grown up, the story is resumed. The girl has always disliked Cannon, and he has no control over her, to his great sorrow. At last Mrs. Cannon determines to tell him of the substitution of this child for their own. Cannon is horrified and refuses to forgive the deception. Then the doctor tells the rest of the story—that the girl is really Cannon's own child, and that Grace died when she was born. So Cannon is in no position to withhold forgiveness from his wife.

Octavia Handworth plays Mrs. Cannon, Margaret Adair is Grace, Adelaide Hayes is the daughter, and Herbert Fortier the doctor. The acting of the entire cast is good.

"The Gay Lord Waring"

Bluebird Drama Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A RECKLESS disposition and a charming personality are the chief characteristics of Arthur, the young and gay Lord Waring, whom J. Warren Kerrigan portrays in this story of English life. Excitement and suspense, a clear narrative, especially attractive exterior pictures, a well balanced cast of players, make this release one which most audiences will enjoy. The story moves rapidly, so that the various improbabilities in the plot are not especially conspicuous. The play is to be accepted as a pleasing adventure story, attractively presented.

Lord Waring, disowned by his father, is living riotously in London on the money he borrows from O'Grady, a money lender. At last his credit gone, he bids his London friends farewell, chief among them the Countess Olga Imani, and goes to the estate in the country, which his half brother, Mark Waring, possesses. There are a number of pretty country scenes introduced at this point, among them one in which Arthur and a friend, race their saddle horses. Helene Von Gerold, the beautiful daughter of a neighbor, is also out riding, and she is thrown from her horse when Arthur's mount collides with hers in the race.

Helene is seriously hurt, and her miserly father, who secretly owns mines and is very wealthy, insists that Arthur or his brother pay for the medical treatment, since Arthur is responsible for the accident. Arthur offers to sell his title to his brother for a large sum of money to aid Helene. But since only Arthur's death will give Mark the title, Arthur agrees to pay the money back in six months, if he is alive. The understanding is that he will kill himself, thus giving Mark the title, if he cannot repay.

But Mark, learning of Von Gerold's wealth, determines to marry Helene and he arranges to pay for the cure. Arthur, although he cannot aid Helene, with whom he has fallen in love and who loves him, does not return the money he has obtained at such dangerous terms, but goes back to London and spends it in his usual fashion. And just to heighten the situation a bit, O'Grady bets Arthur a large sum of money that he will not carry out his promise and kill himself.

When the fatal day draws near, the Countess Olga agrees to accept O'Grady's proposal of marriage if he will save Arthur, but Arthur will not allow her to make the sacrifice. And Helene begs her father to save Arthur. All in vain. Then O'Grady hires an assassin to kill Mark, the brother, believing that Arthur will be blamed for the murder. However there is a mistake, and Mark lives. But on the appointed day, fate saves Arthur. There is a fire at the Von Gerold home, from which Arthur rescues the now cured Helene. Von Gerold himself is killed. And on the way to the fire Mark's horse runs away, killing him. So Arthur is freed from his promise and also comes into the property.

While neither plot nor characters are to be taken too seriously, the story is so nicely presented that it is entertaining throughout. Lois Wilson is pleasing as Helene. Bertram Grassby, as Mark Waring, Maud George as the Countess, H. Holland as O'Grady and Duke Werone as Von Gerald handle their roles in a very satisfactory manner.

The subtitles are frequent and many of them too long. They are cleverly arranged on the screen, however.

"His Masterpiece"

Two Reel "Flying A" Drama Released April 17 Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE are a number of very pretty scenes in the telling of this story, particularly the pictures of country life. Edward Coxen and Marguerite Nichols have the leading roles, Coxen as an artist, and Miss Nichols as a little country girl, an ingenue role which she portrays pleasingly. Lizette Thorne again has an unsympathetic role, the cold hearted, satirical society woman who is the artist's wife. Miss Thorn is skillful in depicting a villainess of the refined, reserved type, but she is really too attractive to win a very thorough dislike, even when she is being cruel.

The story is started in an interesting, unusual fashion. Two men in an art gallery are admiring a painting called "The Lost Love," of a young girl who is about to throw herself and her baby into the lake. Then one of the men tells the story of the painting. The artist, hitherto unknown, painted the picture while almost insane. Sometime before his wife had threatened to divorce him. While awaiting the divorce, the artist, Eric DeVoe, had gone into the country to rest. There he met and fell in love with Doris (Marguerite Nichols). They were to be married as soon as the divorce was granted, but the wife, learning of the affair, in revenge refuses to carry out her promise, and will not free Eric.

When Eric returns to the city, Doris waits in vain for a word from him, and at last writes him of her intention to commit suicide. The artist paints the picture, which is to win fame, then suffers from a nervous breakdown. That is the story of the painting. The play itself is given a happy ending. The girl is saved from drowning. The wife reconsiders the matter and frees Eric. And after Eric is cured and returns from the sanatarium, he learns that Doris still lives, and there is a reconciliation.

While interesting, the play is built on a situation which is not especially pleasing. One feels that the story might have been changed, with a little thought, to avoid an unpleasant suggestion.

"The Three Wise Men"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released April 17. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WHILE this story is distinctly of the Christmas type, describing a change of heart which comes to a worldly man on Christmas eve, there is no reason why it cannot be enjoyed at another time and especially at Easter. The theme has given Director Colin Campbell an opportunity to stage a number of very beautiful scenes of biblical character which are given an unusual and a dramatic touch by the introduction into the pictures of the decidedly modern figure of the man. Scarcely less dramatic are the contrasts in modern scenes, the various gay celebrations of Christmas eve, and the pathetic home scenes among the very poor.

A conversion is not an easy thing to portray convincingly in literature or on the screen. Thomas Santschi, in a most sincere manner, without any sentimentality, makes us feel keenly the character of the man, William Owens, before and during the experience which leads to his redemption. He makes him a strong character, either for good or evil.

Bessie Eyton's portrayal of the Salvation Army girl is next in importance in making the story convincing. She, too, plays sincerely, and without affectation or too much sweetness. The carnival scene, in which she enters and holds the attention of the merry-makers by her Christmas story, is dramatic, and with the two leading characters, we feel that it might have happened.

The story deals with a young man, William Owens, who in the course of a dissipated career, has betrayed and deserted a young girl. The girl, Madge Fields (Edith Johnson), is cared for by Nellie, a Salvation Army girl. On Christmas eve, while collecting alms for the poor, Nellie meets William Owens, who is celebrating riotously with his companions. The men are attracted by the beauty of the girl, and invite her to join in their fun. She refuses, but instead tells them the Christmas story. They listen, politely, then go on with their merriment while Nellie goes away. Owens, however, has been touched by the girl and her message, and in disgust leaves his friends. Falling asleep on a park bench, he has a dream for which Nellie and her story are responsible. He dreams of following the "Three Wise Men" in their journey through the desert. He is with them when they discover the Christ Child, and the face of Mary, the mother, is that of Nellie. But he is not allowed to enter with the worshippers, being barred out by the figure of the girl he deserted. Then the dream changes, and he sees a vision of the crucifixion, a poetically presented scene.

At last he is awakened by the Christmas bells, and finds Nellie beside him. She had recognized his likeness in a picture Madge carried, and she leads him to Madge and to his own child.

The story is so well presented, the religious element so reverendly handled that the picture makes a pleasing offering for the Holy Week and Easter season.

"Ramona"

Clune Production Exploited as Road Show Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE second step in W. H. Clune's gigantic motion picture enterprise left its imprint on Wednesday, April 5, at the 44th Street Theater, New York, when "Ramona" opened in that Broadway showhouse. The first foot forward is still lingering in Los Angeles, where "Ramona" has been playing for the past ten weeks to an enormous attendance.

The longer the aforementioned second step settles in its present New York position the better "Ramona's" prospects seem to be. And this is the real test for a big production. Publicity will start it on its way, and a brilliant first night will put the stamp of commendation upon it, but the impetus necessary to keep it going successfully after its first few performances must be supplied by satisfied attendance. And an inquisitive visit to the theater's box office reveals a prosperous advance sale of seats.

But to pass on from the mercenary side of art—

The picture is ten reels in length and, with the musical and scenic introductions to its prologue and two acts, forms an entertainment of about two and three-quarter hours' duration. These introductions are decidedly artistic and pleasing. In effect they establish atmosphere and supply diversion.

The story, from Helen Hunt Jackson's book of the same name, deals with the harsh treatment accorded the mission Indians of early California. These Americans, far from being a part of the bloodthirsty element which raided and massacred under the tutorship of outlawed chiefs, were a most peaceful and simple lot. As early as 1845, and possibly earlier, they were as peons, subservient, unadventurous and trusting.

Absolutely innocent of the laws which govern squatter claims and the opening of territories, they were easy prey for scheming ranchmen and lawless intruders. In consequence they were dispossessed, ejected from their homes, and hounded from place to place. From original land owners with a prerogative, they became unhappy wanderers, harboring a deep hatred for the white man and a rooted distrust for that style of justice seated in Washington.

Helen Hunt Jackson wove these historical facts into an interesting story which contains love, humor and pathos. By enlightening the populated East as to the true character of these mission Indians and their harsh treatment at the hands of the government agents, she hoped to do for them what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" did for the negroes. The connecting links in the story may have been drawn from fiction, but the conditions related in it were taken from fact.

Under Donald Crisp's able direction "Ramona" and its plea for fairness and justice have been immortalized on the screen in a production containing much thrilling action, sufficient romance, finely drawn characters, and altogether, no little interest. As the time of the story stretches from 1845 to 1881 it would be impossible to entirely avoid the natural impression of being strung out which the play leaves with the spectator. But this consistent continuity is overcome somewhat by the absorbing interest and great feeling aroused by the last two reels. Here fact proves relentless in an effort to prove that these unoffending people have been criminally wronged.

Several of the big scenes and long distance throws are reminiscent of "The Birth of a Nation," in the production of which Mr. Crisp assisted. The photography is of a quality in keeping with the finesse of the technical side of the picture. There are a number of important characters in the story, and all of them are impersonated with sincerity and success. Among the principals in the cast are: Mabel Van Buren, Richard Sterling, Lurline Lyons, Hubert Whitehead, Arthur Traveres, H. M. Best, Adda Gleason, N. de Brullier, Monroe Salisbury, James Needham and others.

"A World War in Kidland"

Juvenile Company's Film Makes Novel Plea for Preparedness. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

INGENIOUS in conceit and cleverly portrayed "A World War in Kidland" delivers a sermon on preparedness that is delightfully humorous and at the same time perhaps as forceible as many like propaganda films that are serious throughout. "A World War in Kidland" was produced by the Juvenile Company. It is brief, the film being only about seven hundred feet in length, and perhaps the stronger for that.

In every respect it is entertaining and though it fearlessly depicts the beliefs of many in this country on the various nations at war there can be no offense to those of the other countries. The actors are boys, mere children, and their actions are youthfully amusing. These boys play a game of war, using nature's most appropriate element for the purposes; for snow serves and serves well as their defensive and offensive armament. Therefore how can there be any offense? If the game is symbolical of something that is true, or even if it be only a half truth there is little to do but be convinced.

James A. Fitz Patrick as the author and producer of this picture is entitled to praise and admiration both for the novelty of his little story and the striking manner in which he has produced it. He has summarized the many arguments in favor of preparedness and expressed them in a new way, always keeping the picture in a humorous vein. Yet one can take "A World War in Kidland" just as seriously as one wishes which makes the picture one that will appeal to children and grown-ups.

In this game of war there are forts representing Germany, Turkey, Austria, Greece, England, France, Russia, Italy and Belgium. The United States, Japan and Mexico are also represented. Behind each fort there is one boy and each boy can be distinguished not only by the uniform he wears and his features but by the characteristics of the nation he represents reflected in his expression. That Mr. Fitz Patrick succeeds in having his youthful actors register real facial expression is unusual and remarkable.

The picture opens showing the countries at war fighting furiously. From each fort snow balls are hurled with frequency and determination. Uncle Sam is seen in the background. He is busy feeding the Dove of Peace until the spirit of '76, after the famous painting, marches up to him and prevails upon him to prepare. Mexico, or rather Villa, insults him once and is ignored but the second offense brings about that bandit's downfall. The Henry Ford "out of the trenches boys" episode is also introduced.

"The Good Bad-Man"

Douglas Fairbanks Author and Star in Triangle-Fine Arts Western. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS is credited with the authorship of "The Good Bad-Man" in which he plays the role of a desperado who holds up people and trains to suit his whims and who, when he does help himself to anything valuable, turns it over to some deserving woman or child. In writing a story so well suited to the production of a good, wholly interesting melodramatic picture Mr. Fairbanks attained something for which he deserves praise. In the hands of Director Allan Dwan and a splendid cast headed by himself, the scenario Mr. Fairbanks turned out is the basis for a picture that will entertain and please the many who see it.

"The Good Bad-Man" plays in a section of the West where law and restraint were unknown quantities at the time the action is supposed to have taken place, which was in Maverick County during its wild and wooly heyday. There is nothing exceptional about the plot but the treatment it received at the hands of producer and actors is excellent. "The Good Bad-Man" is a virile screen melodrama with plenty of action, some effective humor and a pretty romance dealing with a fascinating hero and a charming little girl of the plains.

Douglas Fairbanks first of all drew a fine character in "Passin' Through" who is the Good Bad-Man, and then he proceeded to enact the character with the strength and energetic effectiveness which characterized his previous screen appearances. A fascinating blending of bad and good, "Passin' Through" is a character one simply must like, and this fact at once insures the success of "The Good Bad-Man." To further enhance "The Good Bad-Man" there is a fine supporting cast which contains Bessie Love and Sam de Grasse, and a production real and atmospheric enough to be a credit to Allan Dwan, a director who has contributed several exceptional productions to the screen.

"Passin' Through" explains to the girl who attracts him so greatly the first time he meets her that the reason he keeps the sheriffs after him is to forget that he is a man without a father. This is the one thought he cannot stand. After many thrilling gun fights and feats of horsemanship, however, it turns out that he did have a father and that the "Wolf," a bandit who is a rival for Amy's hand is his enemy because he was Passin's mother's enemy. This knowledge brings a change over him and he is a strong, noble "Passin' Through" when Amy marries him.

Bessie Love is one of the most promising of screen actresses and in this picture she again makes it apparent that she will be a real as well as technical star when the announcement of some future production puts her name before the picture's title. The performance Mr. de Grasse gives is splendid. Fred Burns, Doc. Cannon and Joseph Singleton are the other prominent and commendable members of the cast.

"The Shadow of a Doubt"

Equitable Production Features Carlyle Blackwell. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE Shadow of a Doubt" follows the fortunes of two brothers, one wealthy and influential and the other a victim of trying circumstances, who meet after a separation since boyhood. This picture features Carlyle Blackwell in the role of the younger and less fortunate brother; a part in which there are some well-utilized opportunities.

"The Shadow of a Doubt" was produced by Ray Physioc, who, given an interesting but conventional script, directed its visualization in a rather effective manner. The picture is interesting, but there is nothing impressive about its dramatic situations, for by this time the picture patron has become very familiar with the story of two brothers, the one unable to get a job because he was jailed for stealing to feed his ill wife, while the other refuses to employ an ex-convict little knowing that it is his own brother he insists upon having discharged.

The opening scenes which show the two brothers as little boys in an orphanage are strikingly human and sympathetic. The older of the two is adopted by a wealthy old couple. Years elapse in which John's foster parents have died and left him all their wealth, while Ned struggles for a livelihood. They search for each other for a time, but are unsuccessful. Ned steals a loaf of bread, and this leads up to his arrest as a bank robber. John's wife does charitable work and in some way learns that Ned and his wife are in dire need. A very expensive operation is required to save the suffering woman, and as John will not advance the money his wife borrows the amount from a man who secretly craves to have her in his toils.

After Ruth's recovery Ned is given a position in his brother's office, though John is unaware that there is an ex-convict in his employ. Collins begins to trouble Alice about the money he loaned her, and he insists upon visiting her on the evening her husband is to be out of town. Ned is discharged by John's orders. He calls on Alice to help him again. She relates her trouble to him, telling him that she was tempted to steal the money from her husband's private safe. Ned opens the safe and is counting the bills contained there when John, who misses the train, walks into the room. Ned is arrested and the picture of his mother is seen by John when the police search the prisoner. John then asks the judge to dismiss the case and takes his younger brother to his home.

There seems to be no good reason why Ned should open the safe and handle its contents, but this brings about a happy ending and a scene that is well acted so most every one will gladly pass over it lightly. The settings are all appropriate. George Anderson, Jean Shelby, Frank Beamish and Lillian Allen are praiseworthy members of the supporting cast.

"Realization"

Three Reel "Flying A" Drama Released April 22
Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WHILE not unusual, this is a pleasing little story, clearly and interestingly presented. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat have the principal roles, directed by Frank Borzage. Miss Rich, in this story, is Elsa, a singer, while Mr. Vosburgh is Carl, the first violinist in a theater orchestra. Elsa goes to the city, with her mother, to earn her living. She is given a place in the chorus of a musical stock company. Carl, the violinist, falls in love with her. Then she meets a wealthy man, Brown, played by George Periolat, who gives her presents and entertains her. Carl tries to warn her of danger, and the result is a quarrel between them. Later Elsa herself is disillusioned concerning Brown, and turns again to Carl. There are other misunderstandings and complications so that the course of their love does not run too smoothly, but all ends well.

The play contains a number of very pretty scenes, for instance the fanciful cut-in scenes which show Carl's fancies as he plays. These are used several times, to show his growing interest in Elsa. At first the scenes are of beautiful gardens, forests and sea views. Later, in these dreams, Elsa is always present and when danger threatens her the pictures show her near flowers under which a serpent is coiled.

Louise Lester plays the role of Elsa's mother. Edna Frawley and Joseph Beaudry are also in the cast.

"The Race"

Victor Moore and Anita King in Lasky-Paramount.
Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE first two reels of "The Race" are given over to the Building of a romance which serves to instill into the remaining scenes which show Jimmie and Grace as auto drivers competing in a coast to coast run, a human interest which adds much color to the exciting scenes along the road. The romance is rather cumbersome in the beginning, and it is not very interesting, but once the race is commenced "The Race" becomes one of the most interesting and entertaining of pictures.

Hector Trunbull and Clinton H. Stagg are the authors of the story. One cannot enthuse over the story, but then the story in an offering of this kind is successful if it suggests a way for the production of thrilling incidents and spectacular scenes. Considered in this light "The Race" is a good story. We cannot recall the time when we looked at the screen with more strict attention than during the projection of the race scenes in this Lasky production.

Victor Moore is Jimmie Grayson, whose father puts him out in the world to earn his own living after getting his name in the papers. Jimmie secures a job in a garage through Grace Van Dyke, a pretty and attractive chauffeuress. Jimmie owes a friend ten thousand dollars, and it must be paid within a month. He and Grace's father perfect an invention for motors, but it will be three months before they receive any money for it. So to earn the ten thousand dollar prize for driving an auto from coast to coast Jimmie induces his father to permit him to pilot the Grayson car over the route.

Grace Van Dyke's father will also go to jail if he cannot pay nine thousand to a debtor, and Grace is hired to drive the machine entered by Grayson's rival in the auto manufacturing business. After happenings that thrill and others that are humorous, Grace wins the race; because Jimmie stands aside when he learns that she needs the money to keep her father out of prison. At the finish Jimmie is arrested, but the unexpected payment of royalties on the invention brings "The Race" to a happy close.

Anita King is a pleasing Grace and a daring driver. Mr. Moore loses no opportunity to add humor to the picture. The auto which plunges from a washed-out bridge produces an exciting effect, and there are numbers of other incidents which make "The Race" a real thrilling picture.

"Human Driftwood"

World Melodrama Plays in New York and Alaska.
Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE melodramatic situations on which "Human Driftwood" is built are the outcome of sordid schemes by underworld characters. The climax is reached when Myra informs Robert that the little girl he loves and wishes to take away from her present environment is her daughter and that he is the father, and the play throughout is in this same somber tone. The story is not as strongly melodramatic as developments of this kind are capable of, and that in truth is to the advantage of "Human Driftwood," for as it is the picture has not the depressing effect usual with such a story.

Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson are the featured players in a cast of uniform ability. The cast is stronger than the story and the acting is easily the most pleasing thing in this picture. Mr. Warwick is always commanding as Robert Hendricks. He makes Hendricks as convincing as possible. The fact that one wonders why Hendricks does not take little Velma away from the low dance hall where she is subject to the advances of rough men frequently made more brutal by the whiskey they drink at the place is one of the handicaps under which Mr. Warwick labors in portraying the part. Frances Nelson has little to do. She is pretty and appealingly sympathetic as Velma, but the story makes Velma too stupid or too lacking in spirit to leave her supposed aunt and the dancing platform of a notorious resort in Alaska. Velma therefore is a girl who impresses only because she is pretty and young, but we pity a girl who is innocent in the way Velma is innocent.

The first part of "Human Driftwood," which is in effect a prologue, tells of Hendrick's affair with a dancer named

Myra. Years later we see Robert an active worker in some sort of a reform society. He goes to Alaska in the interests of the society. By coincidence the very town he visits harbors a dance hall run by Myra. This resort is a menace to society. Myra succeeds in bringing a little girl just out of a convent to her establishment. She claims to be Velma's aunt. Hendricks and Velma soon decide to marry, but when Robert asks the consent of the woman who would force the little girl to be nothing more than a dancing girl, Myra says it is impossible because he is her father. In a gun fight at the hall Myra is mortally wounded and she then confesses that this is a falsehood. The news is carried to Robert just in time to stay him in his determination to take his own life, and the end is happy.

Alec B. Francis as Father Harrigan gives one of the best performances in the play. Lenore Harris as Myra and Albert S. Hart as Lief Bergson have the other important roles. The direction is by Emile Chautard. The production of the piece is in every way commendable.

'Salvation Joan"

Seven Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon. Released Through V. L. S. E. April 10. Reviewed by George W. Graves

WITH the talented favorite, Edna May, in the leading role and a select cast of Vitagraph players, among whom are Harry T. Morey, Dorothy Kelly, and L. Rogers Lytton, "Salvation Joan" is a production whose bigness is not limited to its footage. Although seven reels is long for any film which is not largely spectacular, this story has enough vitality to hold interest throughout its length.

A strong climax is a very noteworthy feature of the picture and the subsequent cleaning up of all troublesome elements puts a complete and satisfying termination to the film. The story, written by Marguerite Bertsch, has good screenable qualities which find their way to the front through the skillful direction of Wilfred North.

The settings have been prepared painstakingly. Some are especially characteristic of what they represent. One of these is the Salvation Army meeting in the slums; here are also seen some typical under-world characters. The breaking up of this meeting by a band of rowdies is a mob scene of realism.

Edna May's acting is natural and full of beauty. She is just as attractive and convincing in fashionable evening dress as in the homely attire of a Salvation Army worker.

Joan Crawford is a society girl whose love for humanity finds its outlet in the service of the Salvation Army. She is regarded by the poor and suffering of the slums as a sort of benevolent angel sent to lighten their burden. She suspects something wrong with the polished gentleman, Philip Ralston, to whom she is affianced, and breaks her engagement with him.

Joan gradually falls in love with "Bill," a stalwart young fellow who appears to be one of a group of gangsters. Ambassador Ellison, the husband of Joan's sister, Madeline, is called abroad on an important mission. During his absence, Ralston, to further his own ends, gets the unsuspecting young wife into his confidence and later into his power.

Ellison has with him a document, which in certain hands would cause international war. On returning, he places this document in a safe and has it guarded. Ralston proves to be an agent of the foreign country effected by this missive. He threatens to embarrass Madeline if his intents are exposed. The climax reaches its height when after a series of exciting adventures Ralston is caught in the act of robbing the safe by "Bill," who turns out to be John Hilton, an agent of the secret service. In the attempt to escape Ralston is killed. Joan and "Bill," now on more equal footing, find it easier for their romance to progress.

"Feathertop"

Gaumont-Mutual Masterpicture Released April 17 Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN THE latest Gaumont-Mutual Masterpicture the rich man's lot is compared with that of the farmer and the captain of a schooner which sails the South Seas and the balance is all in favor of the latter two, who find happiness amidst simplicity while the millionaire finds naught but discontent. "Feathertop" is based on Nathaniel Hawthorn's story of the same name, but the picture story is only slightly similar to the book.

The picture contains much that is pleasant but at no time is the story impressive. Marguerite Courtot as the little country girl who is enraptured by the glitter and glamour of wealthy society but who is finally awakened to its shallowness brings charm to the role. Miss Courtot is very fair to look upon and she centers the sympathy of the spectator in the character of Elsie.

The story tells of three brothers, each of whom in boyhood, decides to follow a different line of endeavor. Each realizes his ambition, one is a banker, one a horticulturist and the other sails the seas in his own craft. The banker is the only unhappy one. He is weary of the artificial life his friends lead and he longs to be away from it. The oldest brother, the farmer, has a pretty daughter. She visits with her uncle in the city and there receives much attention from a man whose name is Percy Morleigh.

Elsie has a misunderstanding with Ward, to whom she is engaged, on account of her friendship for Percy. After her father's death Elsie becomes a real society girl of the type depicted in "Feathertop." Ward is completely forgotten by her. The banker plans to disappear. Just why is a question. The banker leaves a will giving all his property to the sailor brother provided he will live in his home in New York. The captain is reluctant but to please his wife he agrees to try it for a time, and he proves to true friend to Elsie, reuniting her with Ward and the happiness she knew before her association with the idle rich. The ending is one of complete happiness, showing all the characters on the captain's good ship.

The captain is the best drawn character in this story and the role is admirably played by Gerald Griffin. His performance is one of the features of "Feathertop." Henry Vernot produced the picture. In the selection of settings and the amonnt of good effect he procured with the two little negro boys who wait upon the genial captain, Mr. Vernot's work is most praiseworthy.

John Reinhard is Percy Moreleigh, who, Elsie discovers, is nothing more than a straw man who wagered that he could kiss the "country Jane" any time he cared to and made a memorandum of it in his note book. This incident is about as foolish as everything else Percy does, so Mr. Reinhard can hope for no sympathy in a part like that. Charles Graham, Sydney Mason, Mathilda Baring, who, as usual, is very good, and James Levering complete an adequate cast.

"The Eternal Grind"

Famous Players-Paramount in Five Reels Starring Mary Pickford. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

THE greed for gain which is a passion in many people is set forth in its cruelest aspect in this film through the conduct of James Wharton, a wealthy factory owner, who, though knowing the miserable state of his employees, refuses to better their condition. Wharton threatens to disown his son, Owen, whose socialistic ideas lead him to investigate the sweat-shop, and turns a deaf ear to the evidence his son procures, showing that even death is often the result of his neglect. Among the unfortunates employed in Wharton's sweat-shop is Mary and her two sisters. Amy is a helpless invalid and Jane is morally weak.

Mary Pickford plays the part of an optimistic and determined girl, full of youthful vivacity in spite of the burdens she carries, and with a strength of character that is able to surmount both her own troubles and others'. The personal charm and tender appeal to the emotions which have endeared Mary Pickford to the multitude of her admirers permeate this offering with the same delightfulness of her other portrayals. Instead of falling a victim of circumstance, only to be helped out by human interposition or fate, she meets and conquers all untoward conditions entirely by her own efforts.

The story, written by William H. Clifford, is told in a direct comprehensible way. It has plenty of situations of good dramatic strength. John B. O'Brien, in his direction, shows that he had a firm grasp of the story and its salient points. A feature of the picture which it would not do to neglect is its bright, clear photography.

As the story progresses, we see how Amy, determined to get some joy out of her youth, falls into the snare and becomes the victim of a rich young sport who is none other than Wharton's dissipated son. Unknown to Amy, the latter meets Mary, and, intending to trap her, he plans to throw Amy over. A stirring scene is enacted when Mary forces the man to marry Amy at the point of a revolver. Mary appeals to Wharton to help her invalid sister, Jane, but he angrily refuses.

Wharton's other son, Owen, a friend of the struggling poor, while investigating conditions in his father's sweat-shop, meets and falls in love with Mary. Wharton warns his son that if he marries her he will cast him off.

The rotten floor of the shop caves through and Owen is mortally injured. While he is in a frenzied delirium, the doctor tells the factory owner that if the boy does not see his sweetheart at once, he will die. Then Wharton races to the slums after Mary and pleads with her to come with him. But she is defiant, and, in spite of her love for Owen she confronts him with, "You wouldn't help me to save my sister. Why should I save your son?" The back-bone of Wharton's stubborn sin is at last broken and he agrees to pay his employees fair wages. After he has conformed to her wishes, Mary speeds home with him and arrives in time to save Owen. The story ends with a happy culmination of Mary's romance with Owen, while the other son repents and returns to Amy.

"The Invisible Enemy"

Anti-Tuberculosis Film Offered by E-K-O Film Company. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE E-K-O Film Company's anti-tuberculosis propaganda offering, "The Invisible Enemy," was shown to social workers, members of the medical fraternity and the press at the Russell Sage Foundation, New York, on April 3. This five-reel production, of which the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis is reported to have stated to be "a real contribution to the educational campaign against tuberculosis," was staged in California and, according to present arrangements, will be marketed on the states rights basis.

Primarily, "The Invisible Enemy" is a plea for a concerted and intelligent crusade against the white plague throughout the country. The producers have made an attempt to do this through the dramatic possibilities of the screen. In the last reel the amount of good being accomplished by the Red Cross Society, whose income is through the seals which they sell, is told about in some titles and a number of scenes taken in one of the Society's stations are given. "The Invisible Enemy" is the longest film thus far presented whose subject is the white plague, its causes and the manner in which to guard against it.

The story deals with characters or groups of characters in different environments. In the city there is the poor family residing in unhealthy tenements, and the rich family whose luxuries, or some of them, are paid for with the rent from the unsanitary tenements, while another character is a man who lives in the country, on a ranch, with a sumptuous house and acres of rich farm land. In the beginning of the story we see the Duryea family. Mrs. Duryea is a victim of the white plague and she spends the money her two daughters earn for medicine prepared by Dr. Quack, who, through the advertising columns of newspapers, lures the people who are ignorant about their condition to his office with promises which he cannot fulfill.

There are two daughters. Faith works in a laundry and is healthy and Hope, the younger, has contracted the disease. Both Hope and the mother die. Faith meets the son of Mr. Webster, who is part owner of the tenement, and after a short acquaintance they are married. Muriel, Jack Webster's sister, is engaged to Haggerty, her father's business partner. Through the efforts of Dr. De La Roche, a tireless worker in the cause of humanity against tuberculosis, she finally persuades Webster, who is wealthy and can do a great deal to help the sufferers, to use his influence and some of his money in a fight against the menacing white plague. In the end Muriel breaks her engagement to the villainous Haggerty and marries the doctor.

The players who appear in the picture are E. K. Oswald, who is a pretty and pleasing Muriel, Leon Kent, Lucille Young, Frederick Vroom, Jack Cummings and William Parsons. If "The Invisible Enemy" will teach people anything that will aid in fighting tuberculosis it will then accomplish a very great good.

Negro Conference Condemns Films

At the third annual session of the Delaware Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Philadelphia a short time ago, the 500 negro clergymen and laymen present condemned motion pictures which were alleged to slander the colored race.

"There ought to be an organization in our midst to fight the slander against our race which is continually cropping out in motion pictures such as 'The Birth of a Nation,' and in dramas and books of all kinds," stated the Reverend R. E. Jones, addressing the conference.

The question was, however, laid on the table and no further action was taken.

"The Last Adventure"

Three-Reel Essanay Drama Released April 15. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AFTER an unpleasant beginning, this play becomes interesting, and it ends satisfactorily. The three important roles are filled in a pleasing manner by Lillian Drew, John Lorenz and Edward Arnold. John Lorenz is Timothy Hayden, who appears first at his club where he discusses the beauty of a girl supposed to be his cousin. He shows his friends her picture and promises to introduce them. Then we meet the girl, Beatrice Clemmons, played by Miss Drew. She is a musician, a harpist. Although she dislikes the role, she is a tool of Hayden's and is persuaded to encourage the wealthy friends whom he introduces, and when they give her beautiful gifts, to turn them over to him.

Then Arnold Burton, played by Edward Arnold, enters the story. He is a wealthy miner and Hayden promises that if Beatrice will marry Burton, to divorce him later, he will let that he "her last adventure." She succeeds in attracting Burton, but, contrary to her own plans, falls in love with him. She does not wish to deceive him and at first refuses to marry him. At last, afraid of Hayden, she consents and they are married.

When Hayden asks her to fulfil the rest of the bargain by revealing her true character to her husband and demanding a large sum of money for his release, she refuses. There is a stormy scene which Burton interrupts. Then Beatrice tells the whole story, of Hayden's meeting her when she lived in another city, of his promise to aid her in her musical career, and of his refusal to marry her, telling her it would injure her advancement. Burton learns also of the agreement under which she married him. But instead of turning from her, he defends the girl, and forces Hayden to leave. Hayden, threatening Burton with a revolver, is grasped by the butler and thrown down the stairs. He is killed in the fall, and Beatrice is freed.

The story is clearly and effectively presented. The interest is sustained throughout. Edward Arnold as the millionaire is the dominating character in the play.

"The Flames of Johannis"

Nance O'Neil Plays Dual Role in Lubin-V. L. S. E. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE Suderman play in which Nance O'Neil appeared on the speaking stage under the title of "The Fires of St. John" has been adapted to the screen by the Lubin Company. Given an American locale this play dealing with passionate love serves as a good photoplay vehicle for Miss O'Neil who as Marika, the foundling and her thieving, depraved mother, the gypsy Zirah, has several opportunities for intense emotional acting.

The dual role calls for some double exposure scenes and these are splendidly handled. Miss O'Neil acts both characters convincingly. Zirah she makes a bedraggled old dame, showing the ravages of a life of debauchery, while Marika is a young woman of stately charm and admirable spirit. Miss O'Neil is real and vivid in portraying Zirah's struggling, frightful death. But in acting the part of a woman who tosses and beats the air in a frenzied death struggle so realistically and with such startling detail it is a question if the actress has expended her skilful, telling efforts to good purpose, because the average spectator finds it too depressing to be classed as entertainment, nor is it art.

"The Flames of Johannis" was produced by Edgar Lewis from the scenario by Alfred Hickman. This offering is more a visualized novel than it is a drama. The full strength of this play, it would seem would be realized through characterization. In the treatment it has received here is not notable for its development of character. The picture has a strong appeal. In every way it is capable of holding the sympathy of the spectator.

Marika is the central character. She is the illegitimate daughter of Zirah, and was adopted in infancy by a prosperous farmer. When her girlhood sweetheart, the farmer's nephew, returns after a long absence, Marika, though still in love with him, shuns him. He then asks Vogel's daughter to marry him. On the eve of the feast of St. John Marika gives expression to her burning love for George and begs him to take her into his arms. The next morning George is determined to break his troth with Gertrude but Marika dissuades him. She learns that Zirah is her mother and goes to her, arriving at the prison where her mother is confined in time to witness Zirah's death, the horrible death of a victim of drink, who up to the last moment begs her daughter to give her whiskey. A happy ending is suggested. The last scene shows the pastor awaiting Marika outside the prison.

In support of Miss O'Neil, Victor Sutherland, Ethel

Tully, George Clarke, Irving Dillon and Eleanor Barry are well suited to their parts and render capable performances. The production is striking and, like the photography, leaves nothing to be desired. Mr. Lewis produced the picture in Thomasville, Ga., and in settings and the direction of the action he has made "The Flames of Johannis" impressive.

"The Heart's Tribute"

Three-Reel Lubin Drama Released April 20. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A PLAY which gives the impression of being very true to life is this drama which Rene Plaissett produced from a story by Daniel Carson Goodman. Good acting and well selected scenes tell in a truthful, pathetic fashion a story which in its main points is only too common, as any newspaper will show. While the play deals with evil, it is so skillfully presented, the sorrowful consequences so clearly shown, that the play is an effective lesson.

Much of the strength of the play is due to the acting of June Daye in the role of Dora Mills. The characterization is very consistent and clear. While the other roles are all well played, Dora stands out above them in vividness and pathos. Miss Daye has given an especially sincere portrayal, one which remains in the memory.

The selection and settings of the scenes rank next in interest. The settings are realistic and the minor characters well drawn, the office in which Dora works and her associates there, for instance, her home, and later the scenes in the dance hall. Eleanor Barry and Bernard Siegel give two fine character sketches as Dora's mother and father.

E. K. Lincoln appears as Ralph Taylor, the wealthy young son of Dora's employer just home from college. He meets Dora one night at a dance hall, in which he chances to go with a couple of his chums. Although he is engaged to a society girl, Florence Lalor, a role into which Helen Green fits well, he calls upon Dora frequently, giving an assumed name. She falls in love with him and he promises to marry her, but returns to college and forgets her.

Then, while Ralph is married to Florence and is beginning his business career, Dora is fighting her battle alone. She is forced to give up her work. Her father turns her away and her mother is powerless to help her. After her baby is born, she again goes to work in the Taylor offices, and there one day she accidentally learns who her betrayer was and that he is married. Later she is even sent to his home, when his wife asks for a stenographer. She sees his happy home life, with his wife and their baby, and is driven almost insane. She meets Ralph again, who tries to buy her silence. She goes away, only to return with her own neglected baby. Then the young wife and Ralph's father learn the story. And as a result the wife turns against Ralph and protects Dora.

The story is sad, cruel. Even the ending, which is scarcely an ending at all, is sad. But there is nothing in the least offensive in it, because of the skill in handling the theme. It is simply the tragedy of one girl, Dora, whom June Daye has made very real.

"The Iron Claw"

Chapter Seven of the Pathe Serial, "The Hooded Helper." Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A MEETING between the Iron Claw and the "mysterious righter of wrongs," or the Laughing Mask brings about a highly interesting devolpment and coupled with the scenes in which Manly frustrates the plan to kill Margery and his struggles with an unknown enemy, it makes "The Hooded Helper" one of the most entertaining chapters released so far.

In the preceding chapter Margery had cause to conclude that her own mother was the Laughing Mask. In this she was wrong and we feel that she is again mistaken when she, in this release, expresses her belief that her new acquaintance, Count Espares, is her mysterious benefactor. Margery tells Manly that the hooded man who aided in the escape of the butler could not possibly be Espares, and the energetic young secretary looks rather puzzled when Margery says this.

The Laughing Mask recovers the map in the opening scenes. He discovers that Legar and his men are about to make prisoners of Margery and her mother and hurries to their house. There he makes a copy of the map in disappearing ink and offers it to Legar for Margery's release. The Iron Claw agrees after a debate with his men, during which the Mask is locked in a closet with his chauffeur.

While Legar investigates the map he commands his able opponent to remain in the room and when he learns that he has been tricked he seizes the Laughing Mask. But when he removes the mask Legar finds he has been tricked still further for his captive is the chauffeur, who changed clothes with his master while they were locked in the closet.

The rest of the action is laid in Golden's home, where he is reconciled with Margery's mother. Count Espares is a visitor there. He has made a present to Golden of a suit of armor. This armor nearly causes Margery's death, but Manly intervenes, shooting the dagger from the suddenly animated hand, operated by a concealed person. Manly suspects Count Espares, but Margery does not share in this conclusion.

In acting, production and photography, "The Hooded Helper" is up to the standard of its predecessors in this continued photoplay, while the incidents visualized are, if anything, more interesting than the last few chapters. The interior settings of Golden's home are so tasteful that they are a source of pleasure every time the action is placed there.

"April"

American Mutual Masterpicture Released April 10. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A PRETTY picture, which contains an interesting story is made still more attractive by the charm of the featured player, Helene Rosson. As "April," Miss Rosson has a role calling for unaffected sweetness and winsomeness and she is able to meet the requirements fully. "April" will win her many friends.

The complications of the story are plausibly presented and are interesting. The settings are attractive, the views of the mountains and woodlands very lovely. April, the supposed daughter of Tim and Martha Fagan, mountaineers of Kentucky, is an imaginative, sensitive girl, out of place among the rough backwards people. In ragged dress, feet bare, hair flying, she is presented throughout the play. A mass of uncombed hair has become almost conventional for this type of character. Miss Rosson would have been as attractive and her role of an eighteen year old girl more realistic if she had had her hair combed.

A discharged nurse kidnaps the baby daughter of Judge De Voe, taking her to the home of Martha Fagan, her friend. Before she has a chance to tell of the child's parentage, she is killed in an accident. Martha, whose own baby has just died, while her husband, Tim, a brutal mountaineer, is on a hunting trip, takes the child in place of her own, telling no one of the substitution.

April, as she grows up, shows refinement and a love of beauty, characteristics which antagonize her foster father. Doctor Jenkins alone sympathizes with the child, and brings her books, among them a volume of poems by a young writer, Jerry Gordon, who later visits the mountain region and meets April. E. Forrest Taylor has a very fitting role as the romantic young poet. Gordon falls in love with the girl, and when there is danger of her being forced into marriage with Casper, a mountaineer whom she dislikes, he marries her. The news of this marriage shocks his aristocratic friends, the De Voe's, who visit him at his camp. April, overhearing part of the conversation, runs away. In the meantime, Martha, dying, tells Doctor Jenkins April's story, and gives him the baby clothes which she had worn and which are marked with her name. So the De Voe's learn that the poet's bride is their own daughter, and the story ends with a happy reconciliation.

Donald MacDonald directed the play, which Clifford Howard wrote. The various characters are clearly drawn. Louise Lester wins sympathy as Martha Fagan. Harry Von Meter and Harry McCabe play Tim Fagan and Casper, the mountaineers. Contrasted with them is the kind hearted Doctor Jenkins, played by Charles Newton. Al Fordyce and Marie Van Tassell are the Judge and Mrs. De Voe.

FRIARS TO FROLIC

More News About the "Whirlwind Tour" of Eighteen Cities to Be Made by a Company of Stage Stars

Twenty—Authors—Twenty. Count 'em!

That's the way the billboards might read advertising the great "All-Star Friars' Frolic of 1916."

The Friars' Club of New York, which is composed of actors, are to build a new clubhouse, and for the purpose of raising the necessaries, are to give a whirlwind show tour of eighteen of the large cities of the east. The opening performance is to be held at the New Amsterdam theater, New York, on Sunday, May 28, and the trip will begin immediately.

It is claimed that twenty authors will work on the thrilling melodrama which will be a part of the bill. There will be "three carloads of scenery and properties." Irving Berlin, the writer of popular rags, has written his first one-act revue for the tour, and Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock are to furnish the libretto. The last Friars' Frolic, in 1911, introduced one of Berlin's first hits, "Alexander's Ragtime Band." Albert Spalding, violinist, will be one of the galaxy of entertainers to make the tour.

The Friars will frolic in the following cities: Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Rochester, Boston and Providence.

A. L. Erlanger is the booking agent and advisory director of the frolic, Sam Harris is general supervisor, and George M. Cohan is general stage director.

A coming Metro—"The Come Back," with Lockwood and Allison.

Sifted From the Studios

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Robert B. Mantell, Genevieve Hamper and their company, who have been working on feature pictures at the William Fox studios in Kingston, Jamaica, for the past four months, have returned to New York. Among them are Stuart Holmes, Louise Rial, Genevieve Blinn, Henry Leone, Claire Whitney and Walter Miller.

A big two-masted schooner was burned off the coast of Maine during a windstorm at four degrees below zero for a scene in "A Modern Thelma," which John Adolfi directed for William Fox. The schooner was loaded with 160 gallons of kerosene oil, twenty barrels of tar and hundreds of bundles of dry laths.

Tom Burroughs, of the William Fox players, has a farm on Staten Island where he cultivates violets.

Violet Mersereau and William Garwood, after appearing in one or two plays together, will again be featured separately in Universal photoplays.

The Universal Company plans to release a new brand of plays, "Butterfly Photoplays."

Director Jay Hunt of the Universal Company has completed another animal photoplay, a two-reeler, "The Jungle Hero."

Mary Fuller objects to being an Indian. In a contest now being held for a prize scenario for Miss Fuller, there is a specification that she is not to be cast in an Indian role.

William H. Tooker had a narrow escape from being burned to death during the burning of the ship in "A Modern Thelma," the William Fox play featuring Vivian Martin and Harry Hilliard.

Robert Leonard directed and played the leading man in "The Crippled Hand," a five-reel Universal comedy featuring Ella Hall.

Director Henry Vernot entertained the principals who worked in his screen story, "The Dead Alive," at dinner recently. In the party were Marguerite Courtot, Sydney Mason, Henry Pemberton, James Levering and W. J. Butler.

Mayor William H. Meyers of South Jacksonville, Fla., and two members of the Jacksonville Board of Trade, played "extras" for a scene in "The Quality of Faith," which Richard Garrick directed for the Gaumont Company.

Rose Tapley is to appear in another comedy with Frank Daniels, one of the "Mr. Jack" series which C. Jay Williams is directing.

"A Caliph of the New Bagdad" will be Vitagraph's release as a Broadway Star feature of April 22, with Leah Baird in the leading role. Van Dyke Brooke, who directed, plays an important part. Others in the cast are Templer Saxe, Edward Elkas, Harry Fisher, Adele DeGarde and Edwinna Robbins.

Ralph W. Ince is preparing to film an eight-reel feature at the Vitagraph Bay Shore studios.

Dorothy Kelly is to be seen in a one-reel drama with little Bobby Connelly.

Einar Linder, who appears in "The Eternal Sapho," with Theda Bara, was born in Copenhagen. He has appeared in the support of Sarah Bernhardt, Duse, Monet and Sully.

Viclet Mersereau is working on a five-reel picture, "The Experiment," announced as "intensely dramatic."

Dorothy Phillips plays the lead in "Midnight Madness," a two-reel Universal play. Stanley Walpole plays opposite.

Mary Fuller, having completed "Thrown to the Lions," is now playing in "The Huntress," from the novel by Vera Hunter.

Hobart Henley, recovered from injuries received in the "Graft" serial, is at the eastern Universal studios, playing lead in "The Other Man," a two-reeler. Irene Hunt is leading lady.

Sidney Bracy, who was the mysterious butler in "The Million Dollar Mystery," and who is now with Universal, appears as Luigi in "Elusive Isabel," the first of the new Florence Lawrence features.

"The Pursuit of Patricia," the first Universal serial to be made in the east, will star Edith Roberts. Robert Hill will direct. There will be ten episodes. Reginald Wright Kauffman and Hugh Weir wrote the story.

King Baggot and his director, Henry Otto, are both natives of St. Louis and appeared together in amateur theatricals in their home town.

Percy Richards, who plays opposite Violet Mersereau in the Universal Red Feather play, "Autumn," was formerly aide-de-camp to the King of Sweden.

"The Yaqui," the Bluebird photoplay, is a story of Mexico. There are scenes of life in the household of a Mexican planter, and scenes of Indian life and customs.

Bertram Bracken, a photoplay director on the Pacific Coast for the past six years, is now directing Theda Bara's plays in the eastern Fox studios. The first play will be released shortly.

Ilean Hume, now with the Fox players, is a native of Toronto, Canada.

Ormi Hawley, who is now being starred with Rockcliffe Fellowes in Fox plays, has a new cerise racing car.

Edward Montagne's latest effort in comedy is being filmed as another of the "Freddy" series. William Dangman plays the lead, directed by Frank Currier. George O'Donnell has a good part.

Ralph W. Ince has begun work on a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, with Lucille Lee Stuart and Huntly Gordon in the leads.

Mayme Kelso, who plays a character role in "Slander," is a former musical comedy star.

W. S. Davis, who directed Bertha Kalich in "Slander," also took a small part, that of a pickpocket, in the play.

J. Alber Hall, in Jacksonville with the Serial Film Company, is not the Albert Hall of vaudeville fame.

World Film Corp.: It is stated, with more or less authority, that the World Film Corp., Equitable Film Corp. and the Paragon Films, Inc., will be taken over by Wm. A. Brady, and, in addition, he will exercise supervision over the output of the Premo Film Co., the Frohman Amusement Corp., the Triumph Film Corp. and other affiliated concerns. Brady's arrangements are also in progress on Broadway, New York, for a motion picture theater with a seating capacity of over 5,000 persons. This is the only one of the many consolidation and combination rumors that we attach any credence to, as Ben B. Hampton denies emphatically the many things that have been credited to him, stating he had only been conducting informal discussions. Better things can now be expected from both the Equitable Film and the World Film corporations.

New York Motion Picture Corp.: From the Pacific coast it is reported the New York Motion, Thos. Ince, Griffith studio and Aitken's interest will be merged into a manufacturing combination.

Triangle Film Corp.: Reports from New York are not very favorable leading one to believe the bankers back of this proposition have more to do with the actuating policies than ever before. Stock continues weak.

Mutual Film Corp.: Was in good demand last week and the expectations of an advance in the common seem to be shared by all of the stockholders. With the proportion of undivided profits applicable to common, as shown by the audited Undivided Profit Account as of January 18—amounting to over 7%—plus the estimated earnings applicable to common, to be derived from the Chaplin series (which one of the managements puts at 24%)—or a total of 31%—the common, we are advised will be put on a satisfactory dividend basis in July or August.

Mme. Kalich is reading manuscripts for her second Fox photoplay, "Slander" having been completed.

Kittens Reichart has recovered from her attack of measles and gone back to work in a new picture with Stuart Holmes and Dorothy Bernard.

Mme. Anna Pavlowa is writing a story for a feature play in which she will appear for the Universal Film Company, which made "The Dumb Girl of Portici." The story will be laid in Russia, the heroine being a student in the Imperial School of Dancing. A young nihilist is the hero, converted by the present war to loyalty to his sovereign.

Lisle Leigh, who plays Helene's aunt in the Bertha Kalich play, "Slander," was for years a leading woman in stock companies.

Bertha Kalich's pet superstition is that the number eight brings her luck.

The filming of scenes for the William Fox-Annette Kellermann picture, under Herbert Brenon's direction, which was begun last August, will be completed within the next few weeks and the work of assembling begun. The work brought to the director's attention many new players who will be featured in other Fox dramas.

Karvo Poloskova, the Russian dancer, was engaged for the big ballroom scene in "Love's Toll," a Lubin V. L. S. E. feature written by Daniel Carson Goodman. The scene was taken on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia and the members of three musical comedy companies served as extras.

The Lubin Company is for "preparedness." It has a battalion of 300 rough riders and a company of infantry, all thoroughly trained and seasoned, through their experience in producing war dramas.

Clay M. Greene is to produce a new comedy series for the Lubin Company.

Paul C. Hurst and Thomas Lingham, formerly with Kalem, appear in the Signal Film Company's production of "Whispering Smith," which J. P. McGowan is directing and in which he plays the name role. Helen Holmes, Belle Hutchinson, Leo Maloney, F. M. Van Norman, S. Appel, N. Z. Wood, William Brunton, Chance Ward, C. V. Wells and William Rogers are in the cast.

Juanita Hanson is playing the feminine lead in the new American serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," which George Sargent is directing. Thomas Chatterton is the hero.

Stella Razeto has a new dog to replace the lamented "Paddy Wuffen."

Gretchen Hartman and the other members of the Biograph company have received notice, "with regrets."

Hal Cooley is now working in a five-reel picture, "The Courtesan," directed for the American Company by Arthur Maude.

George Melford is directing Fanny Ward in a five-reel play written by Willard Mack and Clinton Stagg. In it she appears in Salvation Army costume. Jack Dean plays opposite.

The biggest scene in the five-reel picture, "The Highest Bidder," being made by William F. Russell's company for the American Film Company, will be taken at the edge of the Grand Canyon of the Santa Ynez range near Santa Barbara at a point overlooking a river two thousand feet below.

The Vitagraph studios at Hollywood have a Victrola and the players practice dance steps while waiting between scenes. Anne Schaefer, Corrine Griffith, Jack Mower and Webster Campbell in particular are adepts, while George Holt attends to the Victrola.

Rhea Mitchell, because of the color of her hair, is known by the nickname, "Ginger."

Lillian Hayward of the Selig players is a crack shot with rifle and pistol and has captured many prizes in marksmanship contests.

Jack Pickford will be featured in "The Hard Way," being produced by T. N. Heffron at the Selig studios.

Bessie Barriscale's next vehicle will give her a more or less comedy part.

William Duncan plays the part of a young detective in the next Rollin S. Sturgeon feature.

William Wolbert is at present directing a three-reeler by William King. Jack Mower, Corinne Griffith and Anne Schaefer have the leads.

The Universal serial, "Graft," is completed, cut, assembled and shipped, and Richard Stanton, director and leading man, can take that twenty-four hour sleep he promised himself.

Lena Baskette, the nine-year-old dancer with the Universay Company, received as a present from her father, two dogs, a Boston bull and a white collie. She has named them "Theda" and "Bara."

Louise Lester is the guest, once a month, of a "Calamity Ann" club of twelve women in a foothill town in the Sierra Madre range. To be a member one must have lived in the mountains five years. All of them claim to have known at some time a character like "Calamity Ann."

Ashton Dearholt, who celebrated his first anniversary with the American Film Company, at that time refused an offer of a junior partnership in a Milwaukee company of which his father is president. One year ago he agreed to accept this if his first year in pictures was not a success. He will continue with the American Company.

Douglas Fairbanks is frequently called upon to display his various athletic stunts to entertain the visitors at the Fine Arts studios.

Mitchell Scanland, a newcomer to Balboa studios, comes from Montana. She received her education in the East.

Marie Empress, Balboa's new leading woman, has a pet dog, Hercules, so tiny that when used in a picture recently it failed to "register."

Bessie Barriscale has a most beautiful dressing room at the Culver City studios. Tapestries, walls and furnishings are of a delicate rose pink.

Edna Maison, who recently left the Universal company, has been quite ill. She will take a rest of several weeks before signing with any other company.

Neva Gerber is working in a feature play at the San Mateo studios of the B. and L. Company.

Edward Sloman took his company of American players, led by Franklin Ritchie and Winnifred Greenwood, to the Imperial Valley for scenes in the five-reeler, "The Reclamation," by Kenneth Clark.

George Holt, William Duncan and Webster Campbell have excellent roles in the Cleveland Moffett story which Rollin S. Sturgeon will direct. Nell Shipman will make her second appearance with Mr. Sturgeon in this, while Corinne Griffith also has a good role.

Rhea Mitchell entertained Fay Tincher at her bungalow at Santa Barbara recently. Miss Mitchell has just finished playing lead in "The Overcoat," in which she enacts a "tough" role.

There is a report that Henry Otto, the Universal director who went east to direct King Baggot, will come West soon with the famous star.

Gretchen Hartman is undecided whether to remain in the West or go East when she leaves Biograph.

Jumping across a forty-seven foot ravine in a Maxwell car is one of the feats successfully accomplished by Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hanson in an episode for "The Submarine Pirate."

Two especially beautiful horses, "Duchess" and "Dixie," will be used by J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes in "Whispering Smith."

Jack Dillon, director of Vogue-Mutual comedies, is now working on a hospital picture. He has his usual cast, and in addition, Rena Rogers.

Murdock MacQuarrie, the Signal director, is making a Mutual Masterpicture of "Nancy's Birthright," and is playing a prominent role. Edythe Sterling, Francis MacDonald, Millard Wilson and Norbert Miles are in the cast.

Margaret Gibson appears as an Indian girl in the Horsley Mutual Masterpicture, "The Leopard's Bride." William J. Clifford and Nan Christy have important roles. The Bostock animals are also featured.

Tom Mix, Selig's cowboy star, gives this advice on training horses: "Never feed a horse sugar to coax him to do anything. It spoils the animal. Be kind but firm."

Hershall Mayall, Howard Hickman and George Fisher have especially strong roles in the big Ince production, "Civilization," first announced as "He Who Returned."

In "The Silent Battle," J. Warren Kerrigan plays the role of a man who struggles with his love for drink.

Cleo Madison is directing a two-reel Universal photoplay. "The Emissary," in which she plays a very dramatic role.

Bertram Grassby is playing the role of a young English lord, a light comedy part, with Director Reynolds at the Universal plant. Grassby prefers character sketching to "straight" leads.

Donald Crisp, the producer of Clune's "Ramona," appears in the photoplay as the man who shoots Allesandro, a small role but one which stands out.

Fritzi Brunette is not French. She is American, was born in Savannah, Ga., and educated in New York City. She has never appeared in the spoken drama.

Edward J. Peil of the Selig players was struck by an automobile while crossing a street in Los Angeles recently and tossed three feet in the air. He escaped without serious injury.

The football teams of the Alhambra, Cal., high school staged on exciting game recently for the big scene in the college comedy, "Cupid's Touch-down," featuring Jack Pickford, directed by Frank Beal.

The latest dance is the "Edith Ecstasy," originated by the Pal's Club of Los Angeles and named for Edith Johnson, Selig star.

Myrtle Stedman is said to have given a very delightful performane in "Pasquale," in which she played opposite George Beban.

Johnny Sheehan, the comedian with the American Company, paid a flying visit to his friends in Los Angeles over the week end.

SOUTHERN NOTES

By William Noble

The Arcade theater at Lemon City, Florida, is being remodeled and repainted and soon will be an up-to-date picture house.

Frank Miller announces that he will spend $7,000 in remodeling the Modjeska theater at Augusta, Ga., and will add 400 new seats.

J. L. Saul is erecting a new motion picture theater at Winder, Ga., to be managed by L. Love when completed.

Mrs. E. C. Hightower and son have moved into the new crystal theater at Dublin, Ga. Triangle and other feature film pictures are shown.

O. P. Hall, manager of the Fox Film Corporation in Atlanta, Ga., announces that his company will soon erect its own building in Atlanta.

B. Lee Smith has taken over the management of the Strand theater at Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Smith was formerly manager of the Georgian at Atlanta.

W. T. Murray will soon open a 1,000 chair moving picture theater in Atlanta, Ga. The house will cost about $50,000, and will open June 1.

Edward Ward, manager of the Majestic theater at Ada, Okla., died suddenly at that place April 4. Mr. Ward was 55 years old and formerly resided at Ardmore, Okla.

An ordinance regulating picture shows, vaudeville and places of amusement, defining the character of shows permitted, prohibiting shows tending to corrupt private morals, and placing the power of censorship in Commissioner of Public Safety, and authorizing assistant censors, was passed by the city council of Lawton, Okla., April 1. Violation of the city ordinances is punishable by both fine and jail imprisonment.

A moving picture board of censors to cover Muskogee county, Okla., to be appointed by the county commissioners, is a near possibility. The matter has been put up to the board of commissioners by citizens who are interested in elevating the moral tone of the picture shows.

R. G. Alle, who recently took over the management of the Palm theater at Raleigh, N. C., announces that he will expend $4,000 in remodeling and improvements. The Palm theater is to be made strictly modern.

The Paramount theater at Winston-Salem, N. C., has discontinued vaudeville, tabloid and stock, and will show pictures exclusively in future.

The Broadway theater in Castonia, N. C., recently installed a Seeburg unite orchestra, and the new music is increasing the attendance.

S. B. Ford has purchased the interest of the Pictureland theater at Crystal Springs, Miss., and is now managing the house.

Levy and Sudduth will soon open a

RELIABLE GROWS FAST

About a year ago a couple of young men bought the states rights of Wisconsin and Iowa for "The Christian." Their success was so marked, due to their method of square dealing and perfect service, that from one feature and small desk room they have eventually taken the entire front of the eighth floor in the Schiller building. The leading spirit of this enterprise is that versatile young producer, actor, dramatist and exchange manager, I. Maynard Schwartz. The name of the concern headed by this young man is the Reliable Feature Film Company.

Mr. Schwartz has had twelve years' experience in the theatrical game, where he has written a number of song hits, as well as a number of theatrical productions.

The Reliable has developed into an important factor in the film field with about fifty of the largest features on their list. To judge from the demand upon the features controlled by this concern, it is very likely that within six months they will even outgrow their new quarters.

new $15,000 motion picture theater at Natchitoches, La. The new theater will be strictly modern.

W. H. Franklin is opening a new $10,000 moving picture house at Leesvilla, La. The new house is modern and up-to-date.

J. J. de Praslin will soon open new picture houses at Lake Charles and Crowley, La. Both houses are to be modern.

The name of the Picto theater at Chattanooga, Tenn., has been changed to the Alhambra and the seating capacity increased to 700.

The Alcazar theater at Chattanooga, Tenn., is being remodeled and enlarged and seating capacity increased to 1,600.

The Crescent theater at Chattanooga, Tenn., has had its name changed to the Imperial, and remodeled with 300 additional seating capacity.

Read's theater at Morristown, Tenn., which recently burned, is to be rebuilt soon.

W. K. Sheppard, a pioneer exhibitor in southern Texas, has sold the Dreamland theater to D. J. Young.

The new Southern Theater Equipment Company, at Dallas, Texas, has been taken over by the R. D. Thrash Film Company, the oldest independent supply house in the Southwest. The Southern has offices in Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans and Dallas. Wm. Oldknow is the new general manager. R. D. Thrash will manage the Dallas office.

Sam Rosso has opened a new picture house at Woodville, Miss.

J. C. Clemmons, manager of the Elks theater, Port Arthur, Texas, recently produced a film picture at that place, which filled the Elks theater to capacity business recently, and a return engagement is booked. The picture, "Won From the Flames," was staged by Hugh V. Jamieson, formerly of the Edison camera staff, officiating at the crank. The characters were Mrs. E. C. McMillan, Dr. E. P. Shaw, Jas. L. Boyd, Mrs. J. C. Field, Mrs. Geo. Barker, Mrs. Mary Eager, Kent Watson, C. W. Bradley and Jas. T. Denton.

The proposed city ordinance to permit motion pictures to show on Sunday at Fort Worth, Texas, was ratified in that city April 1 when a special election was held. The vote for Sunday shows was 3,811 and 2,818 against, a majority of 993 for Sunday shows. The city council on April 4 declared the ordinance operative, and Sunday shows in Fort Worth, Texas, are legal as far as the city laws are concerned.

MORENO MISREPRESENTED

The reports of the disappearance of Ethel Oakes of San Francisco a week ago with a Miss Soto who claimed to be a sister of Antonio Moreno, misrepresented to be a moving picture actor in New York, have gained currency in local moving picture circles, and have displeased the friends of Antonio M. Moreno, the prominent Vitagraph star.

Antonio M. Moreno has requested that it be made known for the benefit of his friends that the person mentioned in the reports is no one he knows anything about. The person is an imposter, as there have been several criminals of late assuming that name and operating in various parts of the country. Mr. Moreno has not been to San Francisco and has no sister who has been there. He knows of no one who answers the description of Miss Soto.

BRITISH TRADE GOSSIP

J. Simmonds, representing the World and Equitable Film Corporations of America, has arrived in London to study conditions on this side of the Atlantic.

H. Winik arrived in London from the United States recently.

The Pathe Freres found the Yorkshire ground so fertile for "The Exploits of Elaine," that they are giving much attention to this territory for the newer serial, "The Girl of Lost Island."

Cinemas in the Furness district report excellent business. The working people are receiving big wages, and pictures form their favorite entertainment.

The vogue of Chaplin still continues in Hull and the Gaiety theater recently had a full Chaplin week.

The invalid soldiers in Nottingham general hospital are being provided with motion picture entertainments. Over 150 wounded soldiers viewed the last pictures shown.

W. E. Alabaster succeeds J. Prior as managing director of the Magnet Film Company.

Sir John Hare is pleasing audiences in the picture version of "Caste."

R. C. Buchanan of Edinburgh will handle the Red Seal Selig drama, "The Ne'er Do Well," for his territory.

A new company, "The Film Company of Ireland, Ltd.," has been registered in Dublin, the first directors being James L. Sullivan and Henry M. FitzGibbon. They will manufacture films of every description and engage in the sale and exchange of pictures.

POPULAR PATHE MANAGER

C. H. Holah, manager of the Chicago Pathe office in the Mallers Building, has had a long and varied experience in the moving picture field. Since the beginning of moving pictures, Mr. Holah has always been a leader in his line of work. He opened one of the first offices in the United States for the Eclectic Feature Film Co., in Cleveland, and later was given charge of the Pittsburg office. In a short period he increased the business over three hundred per cent and decreased expenses in almost the same ratio.

Last November Mr. Holah took charge of the Chicago Pathe office and through his ability as well as his wonderful knack for making and keeping friends, he has placed this office above all others. Recently he has opened a branch exchange in Milwaukee and placed his former assistant manager in charge. Mr. Holah has made a host of friends in the Chicago territory and has all the exhibitors "with him."

"Split Reel" News for Theater Men

THE world's greatest athletes will be shown in the Athletic Feature film which is to be released later in the month. It will show famous wrestlers, boxers, swimmers, bicycle riders, skaters, billiardists, and physical culturists in action. The first contracts for exhibiting the Athletic films have been signed by the Selig company, through J. H. Herman, in charge of the Athletic Feature Film Department, with Jones, Linick and Schaefer. The latter will show the films in their chain of vaudeville houses.

The new Augustus Thomas play, "The Rio Grande," which has been playing on the stage in Chicago and New York, is to be filmed by the Raver Film Corporation.

Arrangements have been completed between the Triangle and the Rialto corporations, by which the former will enjoy the continuance of the services of S. L. Rothapfel as managing director of the Knickerbocker Theater in New York. Mr. Rothapfel, who conducts the "First Aid to Theater Men" in MOTOGRAPHY, will manage the splendid new Rialto as an independent house.

Down in Baker, Oregon, two live managers, Messrs. Haish and Cotter, got together recently with the editor of the Morning Democrat and decided that it was about time for their town to be furnished with a motion picture page in her newspaper. It will start on May first. That is a good hunch for other live managers. Start something in your own paper.

Before showing "The Battle Cry of Peace" Manager M. B. Hake of Arlington, Washington, went around to the different school buildings and gave a talk in each room, eighteen in all. This resulted in splendid business and increased the manager's hold on the public of his town.

Eugene Roth, managing director of the Popular Amusement Company of San Francisco, has just bought a corner in that city upon which he will erect what is promised to be the largest and finest picture house in America. The lot cost $1,350,000 and the theater is to eat up $500,000 more. Mr. Roth and his architect have been taking a trip over the entire country for the purpose of studying the best features of the various photoplay houses.

In advertising "Thou Shalt Not Covet" Manager W. C. Gowan, of the Star, at Everett, Washington, put in a window with sand on the floor and used a stick to write the words: "Gone to interior. You will understand. Good by." It started talk and helped business, according to V. L. S. E. Pals.

Alex. E. Beyfuss of San Rafael, California, states that he is busy preparing for the showing of "The Unwritten Law" and getting ready to advertise the new California Motion Picture Corporation's feature, "The Woman Who Dared."

The police commissioner of New York City, Arthur H. Woods, was the most interested spectator at a private showing of "The Traffic Cop," a five-reel Thanhouser-Mutual Masterpicture starring Gladys Hulette. The commissioner allowed Director Mitchell to use the entire traffic squad for the picture, and arranged it so that he could hold up traffic anywhere in New York to suit his requirements.

Jefferson Irvine, cousin of Clarke Irvine, has just been made publicity man for the Rolin Film Company of Los Angeles.

The City Union of King's Daughters, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, selected a V. L. S. E. production, Selig's "House of a Thousand Candles," for a benefit performance at the Grand theater, in that city, recently. Matinee and evening performances were given. It speaks well for the clean and interesting qualities of V. L. S. E. productions that they are being selected by the King's Daughters' organizations for presentation. The King's Daughters is a semi-religious organization working in the cause of charity. Membership is composed of leading church women of almost every city of consequence in the United States. "The House of a Thousand Candles" proved a winner for the organization.

Word has been received by William N. Selig that the Selig comedy series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," have become the rage in England. E. H. Montagu, agent in the British Isles for the Selig Company, has issued a booklet of fifteen pages entitled "Welcome to Bloom Center," in response to large demand. The booklet is profusely illustrated with scenes from the rural comedies and the outside cover carries a pen-and-ink drawing. It has been said that the English do not appreciate American comedy. This conception is wrong judging from the success already achieved in England by "The Chronicles of Bloom Center."

Geo. L. Levy is now connected with the New Film Corporation in the Chicago Business College building. Levy recently sent in his picture as candidate for the Handsome Man Contest conducted by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which will explain why it does not adorn the pages of this issue.

The General Feature Film Company, in the Mallers building, Chicago, are the exclusive distributors of the Ivan Film Productions in that territory. Simeon B. Griever, the enterprising general manager of this concern, says the exhibitors who have used these productions have found them to be top-notch box office attractions.

Among the hustling film men in the office of Pathe Exchange we can mention Al. Rosenthal, traveling representative, and W. C. Huey, manager of the publicity department.

Ed. A. Wheeler, recently with MOTOGRAPHY and previous to that owner and manager of two exchanges in the East, has been appointed sales manager for Weber & Company, a large department store in this town.

Ollie Moore, who was formerly assistant manager of the New Film Corporation, has been appointed Chicago representative for the World Film Corporation. Ollie is a clever boy and a hustler.

L. E. Carnes, owner of the Palace theater, a suburban house of Sioux City, Iowa, has taken over the Star theater, one of the downtown houses in that city. He opened last Monday with General Film Company's Unit Program, changing every other day. The Star is one of the coziest picture houses in Sioux City, seats five hundred, is well ventilated and modern in every way. Mr. Carnes is a live wire, has been in the picture business for some several years time, and is a strong believer in advertising.

Wm. C. Cook, Charlie Dingman and Irving Finevitz of the E. L. K. Film Co. traveling force, left this week for an extended trip through Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana, respectively. With such good men on the advance line and with General Kuh and Colonel Victor at headquarters, this large feature alliance will surely come out with flying colors at the end of the season.

Your organist, pianist or orchestra can now play the music for your Paramount pictures directly from specially arranged scores furnished for each picture by the Paramount company. The rental charged is extremely reasonable and by means of a standing order for each production the exhibitor can secure the music for each picture at least one day in advance. The Paramount publicity manager is the man to get in touch with regarding the matter.

Charles F. Oldt, of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., realizes to the fullest extent that "music hath charms," and the music provided in his house is a treat. He uses a well balanced orchestra of piano, violin, flute and cello. The leader secures the music for the Paramount pictures from the Broadway theater in New York.

The bill at the Strand theater, New York, is particularly strong this week. Mary Pickford is seen in "The Eternal Grind," her latest Famous Players-Paramount release, a new Metro comedy presents the droll Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the Paramount Pictographs show some decidedly interesting subjects and the Topical Review is a film newspaper full of war scenes from Mexico and Europe.

The concert program will be given by an operatic male chorus, and baritone, soprano and piano soloists, besides the regular concert orchestra.

"Lonesome Luke" is proving to be a very popular fellow. Last week at the Optic theater in Los Angeles one of the series of the "Luke" comedies was being shown and the manager reconized Harold Lloyd, the original of Luke, in the audience. He dragged the bashful comedian to the stage and forced him to make a speech. Luke said he then really was "lonesome" for some nerve, but his talk made a great hit with the fans. The "Lonesome Luke" comedies are being produced for Pathe by the Rolin Film Company.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

A Cry for Help—Biograph Reissue—April 17. Featuring Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore, Walter Miller and Claire McDowell. After being knocked down by an automobile the intoxicated tramp is taken to the doctor's house, where he is revived and treated to a square meal. The maid pushes the tramp out of the house and shortly after he hears the doctor's cry for help. He rushes into the room and saves his benefactor from being killed by a man whose wife, who has been a patient of the doctor's, dies, and who had entered the doctor's house intending to kill him.

Frocks and Frills—Lubin—April 17.—Featuring Davy Don. Count Hunter, who is badly in need of money, sails for America to win a rich widow, and Otto, who is a member of the Wise Guys' Club, upon being introduced to the count gives him an invitation to a mask ball to be held the following evening at the home of one of the 400. The night of the ball Otto dresses as the rich widow and the fun is fast and furious. The count takes the widow home and asks to call again. He calls and Otto again dresses as the widow and he carries the joke to the point where the count proposes. He is accepted and about to give the widow the ring when two friends pull off Otto's wig and the count faints and is carried out by Otto's friends.

The Three Wise Men—(Three Reels)—Selig—April 17.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Elder Brother—(Two Reels)—Essanay—April 18.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, Gerda Holmes and John H. Cossar. Phillip and Irving are left equal parts of their father's fortune and Irving begins to spend his share, while Phillip studies medicine and soon begins practice. Irving becomes fascinated with a cabaret dancer and Irving and Leider, one of her admirers, quarrel over her and Leider attempts to injure Irving by giving him adulterated cigarettes. He is soon a wreck and brought to his brother's home for attention. Phillip meets the cabaret girl and realizing that she is not as bad as he had pictured, takes her in his arms and tells her that he, too, loves her.

One of the Pack—(Two Reels)—Lubin—April 18.—Featuring Eleanor Blevins, George Routh and Jay Morley. Helen Marston's father suffers a breakdown and to save his life a transfusion of blood is necessary. Helen appeals to her two lovers, Pierre Moret, who is the leader of a band of criminals and who has tainted blood, and Fred Hayden, a young clerk, whom she favors. Pierre, seeing a way to dispose of his rival, changes the samples of blood and the doctor tells Fred that he has an incurable disease and Moret is chosen for the operation. Helen's father dies and she marries Moret. Dr. Langham, who had been out of town at the time of the operation on Helen's father, returns and forces Moret to give him a written confession. Moret determined to regain the confession and orders one of his men to get it. Brant hires Fred to open the safe and finding the confession he opens it and reads it. Moret learns that Fred is at the doctor's home and goes there. Fred kills Moret and when the doctor and Helen come into the office he explains matters and he and Helen go away to start life anew.

The Larrimore Case—(Three Reels)—Biograph—April 19.—Featuring Vera Sisson, Charles H. Mailes, Jose Ruben and Gretchen Hartman. Two stock brokers love the same girl. She chooses the more prosperous and marries him. The disappointed lover plots revenge. Through his rival's junior partner he effects the financial ruin of the couple. Later he is found dead. Circumstances point to the husband and wife and at their trial it is dramatically revealed that the murderer is the junior partner, and the motive revenge for having been used as a tool by the victim.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 9—Essanay—April 19.—Split reel release containing five hundred feet of an animated cartoon which is a burlesque on the current topics of the day. The remaining five hundred feet consists of western scenic.

The Heart's Tribute—(Three Reels)—Lubin—April 20.—Featuring June Daye and E. K. Lincoln. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

All For a Girl—Vim—April 20.—Featuring Plump and Runt. Plump and Runt are in love with Elsie, who informs them that the first one to make good in a position will win her hand. Runt secures a position as office boy in a bank and Plump because he rescues the president's daughter from certain death is made superintendent of the bank. Plump, using his newly-acquired power, fires Runt, who secures a job in a pressing club. Plump gets an invitation from Elsie to attend a dance at her home and on his way to the party calls into the pressing club where Runt is employed to have his clothes pressed. Runt finds the invitation and attends the party himself, leaving Plump sitting in a barrel. Finally Plump arrives at the scene and his entrance in the barrel breaks up the party. Explanations ensue and the fat boy wins his love, much to the disgust of his Runty rival.

The Spell of the Knife—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—April 21.—A physiological story dealing with Daphne Wayne, a sweet convent bred girl, who has a fearful antipathy to knives.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

She cannot hold one without having a desire to kill. Daphne Wayne, although she loves John Morrison, marries Herbert Montagne to save her father from ruin. She later meets John and plans to elope with him. That night as she is packing to leave Montagne she becomes frenzied and when he returns there is a scene and she stabs him with a knife and leaves him, as she believes, dead. Nella, his mistress, calls at Montagne's home, determined to make him take her back, and Montagne, who has been but slightly wounded and has revived, drives her from the house and Nella, desperate, kills him with the same knife that Daphne had used. Rushing from the house Nella falls on the knife and is killed and when Daphne and John return they discover that it was Nella who had killed Montagne and not Daphne, who no longer has a desire to kill.

Hired and Fired—Vim—April 21.—Featuring Pokes and Jabbs. Pokes and Jabbs secure positions in the home of Mr. Gink, a wealthy old grouch. Mr. Gink gives a reception and Countess De Splash, who is famed for her jewels, attends this reception and Pokes and Jabbs get one flash of the diamond anklet worn by the countess and both resolve to have it and win the affections of charming Ethel, the maid. Pokes manages to secure the anklet and when the countess discovers her loss Pokes slips the anklet into Jabbs' pocket, and when the police arrive, slips into the pocket of Rattles, a society crook and Ethel's real lover, who escapes after telling Ethel to meet him in the garden. Seeking some victim upon whom he can vent his wrath, Gink turns his attentions upon Pokes and Jabbs and chases them out of the house and they are once again broke and homeless.

Her Naked Soul—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 22.—Featuring Darwin Karr, Nell Craig, Hugh Thompson and Edmund F. Cohn. Shirley Davis, a stenographer, is knocked down by an automobile owned by Marvin Dexter and later she marries him. They live in a western city and Dexter one evening brings home Rupert Chadwick, who is a resident of the city and also his old school chum. Chadwick, who has had an affair with Shirley while she was in his employ three years before, attempts to get the old hold on his friend's wife by threats of revealing her past. She tells her husband all and later Chadwick is found dead and Dexter, who thinks his wife killed him, shoulders the blame to save her. The detective, however, discovers that Chadwick, Jr., shot his father when the latter refused to pay his gambling debts, and with Chadwick out of the way there is none to know and Dexter and Shirley happily start life anew.

Millionaire Billie—Lubin—April 22.—Featuring Billie Reeves. Harold Vandewater, a sporting member of the Millionaire's Club, makes a bet that he can tramp his way from New York to Chicago entirely without funds or making any change whatsoever in his appearance. Billie, a real soldier of the great hobo army, is mistaken for the millionaire tramp by Mrs. Climber, who gives a dinner in his honor. Billie has a time of his life until Harold Vandewater, the real millionaire tramp, arrives in town and then things begin to happen.

Too Many Chefs—Selig—April 22.—Featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde. Ruth returns to Bar "G" ranch after acquiring eastern polish and chides the boys for chewing tobacco, cussing and smoking cigarettes. The cook becomes warmed with wine and is discharged and Tom sends a cowboy to the ranch and asks Ruth to find another cook and she resolves to impersonate a French cook. She calls on Tom in male attire and is hired. She makes a pan of fudge instead of cooking dinner and when the boys arrive for supper they are infuriated and are about to drive the cook from the camp when she makes her identity known to Tom, who proposes on the spot and is accepted.

Selig Tribune No. 27.—April 3.—U. S. torpedo boat destroyer Rown is launched in the presence of a large number of U. S. Naval officials, Quincy, Mass.; stalwart oarsmen of the Stanford University begin spring practice here preparatory to the battle for the West Coast championship, Redwood City, Calif.; Carranza troops leave here presumably for Chihuahua to intercept Villa before he escapes into the fastnesses of the Sierra Madre Mountains, Saltillo, Mexico; five thousand bales of cotton burn in spectacular fire at Houston, Tex., which destroys huge warehouse in railroad yards and burns freight cars standing on tracks; Des Plaines river overflows its banks, Riverside, Ill.; Juan Sanchez, one of Villa's bandits, who after being captured confessed to having participated in the raid at Columbus, N. M.

Selig-Tribune No. 28—April 6.—Mrs. Harry Horton, the "other woman" in the million-dollar mystery, calls on the District Attorney to say that Dr. Waite is innocent, despite his confession, New York, N. Y.; with high dignitaries of the church and army officiating, the colors of the 75th Battalion are blessed during impressive ceremonies, before the regiment leaves for the front, Toronto, Canada; Prince Arthur of Connaught, accompanied by Major General Sir Francis Lloyd, attends the Church Army Soldier's Club, London, England; U. S. Naval collier, Mars, the largest vessel ever used at this port, discharges her cargo at the U. S. navy yard wharf, Washington, D. C.

The Parasite—Kalem—April 10.—Featuring Marin Sais and Ollie Kirby in the third episode of "The Social Pirates." An affair of school days, when she wrote many foolish letters, has placed Mrs. Wharton in the clutches of Reynolds, a clever society blackmailer. When Mona and Mary learn of her plight their pity causes them to lay a trap for Reynolds that will cost him dearly. Mona, by a clever ruse, secures a position in the schemer's household. When she learns that Reynolds keeps the papers and letters that form so large a part of his stock in trade under guard in a safe she instructs Mary to call in the aid of Stallings, a well-known cracksman. There is a tense cross-play of action from then on, with the fate of the girls' plans at times in doubt, until the close finds Mrs. Wharton happy in the recovery of the letters that remove her from the vulture's power.

Millionaires by Mistake—Kalem—April 11.—Featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan. Ham and Bud inherit a million and go off to a swell hotel to spend the money. Conspirators with greedy eyes on their wealth lay a trap for them and Ham falls a ready victim to a near-vampire, while Bud proposes to a fortune-hunting young lady. But a desperate villain—the sworn enemy of all wealth—is on their track and when he arrives—well, the finish is a riot of fun which leaves Ham and Bud satisfied to remain poor for the rest of their days.

Fashion and Fury—Kalem—April 12.—Featuring Ethel Teare and Jack MacDermott. Ethel doesn't follow the styles and Hubby is shocked when Ethel arrives home in a catchy harem skirt. There is a quarrel and both set out to get a divorce. Jack hires a man to make love to his wife and Ethel engages a burlesque queen to flirt with Hubby—both in search of evidence. The plans collide—with laughable results. But after a riotous mix-up we find Ethel back in Hubby's arms and Hubby more than glad she is there.

Romance and Riot—Kalem—April 14.—Featuring Rose Melville. When Reggie is banned from the Mossbanks home, he plans an elopement for that evening via the ladder route. Unfortunately Sis' imagination has been working overtime since she heard that Second Story Bill was at large with a thousand dollar reward on his head. She spoils the elopement by her blundering and succeeds in having Reggie landed in jail as a burglar. Meanwhile Sis is the object of the ardent rivalries of the police chief and the police force, Reckless Rudolph. Their bitter bickering causes Sis to blunder into the capture of Second Story Bill and the thousand dollar reward, which she immediately pays out again in order that she may pay Reggie's fine and patch up the romance she had spoiled.

The Race for the Siding—Kalem—April 15.—Featuring Helen Gibson in an episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series. The band of conspirators preying on railroads succeed in having the box-car loaded with auto tires sidetracked at Lone Point. Helen takes a hand in the affair, and while each of the trio carries a load of tires back to the autos which are in a sheltered spot, Helen hurriedly climbs the side of the box-car and releasing the brakes, the car, with its heavy load, starts down grade at great speed. Later, when the conspirators overpower the detectives sent to capture them and send their engine running wild down the tracks, it seems certain that Helen, alone on the box-car, is doomed to death. Fortunately, her signal is seen by the switchman and without a foot to spare, the box-car takes the siding just as the engine tears by. Helen, throwing caution to the winds, leaps to the tender of the engine and in a moment it is brought to a stop.

Mutual Program

The Improbable Yarn of McQuirk—Beauty—April 16.—Featuring Orral Humprey, Robert Miller, Lucille Ward and Perry Banks. Jerry McQuirk, an old sailor, tells Jamie, a boy of about eight, a tale about a time when he was cast from shipwreck on a cannibal isle, where the king decided he was too thin to eat and started Jerry on a fattening process. Jerry keeps thin by eating the leaves of the Skinaree plant and finally Hookum, tired of waiting, orders Jerry cooked as he is. Amongst the wreckage from his ship Jerry finds a phonograph and a can of powder and while amusing the natives with the phonograph he blows them up with the powder and Jerry lives to tell the tale.

His Masterpiece—(Two Reels)—American—April 17.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

The Sailor's Smiling Spirit—Falstaff—April 17.—With Walter Hiers and Gladys Dore. The grocer covets the smiling sailor's wife and in order to get the sailor out of the way he, in league with an anarchist, has his vessel loaded with bombs. When it is time for the sailor to be in his watery grave the grocer arranges for a wedding with the supposed widow. Plans miscarry and the smiling sailor returns happy and prosperous in time to put the meddling grocer out of the way.

Number Please—Beauty—April 19.—Featuring Carol Halloway, John Sheehan, John Steppling, Mary Talbot and Dick Rosson. Lizzie, a telephone operator, sees her sweetheart, Joe, a lineman, flirting with two girls from the top of a pole and becomes sore at him. Mrs. Kremly calls up her husband and Joe, who is trying to talk to Lizzie, slips and crosses the wires with the result that Kremly makes a date with Lizzie, thinking her his wife. She meets Kremly and he takes her to lunch. Mrs. Kremly, angry at being cut off, goes to her husband's office and upon learning that he is lunching goes to meet him. Mrs. Kremly makes a scene and has Lizzie arrested, but finally Joe appears on the scene and explains matters.

The Girl from Chicago—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—April 18.—Featuring Gladys Hulette and George Marlo. The main figures in this story are a girl detective, outwardly a crook, and a young philanthropist whose hobby is reforming criminals. After having reformed the girl his plan is to marry her, but when he discovers that she is a clever detective who has just rounded up her man, he realizes that his reforming idea is unneeded. However, he carries out the rest of his plan without losing any time.

The Man's Sin—(Three Reels)—Thanhouser—April 20.—Featuring Grace De Carlton. An old maid and her orphan niece live together and the bonds of love are strong between them. The poor niece, however, is destined to a sad fate, for the man she loves cruelly refuses to marry her, while he does marry a wealthy society girl. The niece dies when her child is born and the old spinster determines upon a terrible revenge. The wronged girl's baby grows up to exactly resemble the daughter of the culprit. The aunt uses this resemblance to wreak her terrible revenge on the latter and prepares things so that his daughter will experience the same fate as the girl he so wantonly threw over. As the story ends, however, the innocent girl is not made to suffer for her father's wrongs, but the man who is about to betray her is killed. The wicked man is finally forgiven by the daughter of the woman he spurned.

Realization — (Three Reels) — American — April 22.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Simple Simon's Schooling—Falstaff—April 22.—The grocer is known as "Simple Simon" and all the humorists in town aim their darts at him. But this only serves as publicity and brings him business. A pretty young woman starts a writing class and as all the men propose to her, she announces that she will marry the best hand writer. In the contest a young college man seems to have the best hand, but after the teacher has looked at "Simple Simon's" specimen she throws herself into his arms. She admits it has thrilled her more than any writing she has yet seen, for what the grocer wrote was a check for ten thousand dollars, "payable to my wife on her wedding day."

Universal Program

His Neighbor's Wife—Nestor—April 17.—With Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns. In order to get a raise from the boss, Neal pretends to be married. When the boss decides to have a look at his happy home life, however, Neal is in a terrible fix. Mrs. Newlywed, across the hall, has compassion on him, and, as her husband is not coming home for dinner, she offers to officiate as Neal's wife. Unfortunately Mr. Newlywed returns too soon, and after a great deal of disturbance Neal lands in jail and loses his job into the bargain.

The Best Man's Bride—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—April 18.—Featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Francelia Billington. Winthrop Gray, a wealthy globe-trotter, is summoned to act as best man at his cousin's wedding. How an odd train of circumstances leads Gray and his cousin's fiancee to marry and the cousin to act as best man himself, is the subject of this story.

Love Laughs at Dyspepsia—Imp—April 18.—Sallie Sloppus, desperately in love with Achilles Payne, finds it hard pulling towards the altar on account of the treatment her lover is taking for his dyspepsia, which forbids that he surrender to his emotions. Cupid helps Sallie out of her hole, however, and incidentally banishes the dyspepsia.

A Meeting for a Cheating—L-Ko—April 19.—Featuring Billie Ritchie. Billie warns his wife not to be so careless with her jewels, but to no effect. He decides to have a friend play the part of burglar and writes a note to him, but his wife obtains possession of the note. That night a real burglar gets into the house. Bill's friend is late so Bill himself decides to play burglar. The police finally catch the real burglar but Bill and his friend have an exciting time proving their identity.

Oh! What a Whopper—(Two Reels)—Big U—April 20.—With Harry Coleman and Charlotte Lillard. In order to see a "double-header" Billy Bibbs foregoes a trip with his wife to the beach. Clara happens to go to the game herself, and is a witness to her husband's disgraceful behaviour there. She beats him home, however, and calmly listens to a lying synopsis of the thrilling events which have kept him from his engagement with her. Afterwards she informs Billy that he is a cast-iron liar and backs it up with proof. Billy finally promises never to visit the Polo Grounds unaccompanied by his wife.

The Gambler—Laemmle—April 20.—Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church. Upon losing all of his money and much of his father's on fluctuating stock, Vance Thomas makes it appear he has committed suicide and makes for other parts. As the years roll by, the old suitor of his wife pleads with her to marry him. She finally consents. On the night of the wedding Vance returns. With the unquenchable gambling spirit the supposedly dead husband throws dice to determine whether or not he will disclose himself. Fate is against him and he abides by his decision, making away with himself shortly after.

The Haunted Bell—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 21.—Featuring King Baggot. An oriental bell which has come into the possession of John Lane, a novelist, and which appears to be the long lost sacred bell of a Buddhist temple, becomes the cause of a mysterious murder. The murderer is found, however, and made to confess, while the cause of the spontaneous ringing of the bell is also discovered.

Eddie's Night Out—Nestor—April 21.—With Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson. Eddie Newlywed has troubles at home in the way of an insurgent mother-in-law. After a speedy night with the "boys" he is forced by her to stay out in the park. In the morning he is full of fight and gets into the house by strategy. He then sets about explaining in forceful manner "who's who." Mother-in-law at last descends from her high and mighty attitude.

A Strange Confession—Victor—April 21.—In this story, Bob, a young card-player, is accused of robbing his father's safe. The father sends him from the place and much trouble follows. All is finally smoothed over when the real culprit—a monkey—leads Bob's sweetheart to where the loot is hidden.

A POEM FROM PEACOCKE.

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, author of "Neptune's Daughter" and a number of other feature films and who is now scenario editor with the California Motion Picture Corporation, sends some verse to MOTOGRAPHY and tells of the work and plans of his company. An excerpt from his letter, and the verse follow:

I beg to enclose a few "would-be-humorous" lines, entitled, "The Waning Star," which I worked out of my system after having viewed a recent so-called "feature" on the screen, in which a stage luminary of an ancient vintage was starred.

If you think the little effusion is worthy of a space in your pages, will you please accept it as a small free-gift offering from a long-time enthusiastic reader of MOTOGRAPHY.

This company is hard at work on their coming release, "The Woman Who Dared," which I adapted from Mrs. C. N. Williamson's book, and it is full of thrills and suspense. Miss Beatriz Michelena has had some wonderful gowns made for the production.

After that production this company is going to spring a big surprise in the way of their next production, which is to remain a secret for the present; and then we are going to do "Kismet" in 12 reels; and that is full of bigger possibilities for screen production than any play it has been my pleasure to tackle for film adaptation. We expect Otis Skinner out here very shortly, and I believe he will have a deal to say in the selection of his supporting cast; I am working on the scenario now, and from the way the working script is evolving it looks as if 5,000 people at least will have to be employed in the production, besides a great number of camels and wild animals of various sorts. The building of the City of Bagdad will be quite an undertaking, but we have unlimited space here and an army of willing workers.

"THE WANING STAR!"

BY CAPTAIN LESLIE T. PEACOCKE
[Scenario Editor, California Motion Picture Corporation.]

She was old and long bedridden, and to Hope had said "Goodbye,"
Watching for the end to come, and quite prepared to die.
Her name, long since, a household word, and out upon Broadway
Had flashed in great electric signs, when life was young and gay.
Her voice had long deserted her, her hair was grey and thin,
And nothing now can stir the feeble heart that beats within.
Then comes one day a manager, with "Movies" on the brain,
And hunts up all the Stars that had been long upon the wane.
So, one morning came a hurried call which brought her from her bed,
And she tottered to a studio, much less alive than dead.
Of course she scorned the base idea of acting for the screen,
And insisted that she play the roles of maidens—seventeen;
They worked her into "Features" and they advertised her big;
And they showed her on the posters in a blonde and curly wig.
The public said, "She must be fine! She played upon Broadway!"
But they wished when it was over that they hadn't had to pay!
She fought with her director till he quit and took to drink,
She argued with the next one till his mind refused to think.
She "knocked" our well loved favorites, that all fans idolize,
And their style, and dress and acting never ceased to criticize.
She scorned sweet Michelena, Mary Pickford and the rest,
And claimed that only Broadway Stars. like her, could stand the test.
She's still appearing on the screen and driving people mad,
And helping all she can to put good "Features" to the bad.
It makes one think the managers must all have gone insane,
To see them forcing on us these old Stars upon the Wane.
Oh! Feature, please, our movie stars, our favorites of the screens!
And bore us not forever with these sad old once-have-beens!

Plans are being completed for a handsome theater to be constructed by remodeling the store building of Mrs. Nancy Patterson, 113 and 115 West Main street, Owasso. The two stores are to be utilized for a theater that will accommodate about 900 persons. There will be a spacious balcony and box seats. The ceiling will be dome-shaped in order to afford best accoustic qualities. Fred J. Patterson, son of Mrs. Nancy Patterson, who has been in the moving picture business for several years in Portland, Mich., will have charge. It is expected that besides moving pictures vaudeville attractions will be shown.

Walter Hildebrand has been appointed manager of the Butterfly theater in Milwaukee.

Metro Quits Board of Trade

COMPLICATIONS ARISE OVER EXPOSITIONS

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has quit the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., and has withdrawn all its branch offices from membership. Metro was one of the charter members of the Board of Trade and was represented in that body by its treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, who has been the Board's treasurer since its organization, by President Richard A. Rowland, who was on the Board's membership committee, and by Arthur James, who was chairman of the publication committee of the Board and a member of the committee on arbitration.

This action followed what Metro characterizes as the turning down of the exhibitors' organization by the Board of Trade in the matter of the national exposition.

Metro's contention was that the exhibitors as the founders of the New York annual exposition were entitled to share equally with the Board of Trade and that anything in the nature of discrimination was against the best interests of the industry.

Metro's letter of withdrawal which went forward to President J. Stuart Blackton of the Board of Trade on Friday was as follows:

J. Stuart Blackton, President,
The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc.

Dear Sir:—

Metro Pictures Corporation together with all of its exchanges hereby withdraws from membership in the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., the withdrawal to take effect forthwith. Metro's reason is that it has no desire for further official connections with a body whose recent proceedings Metro regards as against the best interests of the motion picture industry. Metro cites as a case in point, the endeavor on the part of the Board of Trade to take away from the exhibitors' organization without fair reason or excuse, the annual motion picture exposition and the Board's endeavor to dictate to the founders of that annual institution how, if at all the founders should participate in the management and the proceeds.

Metro believes that a "throttle the exhibitor" policy is unwise as well as unjust and desires in its withdrawal to protest most earnestly against such a course.

Metro has considered the facts carefully and is satisfied that no course other than withdrawal is honorable to itself or fair to the exhibitors. It is hardly necessary to say that Metro deplores the conditions which have made this action necessary.

We have the honor to be

Yours very truly,

Metro Pictures Corporation.

Metro at the same time made public its intention to give cordial support to the Third Annual Motion Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. Its statement endorsing the exhibitors' exposition is reproduced with the description of that event on another page.

A score of new members were admitted to the Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors at a meeting held at the Regent theater in Buffalo, N. Y., last week.

The Association is not yet two weeks old. Its object is to promote the securing of better pictures.

TRADE EXPOSITION BOOMING

Many Interesting Features at First National Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square, New York, May 6-14

It is said the salaries paid to the motion picture actors and actresses who are to appear before the camera in specially written scenarios at the First National Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden, New York City, May 6-14, would total up to something like the interest on the national debt.

It will be the first time in the history of the motion picture industry that a cast made up of the leading screen players have ever appeared together. A stage with complete studio equipment will be built at the Fourth avenue end of the garden, and each day under directors of the first rank film stars will enact their favorite roles. After the film has been developed it will be thrown on a specially built screen. This will be the only showing of the picture. The latest feature films and news weeklies will also be exhibited.

Some of those who will be in the exposition pictures are: Mary Pickford, Theda Bara, Anita Stewart, Helen Ware, Olga Petrova, Pearl White, Margaret Gibson, Helen Holmes, Cyril Scott, William Farnum, Lionel Barrymore, Frank Daniels, Victor Moore, George Ovey, F. Forest Taylor and George Beban.

A plan whereby the study of motion pictures will become a part of the curriculum of the public schools of Greater New York will be offered the Board of Education by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America at the education board's meeting.

Members of the Board of Education and those occupying the more important chairs of New York State's educational system have been invited to attend the Motion Picture Exposition and express their views as to the means whereby the motion picture manufacturer can be of the greatest benefit to the pupils of the public school.

For the fashion show of the exposition a special scenic effect will be placed on the large and spacious stage by S. L. Rothapfel, notable film presenter, known to MOTOGRAPHY readers through the department in this magazine conducted by him.

"The motion picture is a discovery of importance equal to that of the printing press. It is to take a leading part in the reconstruction of our social life; it will reorganize our educational system; it is to become a great moral power. The political boss of the future will be the motion picture; it will be one of the most powerful factors in our political campaigns. Moreover, it is to develop a new art and a new science—and a new and virile literature. It already is one of our greatest industries."

This is the statement of Dr. Francis Trevelyan Miller (Litt. D., LL. D.), a fellow of the American Academy of Political and Social Science and one of the leading American historians.

Dr. Miller is the author of nearly thirty volumes on economic and historical analyses of civilization. He has been elected chairman of arts and sciences Day at the Board of Trade Exposition.

"Playthings of the Gods," a three-act drama written and directed for the Lubin Company by Captain Wilbert Melville, is to be released April 27 through the General Film Company. It is melodrama that revels in episodes not encouraged at pink teas.

WORKS WITH EXHIBITORS

New Departure by the California Motion Picture Corporation in Handling Productions to Be of Mutual Advantage

With its decision to release better-than-program-pictures on a states right basis, the California Motion Picture Corporation, from all available evidence, has gone about solving the intricacies of the marketing end of the business in genuine earnest. The primary concern of the "California" producers in entering the open market was, according to a statement of General Manager Alexander E. Beyfuss, to make connections with the most substantial independent buyers in the country. "The Unwritten Law," the Michelena feature, will be handled in California through direct arrangement between the theaters and the producers. There will be no intermediate exchangeman.

The reason given by the California corporation for reserving this territory for its own immediate exploitation, is a desire to get a first hand understanding of the exhibitors' point of view. This, it believes, will give it a better appreciation of many of the problems that the state right man has to solve in his relations with the theaters he serves, and will consequently strengthen the co-operative arm of its own organization.

"The whole success of the motion picture business, as I see it," says General Manager Beyfuss, "lies in a full understanding between the producers and the public. This applies just as forcibly whether the producer be making a picture or making a sale.

"The main trouble usually is that the true statement of public demand becomes distorted in transmission through the hands of the middle party. There is no direct communication between the man who buys his ticket at the box office and the man who manufactures the picture.

"It is this difficulty that we have been trying to surmount. At first it was in the producing end that we went to the public and asked its opinion and advice. The result was such a picture as 'The Unwritten Law.' Now that we have entered the open market and are giving personal attention to the distribution of our output we are going to follow the same line. That is why we are booking the California territory direct from our own offices."

Multiple Selig Comedy

The Selig multiple reel feature comedy, "A Stranger in New York," released through General Film Service on Monday, May 8, upholds the new standard set by this company.

"A Stranger in New York" was one of the late Charles Hoyt's most successful farce comedies and none of the fun-making qualities has been lost in the film version made by Gilson Willets. Otis Harlan, the famous comedian, who achieved such success on the stage in "A Stranger in New York," enacts the leading role in the Selig comedy.

City Censorship

Every foot of film shown in Rochester, New York, is subject to censorship, according to an ordinance passed last week by the Common Council. The commissioner of public safety is acting as temporary censor until the mayor can appoint a permanent official.

Exhibitors' Exposition Program

METRO JOINS MOVEMENT

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' Third Annual Motion Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6, will be personally directed by B. A. Rolfe, manager of the Strand Theater and one of the most successful exhibitors in the United States. Mr. Rolfe has called together the exhibitors' committee and important show interests who had taken space at the exposition.

After a conference, lasting several hours, a complete program was adopted, which, in point of showmanship and in real motion picture interest, promises the greatest show in the history of the industry. There will be six days and nights of carnival in the very spirit of motion pictures, with twelve brass bands for the week. There will be picture exhibitions day and night, with a new and gorgeous grand ball every evening. There will be three motion picture studios actually in operation in the Palace every day and evening of the exposition, and the public will have an opportunity to see famous stars actually appearing before the camera in scenes which will be shown subsequently in motion picture theaters throughout the country.

B. A. Rolfe, exposition director.

There will be a grand prize scenario contest, the details of which will be announced on Monday, and special prizes for amateurs have been arranged. There will be exhibits of picture machines, theater equipment, lighting systems, seating systems and a history of motion pictures by a living panorama with celebrated actors, directors and picture makers appearing in the cast.

The Screen Club will participate, and will have a special celebration under its own direction.

Several monster show days have been arranged as follows:

May 1—Monday—Jewish Day.

May 2—Tuesday—Allies Day for the Red Cross Societies of England, France, Russia, Serbia and Italy.

May 3—Wednesday—German Day—for the Red Cross of Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey.

May 4—Thursday—Orphans Day—for the charitable institutions throughout Greater New York.

May 5—Friday—Metro Day and Frolic Night—Greatest stars of the screen and greatest stars of Broadway participating.

May 6—Saturday—Actors' Fund Day.

The exhibitors from all over Greater New York kept the wires busy at the League headquarters sending in assurances of their enthusiastic cooperation.

It is officially announced there will be special exhibitors' delegates from Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago and intervening points.

The exhibitors make the claim that they have the newer, bigger, better, finer, cleaner exposition place with the greatest art governor in motion pictures, the full cooperation of every exhibitor in their organization, which embraces Greater New York and beyond, the cordial support of famous actors and actresses, a list of which is being prepared for publication, real motion picture exhibitions which will give the public a definite idea of how pictures are made and other big show surprises, which for obvious reasons are being held back from publication until a later date.

The Metro Pictures Corporation has endorsed the exposition heartily and has issued the following statement:

"Metro Pictures Corporation cordially endorses the Motion Picture Exhibitors League exposition because the annual trade show is a motion picture institution founded by the exhibitors' organization. The exhibitors offered to cooperate with the Board of Trade Show and to merge with it on the basis of equal sharing and this offer was declined.

"The exhibitors are entitled to an equal share in an institution which they fostered and developed and no individual or clique or group can stand in the way of fair play.

"Metro is out of harmony with any attempt to treat the exhibitor like a step-child and it believes that such a course will destroy any possibility of cooperation between the exhibitors and the manufacturer in the great fight against censorship.

"Metro's feeling was crystalized by the circular sent out by the Board of Trade's show managers in which it was asserted that the exhibitors would hold no exposition. This was dated about the time when the exhibitors had been led to believe their proposals were acceptable to the Board and they had agreed to join in the Board's show. Later when they found they were not to be given a fair participation they returned to their own exposition plans. The circulars were sent out after the Board of Trade managers knew these facts and Metro regarded these tactics as highly unfair.

"Therefore, Metro will not participate in the Madison Square Garden Show, but will participate every day and with its best enthusiasm and material support in the Exhibitors Third Annual Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6."

Manufactures More Fun

Harry Gribbon, remembered as the super-sanitary fellow who before drinking wiped off the bubble of the flowing drinking fountain in "The Perils of the Park," has just finished the manufacture of more thrilling fun in the Sennett-Triangle comedy, "A Dash of Courage."

Speeding automobiles and stout stone walls are "combined" in the picture to the confusion of Gribbon and his fellow fun-makers. The chloroformed police force and the "Old Cops' Home" are important factors in the well funny-boned plot.

Pretty Star Tells "War" Experiences

According to Arline Pretty, the popular Vitagraph star who has just concluded a long camera campaign in and around San Antonio, Texas, filming scenes of the new Vitagraph serial, "The Secret Kingdom" which it is said will be released through V. L. S. E., the people of the East are better informed of the details of the army hunt for Villa than the average citizen on the ground.

Arline Pretty—Vitagraph

During the stay of "The Secret Kingdom" company at San Antonio, the air was vibrant with war and rumors of war, following Villa's raid on Columbus, according to Miss Pretty, the dainty little actress, who prior to her entry into the screen field was a member of Washington social circles. She met many old Washington acquaintances among the army officers and their wives and was for a time the guest of General and Mrs. Funston at their home in Fort Sam Houston.

"Whatever General Funston and his officers know about the progress of affairs across the border they keep most secretively to themselves," said Miss Pretty. "Troops come and go, but their future movements are a mystery to all save the officers immediately concerned. The consequence is that the folks in the border towns are not half as well informed about what is happening a short distance away from them, as the people who read the daily papers in the East. The reason for this is that the papers here get their news fresh from Washington, where it has been transmitted direct by General Funston.

"But we had troubles of our own, for there are thirty-one reels in 'The Secret Kingdom,' with action enough to keep everybody busy from start to finish."

"The Secret Kingdom" was directed by Theodore Marston at a great cost. Besides Arline Pretty and Charles Richman, the cast includes Dorothy Kelly, Joseph Kilgour, Ned Finley, Robert Whitworth and William E. Dunn.

Exhibitors Feast Universal Manager

More than a score of prominent film exhibitors tendered a complimentary banquet last week at the Georgian Hotel in Boston to J. A. Eslow, manager of the New England branch of the Universal Film Company, preparatory to his departure for California.

Mr. Eslow, who is one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, is a product of the West, and was for a number of years associated with the legitimate stage.

He first came to Boston five years ago to assume charge of the Mutual office in this city. He took hold of his present position nearly three years ago and in that time his successful administration has nearly quadrupled the business. He leaves to become western manager for the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, with home offices in Denver, Col., and San Francisco.

Albert C. Schaller, who succeeds him, was toastmaster of the evening, and in the course of his remarks presented Mr. Eslow a gold watch, appropriately inscribed, denoting the occasion of the gift.

Among those present were Peter W. Maguire, Walter G. Hartford, Charles T. Gallagher, William J. Sullivan, Charles Walker, T. W. Burke, Maurice Rothenburg, J. Fred Levett, Harry I. Wasserman, A. Montague, Charles F. Berry, Albert S. Schaller, E. J. Farrell, W. W. Bradley, E. R. Daniels, W. J. Cooper, Walter Hess, James H. Donovan, H. J. Shepard, F. M. Jacks, Fred B. Murphy, S. H. Steinfeldt, Lon Vail, S. M. Moscow, Alden Washburn, H. Hirsch, H. J. Segal and Joseph Saxe.

ENLARGE LABORATORIES

California Motion Picture Corporation Employs Extreme Care in Making All Positive Prints of Its Productions

Many of the additions and improvements that the past month has seen at the plant of the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, California, have according to reports from that section, centered in the laboratory, where a two shift force is now employed turning out positive prints to meet State Right demands for Beatriz Michelena in "The Unwritten Law."

With the advent of this picture, which marked the beginning of the "California" concern's new policy of distributing its better-than-program features on a state right basis, it determined that every positive copy of the production should be printed at its own laboratory and under its own immediate supervision.

While the laboratory that the company has been using since its inception was originally designed for quality results, it was not altogether with exception of handling a quantity output equaling that incident to demand for "The Unwritten Law." Although the picture has been scarcely more than just put on the market, practically every purchaser of state rights is, according to the studio report, wiring in orders for additional prints of the picture. It was in anticipation of this condition that the laboratory was recently enlarged and increases made in both force and equipment.

"We have made every provision," says General Manager Alex. E. Beyfuss of the "California" corporation, "to handle this situation adequately. Our own personal experience and that gleaned from observing other companies teach us the necessity of printing our own positives in order to secure that acme of quality demanded by a better-than-program rating. Everything connected with 'California' features will henceforth be done under our personal supervision. This applies very particularly to copies made from our negatives.

"It avails one but very little to secure a perfect negative if the printing is let out to some outside firm and then done in a careless fashion."

The rights for "The Unwritten Law," the California Motion Picture Corporation production, for the Chicago territory have been sold to Herman Kahn of the Owl Features Company.

Brady Guides "World"

POLICIES OF INTEREST TO EXHIBITORS

ON APRIL 1 William A. Brady became general art director of the World Film Corporation and since the death of Arthur H. Spiegel has become executive manager of that concern as well.

Robert Warwick, World Films

How much the assuming of the direction of World Film by William A. Brady means to filmdom in general can best be understood when one is familiar with the remarkable success that has been Brady's share since he began producing, twenty-five years ago.

At least eight great and popular American dramas are credited to Mr. Brady. "The Man of the Hour," undoubtedly the most successful political romance ever produced and which earned for the sagacious manager close to a million dollars; "Way Down East," the subtle, telling, rural story of New England, which to this day, after years of wonderful prosperity, is still one of the great money makers of the legitimate stage; "Bought and Paid For," the most powerful of the 1911-12-13 season's plays; "Little Women" which was dramatized from the book and produced by Mr. Brady with the finest scenic surroundings and atmospheric touches and a half hundred other vital stage plays, marks the active quarter century of theatricals to the credit of the man who now takes over the generalship of the World Film Corporation and who modestly says: "If I knew as much about pictures as David W. Griffith and one or two others do, I might have some reason to talk about myself. I have no intention of revolutionizing any business and don't imagine I could do it if I wanted to," yet who, in an interview with a representative of this paper, outlined his ambitions and aspirations in a whole-souled manner in the first interview he has ever granted on the subject of motion pictures.

> The slogan of this company is to be: "No bad pictures." I do not mean that everything we produce will be a great picture, but we are now in a position to guarantee the exhibitor and the public absolutely that we will never put out a bad picture. We are going to select our photoplays with the same care that spoken plays are selected, and whatever I have learned in my thirty years' experience along this line will be brought to bear to this end.
> We will conduct no freakish campaign for the exploitation of any particular star; we will have a staff of reliable, sure-fire artists, and will screen our subjects with them alone; we will carefully avoid all 'smutty' and sensational plays; we will try to lead the way, if possible, to better things on the screen.
>
> The success of "The Birth of a Nation" should convince every producer that the public wants and will support the better class of screen offerings. Its success is due to the fact that it is built upon the greatest dramatic moment in the history of the United States, and I believe that there are many subjects in United States history which can be used to draw the public away from the eternal triangle, and away from restaurants and seductions, and all that.
>
> It will be our policy to avoid all conflict with the censors. The manufacturers can do away with censorship entirely, and end the eternal fight, if they will simply get together, possibly organize their own board, and make censorship unnecessary. When we find anyone among us who endangers the whole industry by truckling to dirt and "smut" the rest of us should go to him and show him just what he is doing.

Alice Brady, World Star

The greatest field for the motion picture in the future is to be found in the picture man and the theatrical producer to work hand in hand. Only about six of the larger cities of the country can see the Broadway successes with their original casts. The big stars simply refuse to visit the smaller cities. Consequently the play gets to those places with an inferior company and maybe a year later, when the public will not have it. They have become interested in the newer productions which they read of, and will not go to see the success of last season.

Now, if these plays are filmed the moment they become established successes, with the original cast, and immediately sent out to be exhibited all over the country while the play is still running, what an advantage it will be to all concerned. We can say to the public: "In this form you can see the latest success, with its original cast—and this is the only way you can see it." To the exhibitor we can point out the immense advertising value to be derived from the fact that the play is at the very moment drawing great crowds on Broadway.

Like everything theatrical, the public taste in pictures is apt to take a sudden shift at any moment. Personally I believe the turn now is going to be toward even longer and more pretentious pictures than the present five-reeler.

A great many of the stage stars have failed on the screen, while others have made good in a remarkable fashion. But the public has been educated up to the big names and demands them; consequently if the producer attempts to go back to the short pictures, with comparatively unknown people, he will find that the public will have none of them.

I trust nothing I have said will be taken as spoken in a spirit of egotism. I am here as a schoolboy, willing to learn what I can. I am bringing the results of long experience in the theatrical field, but I have everything to learn regarding this end of it.

The World Film Corporation is to hold a nationwide exhibition day on April 24, under the auspices of the various branches throughout the United States, at which time the three first "Brady-made" pictures will be shown to the trade at a central point to which the exhibitors are invited and to which their expenses will be paid provided they are amply impressed by the display of the three first "Brady-made" pictures to enter into an agreement or contract with the World Film Corporation.

The three first pictures made under the direct supervision of Mr. Brady and to which he devoted his time and attention from the writing of the scenario to the completing of the assembling, are: "The Closed Road" with House Peters, produced by Maurice Tourneur; "The Feast of Life" with Clara Kimball Young, produced by Albert Capellani; and "Her Maternal Right" with Kitty Gordon, produced by Robert Thornby.

These three pictures will be shown in theaters engaged for the purpose, beginning at nine o'clock on the morning of April 24 and continuing until midnight. No matter from what point the exhibitors travel in order to witness the display, if they are sufficiently interested their expenses will be paid by the film concern.

Mr. Brady is writing a personal letter to every exhibitor in the United States, which will reach them previous to the display day, in which he states that he knows that every exhibitor is from Missouri and in which he requests that they attend this display whether they contemplate contracting for World products or not, in order that they can see the beginning of the new era and the first of the "Brady-made" products.

The display will be controlled throughout the country by the twenty-four branches of the World Film Corporation with the branch managers in personal charge of each display.

Robert Warwick and Alice Brady World Stars

It isn't often necessary for the screen to call upon the stage for any one particular type. The latest and most marked instance of this kind is the appearance of the noted film player, Robert Warwick, in the leading role opposite Miss Grace George in "Captain Brassbound's Conversion" which is enjoying the widest popularity at the Playhouse in New York.

Mr. Warwick is a natural and graceful actor. His work in musical comedy, later in the Gilbert and Sullivan Operas, his remarkable performance in "The Dollar Mark" on the spoken stage, has more than proven him a born histrionian. His personality on the screen has made him a valuable asset throughout filmland. He is by far the foremost male star of the World roster and the fact that he is so well liked, decided the directors of that organization to offer him soon in Thomas Lawson's startling story, "Friday the 13th," which, according to reports, is to be the most elaborate production among the forthcoming World pictures.

Mr. Warwick is dividing his time between the Peerless studio and the Playhouse and seems to thrive on the effort.

"Sudden Riches" will be Mr. Warwick's next production on the World program, being the regular release Monday, May 15.

Alice Brady, daughter of William A. Brady, has been popular with World Film viewers for some time. Her next play was suggested to her by some Grand Opera singers who are personal friends. It will be "La Boheme," which is so well known to all lovers of opera. The part of "Mimi" is particularly fitted to Miss Brady's talents.

Albert Capellani is in charge of the directorial head of the "La Boheme" production and the interiors are being made at the Fort Lee studio, where the entire floor is taken up with some of the massive sets.

The picture will be one of the first of the entirely "Brady-made" pictures and will be released June 26 on the World Program.

CHAPLIN ASKS INJUNCTION

Charges Release of His "Carmen" Burlesque in Four Reels Is Violation of Contract—Court Order to Show Cause

Last week Charlie Chaplin made a request—or was it a demand?—of the Essanay company to the effect that his burlesque of "Carmen" should not be released in four reels, as it was, he claims, originally intended for but two.

Since that time he has brought suit against Essanay and V. L. S. E. for a permanent injunction against the distribution of the film. He charges that the four reel "Carmen" will injure his reputation. An order to show cause has been issued by Justice Nathan Bijur of the New York state supreme court. Nathan Burkan has been retained as Chaplin's attorney.

The application for the injunction is accompanied by an affidavit by Sidney Chaplin, brother of Charlie, setting forth facts in regard to the making of the picture and citing the effect upon Charlie's reputation of adverse criticisms which are likely to appear in newspapers, trade and dramatic journals.

It is charged that the release of "Carmen" in four reels instead of two is a violation of Chaplin's contract with Essanay and that Ben Turpin was employed in some scenes for the purpose of completing the four reels.

At the time the news of the injunction was received the Essanay company had not been notified of Chaplin's act and therefore had no statement to offer.

New Vitagraph Eight-Reeler

"God's County and the Woman," is a special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature that promises to take its place among the greatest motion picture plays yet produced. It is an eight-reeler and was photographed in the deep snows of Great Bear Valley, up in the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California.

Bear Valley is 9,000 feet above sea level and is reached by a dog road over which Rollin S. Sturgeon and his Vitagraph players journeyed to camp for six months while filming this photoplay which has to do with the law of virtue in the great Northwest. Real dog trains in full tilt over the hills are one of the features of the film.

William Duncan, George Holt, and Nell Shipman are the leading personages in the play.

Motion pictures have won another notable. Arthur Brisbane, the brilliant editor of the New York Evening Journal, who stated a short time ago that he had never seen Mary Pickford or Charlie Chaplin on the screen, and wasn't crazy to do so, has now come to the mourner's bench and declares that he is going to witness some good films.

Big Four O. K.'s Exhibitors' Credit

V. L. S. E. RECORDS SHOW UNUSUAL INTEGRITY

THE integrity and reliability of exhibitors seems to have been established for all time.

The latest proof of the dependability of the men in the presenting end of the motion picture industry—if there be anyone who requires any proof of this fact—comes from the interesting records of V. L. S. E.'s first year of business.

These records show that the bad debts of the Big Four amount to less than one-fortieth of one per cent. The same statistics also reveal, by the way, a splendid year's business by the V. L. S. E. The negligible amount outstanding on the company's books against theater managers assumes all the more meaning when it is remembered that V. L. S. E. requires no contracts from exhibitors nor any advance deposits of any kind. The reports of these records are also of great value to the industry as a whole because they aid in establishing the exhibitor—with the few who may have any doubts—in the place in the trade which justly belongs to him.

Walter W. Irwin, General Manager V. L. S. E.

Discussing these interesting records, as well as other phases of the organization's achievements, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., on the company's first anniversary last week, said:

"The record of this organization in having upon its books at the close of a large volume of business for the first year, less than one-fortieth of one per cent in bad debts is believed to be unparalleled in any commercial enterprise.

"The compliment, however, is not so much due to this organization as it is to the exhibitors, for the figures prove that the exhibiting end of the film business is composed of men of as great a degree of substantiality and integrity as can be found in any commercial line of equal numbers.

"The experience of this company shows that the exhibitor thoroughly appreciates business methods and wants to abide by them—in fact seeks straightforward methods with which to conduct his business relations. We attribute one of the causes of the very substantial and constant growth of the business of the V. L. S. E. to this appreciation and desire on the part of the exhibitor.

"We, in turn, believe that we are doing our part, by running our business on our own money, rather than on that of our exhibitors.

"It was the judgment of this company that it was not necessary to require protection against exhibitors' accounts. On the contrary, it was felt that the exhibitor was daily becoming a more substantial and efficient man of business and that if he was treated accordingly, he would not be found wanting.

"Although the V. L. S. E. does not ask the exhibitor to assist in financing its operations, it does give an exhibitor an all-potent voice in those operations. I refer to the open booking policy by which an exhibitor can have what he wants, when he wants it, and for as long as he wants it—in other words, the system by which he is able to always chose a picture best suited to his neighborhood and his clientele, book it according to its merit.

"Full appreciation of this policy is being evidenced to a greater extent every day. Exhibitors constantly report that they want a variety of pictures—that is, a variety of themes and stars—that their respective neighborhoods and clienteles have their dislikes and peculiarities, with which they, as the neighborhood exhibitor, are best acquainted. Where they are able to see the pictures screened, and book those best suited for their purpose, without having any other pictures tied to them, they are in a position to please their patrons almost invariably.

"In this company, each manufacturer is in the keenest kind of competition, for he receives only the proceeds of his own product. Under no circumstances, is the picture of one manufacturer tied to the picture of any other manufacturer. Therefore, the weekly financial statement which each manufacturer receives, is so strong an argument for endeavoring to make better and better pictures, that no oratory or written word is ever necessary.

"But to make this policy of the utmost benefit, it is likewise necessary to see to it that every picture is sold according to its box office value—that is, according to its drawing power for the particular theater booking it.

"This policy, as instituted and operated by this company, applies just as completely to the sale of the product of one manufacturer as to that of all the manufacturers making up the organization.

"This policy of measuring our product solely on its merit, has been applied to every branch of the Big Four's affairs. It has been its inexorable ruling in regard to all of its dealings, not only with the manufacturers and exhibitors, but with its employees as well.

"This has made for a permanent organization, which taken in conjunction with the other policies outlined, has created a veritable avalanche of good will for the V. L. S. E. comprising one of the most valuable assets any organization ever had.

" 'I like to come to this exchange,' said an exhibitor, as he entered the New York branch, the other day, 'because you are always sure of doing business with the same man.'

"With between three and four hundred employees, the fact stands out that there have been only three resignations in a year's time, and very few dismissals, for the home office has preferred to err on the side of retaining an employee, than in that of dismissing him.

"Permanency of organization means advancement from the ranks, and this policy has been strictly adhered to and proven of great value.

"Of the twenty-four offices conducted by this company, sixteen are managed by men advanced from the ranks of salesmen; six bookkeepers who showed the desire to learn, and whose branch managers had the good judgment to take them about at night and instruct them, have likewise been advanced to the ranks of the sales force. Ten shipping clerks have similarly been promoted. The assistant general manager was first a branch manager, next a division manager, and then brought to the home office.

"So it is that the exhibitors have been given the benefit of the service of an organization, in which every employee, from the office boy up, is ever striving to make himself and his company more efficient, because each realizes that he has a chance to go forward since all promotions are based solely on merit.

"A salesman's duty is only half performed when he has sold our goods to the exhibitor. The other half, equally as important, is to see to it that the exhibitor resells to his substantial advantage. In other words, a salesman on our force is not only held responsible for the volume of business he does, but for the degree of success attained by each exhibitor in his territory.

"Another policy which has had its influence in the growth of this company and in the calibre of its service to its exhibitors is the profit sharing arrangement whereby everyone from the janitress up receives a substantial portion of the net profits of the company, as well as a salary, so that each is interested, not only in his own efficiency, but in the efficiency of everyone else.

"An exhibitor never finds it a trouble for any one connected with this organization to do anything to further his interests. In this way, we endeavor to make our sales occur automatically, by reason of the service rendered, so that exhibitors have learned that we are seriously and earnestly interested in their success."

"Gloria's" Treat

Exhibitors throughout the country have a treat in store in the mails for them. It may fittingly be called a "Gloria's treat."

The reference is to a large, dignified and beautifully designed folder which announces George Kleine's release of the new Billie Burke serial. It is already rather generally known that the captivating little star will have as her second screen vehicle a "motion picture novel" called "Gloria's Romance," by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes.

The commendable advertising folder mentioned above is the creation of Paul R. Kuhn of the Burnett-Kuhn Advertising Agency, Chicago. The piece is 12 by 16 inches in size. The simplicity and good taste of the cover design, with its picture of "the star supreme," is especially noteworthy. An attractive between-covers feature is the page of vari-colored bubbles enclosing charming glimpses of the charming Billie. Considering the popular rouge-topped star's effervescent personality the bubbles are a happy idea. An excellent poster-portrait in color is also included.

Exhibitors are given in the folder interesting details of the production and May 22 is given as the general release date after which a chapter will be released each week for twenty weeks.

Florence La Badie Stars in "Classics"

Florence La Badie is to appear in eight great features a year, to be known as Thanhouser Classics. They will signalize Mr. Thanhouser's challenge to the makers of a grade of production which he has never before attempted. He is ready with two productions, all completed, which will be offered to the exhibitors of the country in a startling way.

Florence La Badie, Thanhouser.

One of them is entitled "The Fugitive," a five-part drama. It is a thrilling story by Philip Lonergan, which departs completely from all standards of dramatic creation. There is no eternal triangle, no outraged innocence, and none of the standbys of the thrill-maker are in its make-up. Instead there is an entirely new treatment of plot units, along such new lines as Phil. Lonergan has shown himself capable of. The direction of "The Fugitive" shows Frederick Sullivan in an entirely new degree of power.

Quite different from "The Fugitive" is the second Classic in which Miss La Badie will be seen, "Woman, Saint and Devil." Critics who will view both productions cannot fail to recognize the versatility of the star, the director and the author, for this, too, is by Philip Lonergan, and again Mr. Sullivan is the director. Here psychology is the force that commands the action—a wierd, deep freak psychology that revolves on fact and which scientists will readily recognize as a parallel to a famous case of medical record. With the thread of fictional circumstance woven into it Miss La Badie has a vehicle which outdoes "The Case of Becky." It is not only one of dual personality, but quadruple mental state.

In booking these productions through the Mutual, Mr. Thanhouser inaugurates the biggest campaign the company ever undertook, which is interesting news to exhibitors. Each La Badie classic will have separate driving power and the line of advertising matter will will be unique and high-class. More than this, there will be a special service to picture fans, details of which will be sent broadcast in a few weeks.

Chicago Official Meeting Place

At a recent meeting held at the Hotel Sherman by the members of the Sixth National Exposition and Convention Committee in honor of the national president, Fred J. Herrington, discussion in reference to the official locality of the exposition was brought to Herrington's attention.

His answer was as follows: "I, Fred J. Herrington, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, do hereby certify that the Sixth National Conventoin and Exposition, to be held in Chicago in the second week of July, is the officially authorized national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America." This statement was officially signed by President Herrington and Sidney Smith, secretary for Illinois.

Exhibitors Besiege Billie Burke

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE" RELEASED MAY 22

KEEN indeed is the enthusiasm with which exhibitors are responding to the announcement that "Gloria's Romance," the new George Kleine motion picture novel from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, is going to feature Billie Burke. Like one man they have visited the nearest Kleine exchange in their territory and applied for bookings on the picture. Prices which have been bid for the showing of the picture have shattered all previous records.

In a few localities the largest and best located house in the territory has been favored with a contract permitting it to run the picture two weeks ahead of its general release on May 22, and in one big city the phenomenal sum of $40,000 has been paid for such a service. The owner of a large circuit of neighborhood houses has contracted to show "Gloria's Romance" in all of his theaters, paying $16,000 for the film beginning May 22.

In a number of cities theaters have contracted to run the Billie Burke production for a full week on each chapter, despite the fact that in the past the houses have never held a picture longer than two days, and this applied to such gigantic entertainments as "Cabiria" and "The Battle Cry of Peace"—but so great is the established drawing power of Billie Burke as a screen star that the theaters have unhesitatingly booked "Gloria's Romance" with the understanding that each feature chapter shall run for a full week.

Just as samples of the class of theaters that are contracting for the Hughes film novel one might mention the Studebaker in Chicago, under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaefer; the Arcadia in Philadelphia, which is operated by the Stanley Company; the Mary Anderson at Louisville, one of the Keith houses; and the Isis at Denver, operated by Mr. Baxter. Ascher Brothers, owners of a whole circuit of neighborhood theaters in Chicago and vicinity, have taken the production for the entire circuit, while in the East and South, more than a dozen big chain theater owners are bidding against one another for the showing of the film.

Billie Burke has clearly established her drawing power as a screen star and there is therefore no hesitation on the part of the big exhibitors in shattering in a moment all their previous policies and taking advantage of what is generally considered the biggest box office magnet they have yet been offered. Billie Burke in electric lights over a theater gets the money and the exhibitors know it.

"BILLIE" PLAYS WITH INDIANS

Tribe of Seminoles "Act" with Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance," the Coming George Kleine Film Novel

When the time arrived for the taking of the Indian scenes which form an important incident in the earlier chapters of "Gloria's Romance," the new George Kleine motion picture novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, in which Billie Burke is being featured, no little difficulty was found in securing an Indian tribe that would consent to pose for the films. Finally, after a journey of nearly five hundred miles, Director Walter Edwin discovered a band of Seminole Indians, and with the aid of Professor Histed, a noted photographer who annually spends months with the Indians in Florida and in whom the Seminoles have unlimited confidence, induced the chief to consent to the picture making in the camp.

Fleeting glimpses of Miss Billie Burke, the $4,000 a week star of "Gloria's Romance," the new George Kleine motion picture novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes. No other stage comedienne can claim greater popularity than the captivating Billie.

At first the Indians were most suspicious of the camera, but gradually the squaws who were much attracted by Miss Burke's unusual hair, conquered their nervousness enough to permit of their approaching for a closer view of the strange tresses, whose like they had never beheld before. Meanwhile Prof. Histed had carefully explained the great honor that was being done the tribe when it was invited to take part in a picture with Miss Burke, for, he pointed out, the white men regarded the fascinating little star as a most beautiful and accomplished woman and paid thousands of dollars merely to behold her on the speaking stage. When, in addition, he declared that for its work in the film, the tribe would receive a present of meat (a great luxury), many bolts of calico and quantities of gaudy beads, a bargain was struck and the picture taking began.

Most of the bucks of the tribe wore garments closely resembling Jacob's "coat of many colors," being all rags and patches and most carefully hung outside of their trousers. When the "dudes" of the tribe were really "dolled up," they tucked their shirts inside the trousers and added a turban to their costume. The squaws were dressed mostly in beads, with a long straight garment, made in one piece, that formed a strange contrast to the dainty raiment of Miss Burke as she moved among them.

MANY NEW MUTUALS

"The Conscience of John David," with Crane Wilbur, and "The Stain in the Blood," Coming on Mutual Program

Among the Mutual feature releases for the week of April 24 are the Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, "The Conscience of John David," a Horsley production featuring Crane Wilbur, and "The Stain in the Blood," second of these de luxe features from the Signal studios presenting Edythe Sterling, Norbert A. Myles and Robert McQuarrie in the principal roles.

During the same week Mutual will release two three reel features and three two reel subjects in which Vivian Rich, Edward Coxen, Marion Swayne, Lizette Thorne, Frank Borzage, Anna Little, Jack Richardson, the Fairbank twins—Madeline and Marion—George Marlo, Bert Delaney and others equally popular with Mutual fans will be seen in the principal roles.

Crane Wilbur is the author as well as the star of "The Conscience of John David." For this production the author-star has selected an unusual and exceptionally powerful subject, in which he essays the role of "John David," a young millionaire and idler, and a waster in whom self love is held dominant. His supporting cast includes Alice Rinaldo, who made her first appearance as a Horsley-Mutual star in the Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Love Liar"; Mae Gaston, recently signed to a long-term contract by David Horsley; John Oaker; Louis Durham, former "big leaguer"; Francis Raymond, Frederick Montague and several others.

"The Conscience of John David." Horsley-Mutual.

The Signal studios' second Masterpicture, De Luxe release, "The Stain in the Blood," is an extremely unique psychological drama, the scenes of which open in the far West and close in the eastern metropolis. "The Stain in the Blood" has to do with a youth who, left an orphan along with his sister by the massacre of their parents in an Indian raid, develops vicious traits at an early age which, in succeeding years lead him into a number of desperate escapades. Finally, aided by his sister and her husband, a young inventor, the youth is restored to manhood and his early life kept a secret from him.

Robert A. Dillon, who wrote the script for "The Stain in the Blood," has long been a close student of psychology and much of the data gathered by him in his researches has been woven into the story of the play. The question of hereditary influence, however, is treated by Mr. Dillon in an exceedingly novel but convincing manner in this production.

"The Stain in the Blood" was screened under the direction of Robert McQuarrie, who also appears in the role of the sheriff, adopted father of the hero of the story. The principals are supported by a strong cast of Signal-Mutual players, including Dorothy Nash, Willard K. Wilson and several others.

The two three reel feature offerings for the same week include "A Broken Genius," an American production with a strong heart punch, the principal roles of which are assumed by Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne for release April 27, and "The Carriage of Death," a Thanhouser drama to be released April 29 featuring Marion Swayne and Bert Delaney.

Included in the three two reel subjects are "The Counterfeit Earl," from the American studios, for release April 24, in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh have the chief roles, a Thanhouser production entitled "A Man of Honor," for release April 25, with the Fairbank Twins, Madeline and Marion, and George Marlo in the leading roles, and "Unlucky Luke," a Mustang western drama, for release April 28, in which the principal roles are handled by Anna Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson.

Among the comedy releases for the same week are "Dad's Darling Daughters" with Riley Chamberlain and Walter Hiers, and "Willie Wendy to Willie" with Frances Keyes and Jay Yorke, Falstaff productions for release April 24 and 29, respectively; "Bugs and Bugles," featuring Carl Halloway and Johnny Sheehan, released April 26, and "Two Beds and No Sleep," for release April 30, in which Orral Humphreys is the featured player. These last two names will be released under the Beauty brand. The Vogue comdies for the week feature Rube Miller and Madge Kirby in "The Island That Never Was," for release April 25, and "Bungling Bill, Doctor," with Paddy McQuire and Rena Rodgers. This will be released April 30.

New York's Double-Header Exposition

TWO heads are better than one, they say, and perhaps two shows are better than one. Some people have deplored the condition that has called for two motion picture expositions in New York within a week of each other. Naturally everybody will want to see both the "Third Annual Exhibitors' Exposition" held May 1 to 6 at Grand Central Palace, New York, by the Exhibitors' League, and the "First National Motion Picture Exposition" at Madison Square Garden, New York, May 6 to 14, promoted by the Motion Picture Board of Trade. And fortunately everybody can see both. The dates abut so nicely end to end that the visitor who has wisely arranged his vacation in the spring can have two joyous weeks of sight-seeing and society.

We might almost think the double-header exposition was the result of agreement rather than disagreement. Even the ultra-busy members of the industry, whose devotion to detail makes uneasy an absence from duty of more than a few days, can encompass the tail end of one show and the beginning of another in one glorious week-end. What better opportunity ever can come to see everything there is in the trade?

Competition has its unpleasant features, but generally its results are good. If we can call the holding of two expositions a species of competition, in the broad sense of the word, it is quite likely that each show will react to the benefit of the other. The spur of rivalry should make each effort better, if that be possible, than either alone would have been. The duo of events, regarded as one big celebration—which it will be in the eyes of the disinterested visitor—should attract more attention and more attendance for both parts of it than either could accomplish.

Exhibitors, and all other members of the trade, make a mistake if they do not regard these expositions seriously. They are serious. They are as important as the annual automobile shows and the business shows. They represent the supreme effort of combined forces—of the men who know the motion picture business and the men who know the exposition business.

The ambitious theater man, who wants to make the most possible out of his profession, to assist in the constant uplifting of its standards and the broadening of its influence, who wants to make it truly a big business for big men, can hardly hope to see his dreams materialize if he ignores these "concentration camps" of the industry.

It is quite usual to hear exhibitors say they "haven't time" for conventions and expositions. And they believe it too. They don't want to go because they persist in regarding the events as contrary to their theories of what such events should be. The earnest and serious man thinks they are pleasure junkets. The hail fellow imagines they are dry business affairs. So they stay home, following the line of least resistance; and gradually the men who do go apply their stimulated ideas and forge ahead, and the stay-at-homes lose out.

Lack of "time" is a poor excuse for neglect of trade expositions and conventions. The live exhibitor regards them as part of his business, and makes time for them with the same conscientiousness that he takes time to count his receipts and inspect his program and study his audiences.

For the national trade event that undertakes to gather under one roof all there is of importance to an industry is not a thing apart, to be visited or not, as the passing whim suggests. It is inseparably interlocked with the efficiency and the success of all branches of the trade. No member of the industry can say "This does not concern me." The expositions and the conventions furnish working capital for the competitors of the indifferent man.

Natural Prosperity, or Cultivated Efficiency?

THOSE who circulate among exhibitors have observed that there is nowhere near as much grumbling about bad business as there was a year ago. Business is good. Of course people in all kinds of industries can say that, and are saying it. Most of them take it as a matter of course; "business is good" or "business is bad," as it may be, and in either case apparently beyond their control.

Many exhibitors have found it only too easy to fall into that habit of thought. There are so many excuses for bad business; so many seemingly good reasons why the house is only half filled.

If it is rainy or cold, the people stay at home. If it is pleasantly warm or unpleasantly hot they go to the beach or the park or drive out in the country. If times are hard, folks are saving their dimes. If prosperity reigns, they are busy with more expensive amusements and pursuits.

The exhibitor who is more ingenious than enterprising, and who finds it easier to console himself with philosophy than to bestir himself for business, can find plenty of perfectly logical explanations for the falling off of trade.

But the clever explainers of lost business seem to be silent of late. Some of them have quit altogether, it is true; but many more are too busy with business to play any minor chords. As we said before, business is good.

To do him justice, the man who considers bad business as beyond his power to remedy frequently takes no credit for the converse condition, and accepts prosperity when it comes as a gift of the gods or simply a turn of the wheel. Since we have condemned him for his former attitude, we would like to be able to praise him for accomplishing, even unconsciously, his "change of luck."

For we believe the exhibitor has accomplished that change himself, and luck had nothing to do with it. Even in the last year he has learned a lot of things about his business that he never knew before. His trade papers have given him information about his fellow exhibitors, and how they overcame obstacles similar to those confronting him. The makers of films and their exchanges, spurred by ever increasing competition, have gone out of their way to help him to success. After first assuring him of a really good program, they have shown him how to advertise and where, how to arrange his lobby display, and even how to meet his patrons. Best of all, they have inspired and enthused him and filled him with energy.

On general principles we hate house organs; they cost a lot of money that never comes back in any form, and that rightfully should go to the legitimate trade journal publisher. But our hats are off, just the same, to the editors of a few inspirational papers that ply between certain film makers and their customers; for we know they have done much to convince the exhibitor that his success lies not with the weather or the times, but with himself.

And the majority of exhibitors are becoming convinced of that truth. The grumbling and excuses are dying out; hard work is killing them. They won't come back, because work brings success, and the exhibitors who have adopted the new attitude toward their business have neither time nor occasion for complaint.

There is no business that responds more quickly, either way, to neglect or application. The motion picture man who stands still and expects patrons to come to him merely because he has seats in his house, and pictures on a screen, cannot hope for success, even with the help of "luck." He who devotes all his time to making his show better, even when it already seems as good as possible, can hardly fail. For him, business is bound to be good.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

On the Job from Eight to Eleven

By R. J. Edenfield

President, Dreamland Theater Company, Augusta, Ga.

AS SOON as I purchased a half interest in the Dreamland theater I rebuilt it, spending $13,000 on improvements. Today we have the largest, safest and most modern picture house in Augusta.

The seating capacity is 650, approximately 500 on the main floor and 150 in the balcony. Always bearing in mind that accidents will happen, our first thought was for the safety of our patrons, we therefore provided plenty of exits. In the middle of the theater is a wide aisle leading to two large double doors that open directly on the sidewalk, and in the rear on each side of the screen are exits, and besides, of course, there is the main entrance. We therefore pride ourselves on our ability to empty our theater on very short notice.

We looked also very carefully to the comfort of our patrons, and the entire building is well ventilated by means of large discharge fans emptying the house or changing the air every two to five minutes, according to the crowd and temperature outside.

We have a well furnished retiring room for ladies, fitted with lavatory and two toilets, an ample supply of large mirrors and toilet requisites, and keep a maid on duty all the time. For the men there is a large room with lavatory and toilet. A janitor is on duty constantly, and the premises in and around the theater are kept clean and sanitary. Two uniformed ushers are employed to look after the seating and general comfort of patrons.

Our operating room is large and well ventilated, and contains two Power's 6 A 1915 projecting machines, motor driven, take-ups separately motor driven, lines to each machine, fitted with volt meters and ammeters, with switches so arranged that each machine can be perfectly controlled by one man if necessary.

We run a strictly program house, using good, clean films, eight to sixteen days' old from release date, —one, two and three reel subjects, except one five reel feature on every Wednesday, which is our dull day.

Music is furnished by a Photo Player, which takes the place of a twelve piece orchestra. We start it up in the morning and forget it until eleven o'clock p. m., when we close. We use the latest music out, much of which is furnished to our special order.

The Dreamland's dignified entrance, Augusta, Georgia

No advertising slides go on our screen; not at any price. We issue five thousand copies of a four page weekly program, 6x9 inches. No advertisements are ever allowed on this program, three thousand copies of which are distributed in the residences every Monday morning. The remainder are taken up by patrons from a table in our lobby.

We insist upon and keep perfect order all the time. Misbehavior on the part of couples or individuals is carefully looked after, and if necessary parties are removed from the theater, no matter who they are. Ladies are required to remove their hats unless sitting next to the wall or on the back row; their refusal means that they are taken to the box office and their money refunded. This rule is followed strictly, and no exception is made for station or rank.

All bills against the theater are paid on presentation, we never allow one to remain unpaid if correct, not even to the end of the month.

The writer is at the theater every morning at 8:30 and remains until the close of the show at eleven at night. He does his own office work, checks up the ticket office morning and evening, pays little attention to drummers and buys only what is needed.

Admission price always five and ten cents, children over four feet eight inches pay ten cents the same as adults.

"Picture Theater Is a Retail Store"

That a successful photoplay house is built along the same lines as is a successful retail store and that there is something more in the motion picture industry than simply producing patrons that brings success, is the basic theme of an excellent article that has been written by Charles C. Burr of the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Burr in his article says: Running a theater where the program changes weekly, or oftener, is after all like running a retail store, inasmuch as its greatest asset is its satisfied customers. Satisfied customers are repeat customers.

Pleased patrons—as we will call them hereafter—are made by quality pictures. Whether it be drama, comedy, travelogue, or news pictures, they must measure up to the standard. This insures steady patronage of the class of people who have the means, inclination and time to attend your theater regularly.

A drama must be a logically presented, well-acted play; the day has passed when a plot that is an insult to the intelligence of anyone can be perpetrated on the public. If it is comedy, it should not be of the slapstick, vulgar variety, but should depend for its humor on the comic situations or the natural fun characterizing certain personalities. If it is newspictures, it should be real news, not something the people have read about a month before. If it is travel pictures, they should be backed by a comprehensive plan—not merely a scenic, but a good travelogue.

We don't need to point out to you the advantages of good projection and good music. You know as well as we do that "The Birth of a Nation" or "Carmen" would not have been the successes they were had it not been for their well-planned musical score.

Runs Open Air Theater in Summer

By John T. Bartlett,

Owner and Manager, Grand Theater, Racine, Wisconsin.

In 1909 I purchased an upstairs theater in Oconomowoc, seating 250 people, which another party had started and failed in. I ran this theater for about a year, showing vaudeville and pictures.

Then I came to the conclusion that vaudeville and pictures did not go together and decided to look for a location in a larger city. I chose Racine, a manufacturing city of about 45,000 people.

At that time there was one upstairs and two store shows showing pictures, and very poorly lighted, in fact so dark that the ushers used a small flashlight to locate the seats. I decided to build a real picture theater for the people and show motion pictures only. I built a theater which would seat 400 people, a real theater with a lobby, a good sized operating booth, and two boxes. People wondered how I could show pictures in a place so well lighted. The "Big Sister's Club" took the matter up and made the other places light up more.

I opened the theater with an orchestra of three pieces, two illustrated songs, and three reels of pictures. I later let the singers go and added another reel. I was one of the first managers to do this in the state.

My success is due to the following facts: First, Racine has a very fine class of people and they like pictures; secondly, I have not been away from the theater ten nights in the six years, and have tried to give the people just what they want at all times.

I own the only open-air theater in the city. The screen is built on the street side so the audience faces the street, and the front is all open where it is not taken up with the screen, so people passing along the street can look in as they pass by. I find that people like the open air house very much on hot nights and it pays well.

Watch Theater From Front to Back Door

By Aaron Laskin,

Manager, Kemper Theater, Little Rock, Kansas.

I have succeeded in my twelve years of experience by keeping a close eye on the running of my theater from the front to the back door, treating my patrons with every courtesy, helping my employees when in need, so as to have their close co-operation, and advertising extensively in the newspapers.

My motto is honest, fair and square dealings with everyone. That is one reason why I have no difficulty in securing a good patronage at all times. Regardless of how theaters have been formerly run, I have always been successful in putting them on the right side of the ledger.

Direct Mail Advertising

"Every audience to its taste and every motion picture to its particular audience is the maxim upon which every manager of a motion picture house should build his advertising campaign. The knowledge of how to find the audience for the picture and the picture for the audience, coupled with a direct mailing list, intelligently selected and subdivided into classes, is a process which turns publicity into showers of dimes for the box office," states George K. Robinson, of the Famous Players Film Company.

"To begin with, the manager or publicity director of a motion picture theater must have a number of composite talents and efficiencies," he continues. "He must have executive ability, initiative, tact, knowledge of human kind and good judgment.

"The way to get business is to find the audience for your plays and go after it. Selling is the great thing in almost any enterprise; selling pictures at a profit is showmanship. Managers are all sellers, but it is the people who buy. It is the people whom managers must interest.

"Every manager should know his pictures. Even more important is it that he should know the people who buy his tickets. He should know exactly how many doctors, lawyers, teachers, clubwomen, suffragists, mothers and business men make up his community and shape his advertising accordingly.

"Many of the instigators of direct-mail advertising claim it is non-productive, but if used intelligently it will prove successful. Care in selecting the proper mailing list is one of the biggest factors, if not the most important factor, in the success of a scheme like this. The man who is successful with such a list is the exhibitor who, having made his list carefully, uses it intelligently afterwards.

"How to get a 'live' mailing list is a problem with some managers, but it is easy if you know how to go after it properly. The telephone book will give you lists of doctors, lawyers and professional men while voting lists will furnish you with additional names.

"Women are the best class to appeal to in general. In every town there are women's clubs and organizations. Lists of their members are easily obtainable and the character of their organizations will guide the exhibitor as to the class of pictures which will appeal to them. Suffrage societies will always support a film which has an important bearing on the woman's cause. Blue books and social registers will furnish lists for society plays or films in which society women may be interested.

"Teachers are always an influence in a community and one which, if called to one's assistance will prove of great benefit. Educational films will gain their support. When a feature of this kind is shown the live exhibitor will see that every teacher in his neighborhood comes to see it if possible. Get their opinions of the picture, if you can, and utilize them in the advertising campaign."

From Usher to Exhibitor

By D. L. Sharits

Manager, Star Theater, Medford, Ore.

Ten years ago I was an usher. I worked in the only picture theater in Memphis, Tenn. I soon became chief operator.

One day someone told me I was a singer. I took his word for it, left the operating booth and began with the illustrated songs. During all this time I was studying the whole picture business.

My next step was as a yodler in vaudeville. While in this line of the business I worked for hundreds of the best known picture men in the Southern States. I next managed a film exchange in Texas and was also connected with the General Film Company of Cincinnati. Another field of the business in which I have had two years of experience, is as professional cameraman. This enables me to give the exchanges the criticism they strongly desired. When it comes to details, nothing passes me.

I have operated seven picture theaters. I am giving my patrons in Medford the very best film service possible—Paramount, V. L. S. E. (they are hard to beat), Mutual Masterpictures and "The Gold Rooster Plays." This service is good enough for any theater. Why shouldn't an exhibitor be successful with such a dandy line up?

The first thing in operating a theater is, of course, service, and the best that money, brains and efficiency can obtain. It isn't a question of how much, but how good and consistent, that makes and holds business. A man doesn't have to be the owner of the best theater in his town to be the most prosperous. Absolutely not. Give the public good, clean pictures and never overdo any with too much publicity. Once the public is deceived it takes weeks to get over it.

Don't lose any time with a crank turner. Get an operator and pay him accordingly. The best pictures in the country are no good unless the projection is good. See that the cashier handles your patrons as she should. "Thank you," doesn't cost a penny and often bring your patrons back again. If your house help is poor it will help put you out of business.

I believe in strong and original publicity. On many of my big features I pull some good stunts.

I have an electric sign so arranged I can attach it on top of my car. This sign is interchangeable, with three lines of letters:—the star's name, the subject and theater. I have a set of orchestra bells inside the car played by one who knows how, and while driving over town it attracts a great deal of attention.

I also use banners on the street cars. But I never advertise a picture in this way unless I know it will deliver the goods and is worthy of such strong publicity. Some exhibitors would stop at such an expensive advertisement, but now in this business the man who is afraid of a few dollars invested in a good advertisement will be the one who will some day drop out altogether. If such advertising gets the business it's cheap at any price.

How D. L. Sharits, usher-cameraman-exhibitor, dressed his lobby for "The Battle Cry" and how he uses street cars.

I am a strong believer in good lobby displays. My lobby never looks the same day in and day out. I dress it differently each day. This is a very important thing to consider.

I quite often make movies of some local event which I find is always a good drawing card.

"Do Unto Others" Etc.

By William Merz

Owner, Princess Theater, Chilton, Wis.

My success has been due to the old Golden Rule. By using this policy you feel happy at all times, as you will know that you are doing your best to please the public, and by smiling you show them that you want their patronage.

The population here is 1,800. Two theaters. There have been three men started here and each closed up. All they would say was the people did not know good pictures when they see them. They did not show good pictures and their service was poor. They only showed one show a night and two shows a week; they kept no order. You can't get the good people from any town to go where there is poor management.

After the last man closed his doors the landlord asked me to try it. My first step was to make improvements, to put in everything of the best. On my opening night I made it plain to the people that I had come to stay and that I wanted to co-operate with every one of them and to let me know of anything that they saw to make our little theater better. I got hearty applause, which gave me encouragement. I started with a 60 day service and now I am running a 30 day service and features of the best. I do not run a cheap feature and charge a small price, but get a high priced feature that is new and get a good price and make more money. People would rather pay a little more for a picture and see a good, clean, new picture. I run Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday, Sunday afternoon and evening, two shows a night and four shows on Sunday; no seat less than 10 cents or more than 25 cents. I put on 4 reels for 10 cents. My competitor gives 5 reels for 5 and 10 cents. He can only run once a week. He has a bigger house, but that doesn't get him any more business.

I had a hard time of it when I started, but I kept on smiling. Now I have the people with me, which makes it much easier. I lay my success to hard work. Every week I get a window in the best store in town and trim it up with some good novelty. For instance, Inner view of the Princess, Chilton, Wis.

I showed "The Strife Eternal," which is a big feature. I made a big egg that looked as if it were hatched, then I put a flag in the center, also another flag that read, " 'The Strife Eternal,' as thrilling as the 'Birth of a Nation,' will be shown at the Princess." Another good display I had was when I started "The Goddess." I placed nice fresh grass in the window and made it look like the scene that was shown in the play. Then I put the photos and a sign which read, "Scene taken from 'The Goddess.' " Each week I have a different display.

Another good permanent advertisement is to get permission to paint red arrows pointing to your theater on electric and telephone poles for several blocks on main street. Then at the theater there should be a sign, "The end of the Red Trail." It worked very successfully in my city.

Feature Brings Houses Big Business

The Orpheum Theater in Cleveland, through Manager F. P. Woda, booked "The Ne'er-Do-Well" for three weeks, starting Monday, March 27. The critics in the newspapers were very liberal in their praise of the picture, and devoted a special section to the attraction.

A two weeks' booking has just been concluded with the Tabor Grande in Denver, for a showing of the same feature at prices of twenty-five and fifty cents.

There seems to have been an unusual demand for the picture since it has been demonstrated that the public are willing to pay a dollar to see it, as was the case with the Pitt theater in Pittsburgh.

Henry Corn, manager of the Aetna Amusement Company, operating the Olympia Theater on Broadway, New York City, in a letter to the V.-L.-S.-E. offices states that on the two nights when he ran "The Ne'er Do Well' his house was filled to capacity. He has booked a return date.

Pictographs Teach Preparedness

SCREEN MAGAZINE FULL OF INTERESTING "ARTICLES"

FILM newspapers have been common for some time. It is not, therefore, surprising to find a "magazine of the screen" being developed to a high state of excellence.

And this the Paramount Pictures Corporation is doing, presenting to the eyes of the public all manner of things interesting and important to the welfare of the nation. For instance, the Paramount Pictographs, as this film magazine is called, have taught women how to carve meat for the household; they have conducted a "Better Babies" campaign; and have presented innumerable entertaining and humorous features such as the Holmes travel pictures, the silhouette plays and the Paramount-Bray animated cartoons.

Most important of all, Paramount Pictographs are now driving home with graphic force the arguments for national preparedness. The pictures shown in this series form a powerful factor in swinging public opinion in favor of an adequate army and navy for the preservation of peace.

Rounding out the dramas on the Paramount program for the week of May 1 are three single reels which include the Pictograph films, headed by Henry Reuterdahl's picturized arguments on naval preparedness; "Visiting the Dog-Eaters of Benguet," Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, and "Bobby Bumps and His Goatmobile," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon by Earl Hurd.

In continuation of the campaign for national preparedness in the Pictographs for the week Henry Reuterdahl's arguments for proper naval equipment against a foreign enemy will be visualized on the screen. Reuterdahl is a noted naval authority in this country and he has graphically demonstrated the inadequacy of America's sea defenses. In another division of this reel the rules of etiquette will be translated into pictures.

Unique coincidence relative to the picturing on the screen of the utter lack of preparedness of the United States army and the actual happenings as they are daily occurring in Mexico, are creating a wonderful amount of comment throughout the country, one of the most flagrant of which lately has been the failure of the machine guns when brought into play against the Mexicans. The singular answer the government gave to this was that "it was too dark to load U. S. machine guns."

Consistently and constructively have the Paramount Pictographs visualized on the screen the many different departments in our army and navy in which deficiency is uppermost, and at the very same moment that there was flashed over the wires the fact that the machine guns had failed in their purpose to drive away the bandits from Columbus, New Mexico, the Pictographs were showing on the screen these very same American soldiers who were called to arms and picturing the inadequacy of our machine guns. All these pictures were made weeks before, with the permission of the government upon Mexican soil.

Frederick Palmer, the war correspondent of whom it has often been said "He has seen more war than any other American," and who is editing the "Preparedness" section of the Pictographs, made the decided statement when the guns refused to work, "Weeks ago we knew this was going to happen. We had seen the pictures that were taken of our boys and it wasn't a startling fact to me that PROBABLY Paramount Pictographs are doing as much as any other one force to swing the public opinion of the nation over to the side of preparedness. The ideas of such notable military experts as Frederick Palmer (on the right), Major General Wood (on the left), and the naval expert, Henry Reuterdahl, are presented with telling force.

after we had shown the poor type of machine guns that the American soldiers were compelled to use, in one of our close-up pictures one of these guns after properly shooting one long clip cartridge jammed on the next. It may have surprised many, but it did not surprise anyone who has had actual reason to know how inadequate we are in that department."

It is brought out in the Pictographs that Germany went into the war of the nations with 50,000 machine guns built on the Maxim lines, all of them being water-cooled. The U. S. machine guns are air-cooled and absolutely rigid, not allowing them to be turned, depreciating their worth. Machine guns next to field artillery are the most important devices in warfare.

Dogs, served a la carte, are luxuries on the menu at the dinner to which Burton Holmes takes his fellow travellers in the 13th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Visiting the Dog-Eaters of Benquet." The trip is made in Mr. Holmes' motor car up the Benguet Road, most wonderful mountain-climbing boulevard in the world, leading from the Lowlands of Luzon, near Manila, to the summer capitol at Baguio, where the audience sees a polo game, played by two teams of officials stationed at Baguio. The dog-eating Benguet Igorots appear for the first time on any screen, and also the dog-market, where thin dogs are most sought after by the natives. Later the animals are fattened with rice, and stewed or roasted. Paramount audiences will also get a glimpse of the Bontoc Igorots and the famous school, started by Mrs. Kelley for the daughters of natives, where girls are transformed from savages into well-bred young women. This release is particularly interesting for its portrayal of the improvement wrought among the natives under Uncle Sam's guardianship.

Earl Hurd of Los Angeles and the Bray studios have contributed the eighteenth release to the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons. The story concerns Bobby Bumps, who starts out in his goatmobile propelled by a goat operating a treadmill.

Comedians who do a St. Vitus dance on the motion picture screen, when they should be as sedate as deacons, and brickbats and skillets which float with lackadaisical ease, when they should have the velocity of cannon balls, are the flies-in-the-ointment of the animated cartoonist's existence. So thinks Cartoonist Hurd.

"The drawing and timing of an action is a brand new science and any artist who is willing to spoil a few hundred feet of film and some time and patience, will feel amply rewarded if he can see his characters come to life before his eyes and act in an almost rational manner," declares Mr. Hurd. "The animated cartoon is an entirely different proposition from any other kind of drawing. My first attempts on the screen could only be looked at through smoked glasses. Characters that I had expected to walk sedately into a picture, volplaned in, and other objects that I had drawn to move with speed were simply wafted along."

Poppe Makes Change

Harry H. Poppe, who has conducted the publicity department of the Centaur Film Company during the last year, has severed his connection with that concern.

Mr. Poppe, although one of the youngest advertising men in the motion picture trade, has been one of the most successful in the field.

Entering the publicity ranks through the mediums of journalism and amusement promotion, Mr. Poppe made press-agenting a study rather than a mere bread and butter occupation, with excellent results.

Mr. Poppe's "copy" has long been welcomed by editors because of its polished construction, its crisp, direct style and its unerring "news value."

"I have made him every inducement to stay in my company," said David Horsley, " but he is ambitious and doubtless has plans in mind which he is anxious to work out for himself. All I wish to add is that if he remains in his present line, the firm which secures his services will have its publicity handled by one of the most capable and reliable experts to be found in or out the industry."

Mr. Poppe has as yet made no announcement of his plans.

Billie Burke's Wardrobe Insured

George Kleine has insured Billie Burke's wardrobe of Henri Bendel, Lucile and Balcom frocks, for $40,000.

These are the gowns which Miss Burke wears while playing "Gloria Stafford" in the new Kleine motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, and the insurance was taken out not so much to cover the cost of the specially designed creations from the studios of the best known designers, as it was to insure Mr. Kleine against loss if anything happened to destroy the frocks ere the film is completed. For instance, Miss Burke wears a frock in the early chapters of the story that does not again appear on the screen until well along toward the end of the tale, and if the gown should be destroyed by fire or otherwise ere the last scenes are taken the first ones would be utterly useless, since they would have to be retaken at great expense and trouble.

It is this sort of loss against which the film manufacturer has always to be on guard, when he undertakes the making of a lengthy picture—one whose photographing alone takes several months.

D. W. Griffith's great photo-play is now being put into form. Thousands of people are being used and acres of ground have been covered with buildings necessary to the action of the story.

One of those thrillers you read about. The train was switched off all right, but it left Louella Maxam, the new 21 year-old Keystone princess in a real faint. The play: The Fred Mace-Keystone "An Oily Scoundrel." The villains, Hugh Fay and Charles Arling

"Fighting Germans" Coming

MUTUAL RELEASES WAR FILM MAY 8

FORMING a second big chapter in the motion picture history of the European war, the Mutual Film Corporation will on May 8 release a special five reel feature, "The Fighting Germans." The first big group of war pictures released by Mutual was known as "Fighting for France."

Vivid close views of what has happened in the desperate conflicts along the German-Russian border are presented in "The Fighting Germans," which is scheduled for release on May 8.

The picture intimately portrays Germany at war, giving glimpses of life on, in front of, and behind the battle lines. The great guns, the Zeppelins, the fast flying aeroplanes, miles of war-hardened marching men and the desperate hand-to-hand trench rushes are shown.

It is hardly necessary to say that these pictures were taken with the knowledge and consent of the German military authorities. They are official war records, taken by A. K. Dawson, an intrepid New York photographer who volunteered for the service. The Mutual Film Corporation has obtained these pictures through the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc.

This official sanction has given the films material which could not have been obtained in any other circumstances. The kaiser is seen on the firing line close up. The crown prince is shown in command of his regiment and in action.

Much of the action presented in these five thrilling reels took place about the fortified village of Ivangorod. In fact so much of the operations there were photographed by Dawson that it is possible to present in "The Fighting Germans" a fairly complete film record of the attack and destruction of the fortifications.

One of the several battle scenes show in a particularly effective manner of the massing of infantrymen in marching formation for a rush march to reinforce menaced first line trenches.

The construction of a field telegraph and telephone line under fire is depicted. Several scenes show with convincing photography the progress of a tremendous artillery duel.

Despite the official character of the pictures and the close military supervision of the photography one forbidden scene has crept into "The Fighting Germans." It is a close-up of a 30.5 Skoda gun, one of the heaviest pieces of ordnance ever made and a rival for the great weapons which levelled the fortifications of Belgium on the western front.

The negatives picturing the Skoda gun were passed through by the photo-censors in Berlin by an act of oversight almost unbelievable in consideration of the usual absolute efficiency of the German censor.

Dangling from the end of a cable 100 feet above Broadway Houdini, "the handcuff king," freed himself from the steel shackles which bound his hands behind him. From the Mutual Weekly.

Efforts have been made to recall the negative and to take the prints out of circulation, but this has proven impossible.

"The Fighting Germans," along with the Mutual's previous war special, "Fighting for France," makes a photo-history of the war as seen from both sides.

The photography is particularly good, especially in view of the trying and perilous conditions under which it was done. Because of the official approval of the films it has been possible for the Mutual to secure unusual manufacturing advantages in the production of the prints in the use of German dyes and chemicals. The prints of "The Fighting Germans" are being exquisitely tinted without regard to the expense and scarcity of the colors required. The Germans and the Berlin Analine Works are seeing to it that "The Fighting Germans" is a finely finished product up to German standards of photographic excellence.

A plan of newspaper promotion giving special opportunities for co-operative effort between the exhibitor and his local newspaper is being presented by the Mutual Film Corporation and the syndicate department of the Buffalo Times.

The operation of this plan is such that the exhibitor will be able to go to his newspaper and find it prepared with a method of exploitation which will put money in the box office and at the same time pay the newspaper well for its effort and space expended in promotion.

The scheme of operation of this exhibitor-newspaper exploitation is such that the picture is assured of a long life and consistent successes even after it reaches the lesser theatres in the small communities.

A subject closer home than the war across the ocean is found in the Thanhouser-Mutual three-reel psychological drama, "The Man's Sin." As this play is based upon the double standard of morals question it is full of vivid interest for the public as a whole, as well as professional sociologists. Grace De Carlton and Edwin Stanley play the leading roles.

The story is a vivid characterization of a man who, in his early youth, wrongs a girl who loves him, but suffers for his sin in the later years of his life. His nemesis is an aunt of the girl he wronged, and who died when the child was born. The girl was raised by the aunt ignorant of her father, and when she reaches young womanhood she becomes a trained nurse. Her father had married years before, and had a daughter near her own age. One day the father is injured in an automobile accident and brought to the hospital where his daughter nursed him.

The aunt, who during all these years had nursed a desire for revenge, saw an opportunity to reap it upon the legitimate daughter and planned her downfall. Her plot is discovered in time to save the girl, and the tangled problem is unwoven by the faithful nurse and the physician at the hospital, who loves her. The man makes reparation for his youthful folly.

In the American-Mutual three part drama, "Realization," there is given an unusually thrilling story of the stage, a subject which because of its seeming mystery, always carries a peculiar fascination for the patrons of the stage and screen.

The story of "Realization" centers about a violinist, leader of the theater orchestra, and a beautiful singer. The girl is inspired by the playing of the talented musician, who loves her next to his precious violin. A friendship is formed between them, but as she becomes famous in her operatic work she is attracted by the glamour of society and forsakes her musician lover for a wealthy man about town.

When her new admirer, after showering her with costly gifts, attempts to take advantage of her, she curtly dismisses him. However, he is not dismayed, and succeeds in casting suspicion upon the violinist. Then she realizes he is the man she really loves.

Vivian Rich, as the singer, has a role with wide appeal, and one which she interprets with charm and grace. Her work in this picture will win many new friends for her. Alfred Vosburgh, as the violinist, is cast in a part which gives him ample opportunity to display his unusual versatility. George Periolat plays his unsympathetic role with a suave polish.

New Selznick Organization

Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, has organized a distribution company to be known as the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Incorporated. The primary object of the new concern is to provide for the distribution of the films featuring the beautiful star, who will, by the way, work in two features at once as soon as she begins her activities with her new company in July.

The Selznick Productions will also include the output of a number of other film stars. Each of these will be distributed as a separate proposition. The exhibitor will be able to book the C. K. Y. features by themselves or the pictures of any of the other stars they may choose.

This is a direct departure from the customary contract system of booking, and in explaining it Mr. Selznick had this to say:

"Under the present system the exhibitor, in order to get features like the Clara Kimball Young pictures, must also book a lot of pictorial junk. That this is unfair to the exhibitor anyone can see at a glance.

"The Selznick exchanges will handle the Clara Kimball Young and other pictures at a price commensurate with their boxoffice value. Each of these can be obtained by the exhibitor as a separate and distinct proposition and at various prices, arranged according to the actual value of the pictures."

Edward Jose, Artist-Producer

Edward Jose, who is producing Pathe's serial, "The Iron Claw," has had a varied and extensive stage experience. He was born in Brussels, his father being musical director of the opera there, and the young Jose was sent to the Conservatory at Paris and when only seventeen years old took a first prize as pianist. On graduation Mr. Jose made a concert tour of Europe under the management of Charles Baret, the impresario. He later took a position as actor with Sarah Bernhardt and remained with the "divine Sarah" for several years.

Edward José, Pathé Producer

Mr. Jose then went into the managing end of the business and took companies all over Europe and to Africa and South America. After fifteen years of this he went back to acting and played leads in France, England and the United States.

In pictures Mr. Jose became very well known through his acting in Pathe pictures and through his work as co-star with Betty Nansen in the Fox pictures, "The Celebrated Scandal" and "Anna Karenina." Mr. Jose then became a director for the Fox company and made "The Resurrection." He also starred in "A Fool There Was." He wrote "The Resurrection" from Tolstoi's work, and also the adaptation of "The Children of the Ghetto."

Returning to the Pathe Company as a producer he made the Gold Rooster features, "The Beloved Vagabond," "Simon the Jester," "The Closing Net," and "Nedra." He then formed the Feature Film Corporation of which he is director in chief. Steps are now being taken to change the name of the company to the Edward Jose Feature Film Corporation.

Rialto Opens with Triangle

S. L. Rothapfel, the prominent director-manager, known to Motography readers for his department, "First Aid to Theater Men," chose two Triangle films for the opening of his ultra-modern picture playhouse, the Rialto, of New York.

The pictures selected were "The Good Bad Man," with Douglas Fairbanks, and "The Other Man" which has the capacious Roscoe Arbuckle as a centerpiece.

The former play, made at the Fine Arts studios, is based upon a scenario written by Fairbanks himself. It treats the western bad man in a broadly humorous manner. In the comedy "The Other Man," Keystone Arbuckle plays two roles, that of a tramp and the highly polished suitor for the hand of a wealthy girl. The fun is extended to include a spectacular masked ball and the well-known leap of an automobile over the cliff.

Florence Reed in Pathe Feature

Florence Reed is now appearing in Pathe's "The Woman's Law." In this Gold Rooster play, Miss Reed displays a sense of values, a depth of emotional resources and a versatility that is as rare as it is fascinating. Her part is an exacting one. She must play the unhappy wife whose husband is of fickle temperament and whose ways are such as to cause her constant worry and sorrow. Only at the end, where, with her husband dead, a victim of his own folly, she is enabled to come into her rightful heritage of happiness, does Miss Reed have an opportunity to free herself from the necessity of calling upon her emotional resources to an extent that must constitute a severe tax upon her strength. "The Woman's Law" is the first Gold Rooster play made by the Arrow company. Lawrence McGill, the director, has staged and produced it ably, and it is considered one of the best features that Pathe has released.

HOWELLS TALKS OF AUSTRALIA

Twenty Metro Features to Go to Antipodes Where Folks Often Go to Pictures in Evening Dress

Moving picture patrons of Australia are more discriminating than most manufacturers in America think, according to Benjamin F. Howells. And he cites as proof of the fact that they often attend picture theaters in full evening dress.

Mr. Howells, who is the New York representative of Vogel & Howells, when seen in the Metro offices in the Longacre Building had this to say regarding pictures in Kangaroo-land:

"Australia is a wonderful motion picture field and the evident belief of some American manufacturers that it can be used successfully as a dumping ground, is absolutely erroneous. Our audiences are made up of discriminating people and they are more like Americans than any other nationality.

"It might surprise many people that we have picture theaters down there on a more elaborate plan even than the Strand Theater on Broadway. It is not unusual to find many people in the parquet in evening dress.

"We do not have the many counter attractions there as you have in the States. For instance, we do not know anything of your modern cabaret. The Australians like above everything else, a good clean feature. It is true the field for feature productions is crowded in Australia, but like anything else there is always room for the best. And that is why we came to America to get the Metro productions. Our first contract calls for twenty of Metro's first features, and the others will be used as fast as the demand is created."

"RAMONA," FOURTEEN REELS

Clune Film Producing Company Makes Its Bow in New York with Unusual Photoized Novel

"Ramona," the big photodrama founded on Helen Hunt Jackson's love story, breaks the "long distance" record. It has fourteen reels.

Other unusual features about this play are the fact that it features no particular star and was made by following the book faithfully without the aid of a scenario. One of the latter "things" was written, but the writer took so many liberties with the novel that it was decided not to use it.

"Ramona" was produced by the Clune Film Producing Company of Los Angeles, and directed by Donald Crisp. The premiere performance of the big film took place in New York at the Forty-fourth Street Theater during the first week in April and other cities will see it soon after. The Clune company took possession of the New York theater on April 2. This marks the entrance into metropolitan circles of W. H. Clune, the Pacific coast film man, and his associate, Lloyd Brown. The company plans to produce Harold Bell Wright's "The Eyes of the World" early this spring.

Serial Players in Florida

Edwin Stevens, Florence Malone, Marguerite Gale and twenty others are now in Jacksonville, Florida, to begin a production of a sixteen-episode serial picture entitled "The Yellow Menace," under the direction of Aubrey Kennedy.

The picture will be sponsored by the Serial Film Company, of which William Steiner is general manager. A newspaper serial story will be made of this picture by Lewis Tracy, the well-known English novelist, who wrote "The Wings of the Morning," "Captain of the Kansas" and other popular novels.

Valkyrien, Danish Danseuse

There are the traditions of a century of fine Danish histrionism in the dancing and the acting of Mlle. Valkyrien, the charming little Danish actress of the Thanhouser-Mutual studios, who, off the stage, is the Baroness Dewitz.

Mlle. Valkyrien, Thanhouser-Mutual.

Mlle. Valkyrien became a member of the Royal Danish Ballet when she was a mere girl, receiving instructions in pantomime, toe and classical dancing under the masters attached to the ballet. The ballet is a government institution, and has been subsidized by the crown for a century and a half. It is considered an honor to be accepted as a pupil, and after a decade of dancing, each member of the ballet is given a pension for life.

In this ballet, Valkyrien (as she prefers to be known) advanced to the position of junior solo danseuse in half the time usually required. She became instantly popular. She had not only youth and charm in her favor, but a classic type of beauty which is highly prized in Denmark. When she was only seventeen she presented herself, at the instance of Prince Hage, as a candidate for the great national beauty contest, which the government of Denmark holds every five years to maintain the classic ideal of Norse beauty. The conditions are stringent but little Valkyrien won. She then organized her own company of seven classical dancers and toured Europe. At the end of this term she was the most photographed girl of her age in entire Europe.

When she went home to Denmark for a vacation a large film corporation offered her a position. When Valkyrien presented herself at the studio, and the manager became aware of her identity, he not only engaged her but made a contract with her to star her in a feature. And thus it happened that Valkyrien entered filmdom as a star from the outset.

In rapid succession she played ingenue and light comedy parts. In 1914 she was married to the Baron Dewitz and came to America. Before becoming a member of the Thanhouser-Mutual forces Valkyrien appeared in several pictures produced in America. Her first Mutual appearance was in the three-part feature, "The Valkyrien," which incorporated many of the legends and lore of the little actress's native country in a modern setting. Her second starring role was in "The Cruise of Fate." She also appeared in the big seven-act Mutual Masterpicture, "Silas Marner," a Thanhouser production. Mlle. Valkyrien will be seen in the near future in another feature picture now being screened at the Thanhouser studios in Jacksonville, Florida. The sparkling, vivid light of Florida is enabling the Thanhouser camera-scientists to capture some extraordinarily beautiful effects.

Lakin Is President of Acme

Friends of John M. Lakin are congratulating him upon his election to the presidency of the Acme Lithographing Company.

In the opinion of those whom he has served in the past, Mr. Lakin's co-operation has been surpassing. His work has not only been of such merit as to draw forth the highest commendations of his customers, but has attracted such notice as to cause comment among exhibitors and the public. So pronounced has been the character of Mr. Lakin's service and lithographs that he has recently secured the much-coveted order to supply the lithographs for the Motion Picture Board of Trade Exposition at the Madison Square Garden in competition with some twenty-five competitive sketches.

John M. Lakin

One of Mr. Lakin's oldest customers in speaking recently concerning the quality of his service said: "In my twenty-five years of business experience I have never met anyone who so thoroughly embodied the consciousness of true service as John M. Lakin. Not only has he devoted himself to our business personally but he has spent hours of his time in thinking up new ideas that would be of advantage to us. As a result he has perfected his product and added to the prestige of our company."

Business acquaintances of Mr. Lakin are now prognosticating that the Acme Lithographing Company, under Mr. Lakin's able direction will assume a high place in this branch of the industry.

V. L. S. E. Film Inspires Battleship Fund

Exhibitors who find the demands in their community for features which preach "preparedness," are taking advantage of the publicity that goes with the fact that Miss Marjorie Sterret, the thirteen-year-old school girl, who started the New York Tribune Battleship Fund, received her inspiration which started this movement by first seeing "The Nation's Peril," a Lubin, V. L. S. E. release, at the theater near her home in Brooklyn, New York.

Her patriotic letter to the New York Tribune enclosing a dime, started the ball a-rolling. Today there are seventy newspapers all over the country who are working in conjunction with the Marjorie Sterret Battleship Fund, and the dimes are coming in at a rate totaling on the average of $320.00 a day.

One exhibitor at Haverstraw, New York, taking advantage of the sentiment of the hour, and in the interest awakened both in the film and in the fund, ran a special battleship performance, featuring "The Nation's Peril."

Notable Metros Coming

"ROMEO AND JULIET" TO BE MADE SOON

METRO has a number of notable productions on the fire. Burton King, the director with the Popular Plays and Players, who is producing "The Spell of the Yukon," with Edmund Breese in the stellar role, for the Metro program, has just been handed the scenario manuscript despite the fact that he has made more than a score of the most important scenes in the production.

There is an unusual supporting cast in "The Spell of the Yukon," including Christine Mayo, a newcomer on the Metro program, Evelyn Brent, Arthur Hoops and "Billy" Sherwood. One of the most pretentious settings is that of an Alaskan gambling house and dance hall.

"The Snowbird," a five-part production in which Mabel Taliaferro is starred, and Edwin Carewe, the director, is featured, now being produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., will be released on the Metro program May 8. The story of "The Snowbird" is laid in the picturesque Hudson bay district and concerns John Wheeler, a traction magnate who becomes financially embarrassed and borrows money on a tract of timber land in the north.

A strong characterization of the primitive man is given by Edwin Carewe, who plays the part of Jean Corteau, and Miss Taliaferro has an exceptional role which gives her full opportunity to display her marvelous versatility. There is a strong supporting cast including James Cruze, Warren Cook, Walter Hitchcock and Kitty Stevens.

Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are starred in "Dorian's Divorce," a five-part feature produced by Rolfe Photoplays, which will be released on the Metro program May 1. This production will serve to introduce Miss Valentine as a full fledged star on the Metro program. She has been featured in several previous Metro productions including "Black Fear" and "The Blindness of Love."

Many of the most interesting scenes in "Dorian's Divorce" were made aboard the revenue cutter Woodbury, which Metro bought especially for this production. The company worked on board the vessel as she came down from her home port at Portland, Maine, to a new berth in the Hudson River.

The supporting cast in "Dorian's Divorce" includes William Davidson, Edgar L. Davenport, Lindsay Hall, L. R. Wolheim and Buckley Starkey. The feature was written and directed by O. A. C. Lund.

Lionel Barrymore, having completed his work in "Dorian's Divorce," will be starred alone in "The Quitter," a sensational five-part Metro feature which has just been put into production. The exterior scenes will be photographed along the Mexican border, and the company does not anticipate that it will be much of a holiday. But it was necessary for the Metro players to go there, as the scenery and buildings they desired can only be found in that section. Most of the time the company is in New Mexico they will be obliged to live in tents.

Nigh and Snow Star Together

Director William Nigh, who recently completed the sensational five-part production, "The Kiss of Hate," with Ethel Barrymore in the stellar role, has begun work on a new feature for Metro in which he will be co-starred with Marguerite Snow. "Buttsy's Glory" is the name of the new production, and it was written by Mr. Nigh. Not content with writing it and starring in it, Mr. Nigh is going to go one better in this wonderplay and introduce his wife in a prominent part. She is known on the stage and on the screen as Citta Cameron, but she has never appeared on the Metro program.

The naming of "Buttsy's Glory" was a rather odd procedure. In the beginning Mr. Nigh called his comedy-drama "Cassidy." The name did not appeal to the powers that be. Mr. Nigh said he could not think of a better title. He was told to call his associates together and consult them regarding a name. Mr. Thompson suggested "Buttsy," after a boy he knew at school who always carried a pocket full of cigar butts. And so the production was named.

It has been decided to call the big five-part Metro

Metro's "The Snowbird," with Mabel Taliaferro and Edwin Carewe.

feature in which Dorothy Green and Clifford Bruce are starred, and which was recently completed at the Popular Plays and Players studio, "Souls Aflame."

One of the features of "Souls Aflame" is the introduction of a submarine in a stirring scene. The play serves to introduce both Miss Green and Mr. Bruce to Metro audiences, as it will be the first time that either has appeared upon the Metro program.

"Romeo and Juliet" Coming

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, who recently completed "A Million a Minute," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay, have gone to Baltimore where they will spend a vacation of ten days with Mr. Bushman's family at Bushmanor, the screen artist's country home.

Immediately after their rest Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will return to New York when they will begin work on the big six-part production, "Romeo and Juliet," which the Metro Pictures Corporation is going to offer as its contribution to the Shakespearian tercentenary. No expense or effort will be spared to make it one of the greatest pictures ever produced.

Charles A. Taylor, the well known playwright, who recently joined the Metro scenario staff, has been invited to address the Authors' League of America at its next monthly meeting in the Plaza Hotel. The authors have come to realize the importance of turning their attention to writing for motion pictures, and want to hear from authorities upon the subject. Winston Churchill is president of the club, and its membership includes every writer of repute in America.

Mr. Taylor is now at work picturizing Ella Wheeler Wilcox's books for the Metro program. The first one that will be presented will probably be "Maurine."

Gaumont Finishes Labor Film

When Gaumont releases May first "The Quality of Faith" as a Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe edition, the screen will present a remarkably vivid picture of labor conditions, the pressure exerted on an upright minister by the wealthiest member of his congregation, and a story of misplaced affection that finally finds responsive answer in the heart of a girl whom society had banned. Alexander Gaden appears as the minister, and the girl is played by Miss Gertrude Robinson. A strong supporting Gaumont company has been provided, including Lucille Taft and Charles W. Travis.

"The Quality of Faith" boldly faces some of the biggest problems of society. It handles these questions so that they reach the screen in a big way, making the spectator feel the pangs of the young minister whose eyes are really opened for the first time upon life. The first scenes tell of his love for the butterfly society girl whose father, a rich factory owner, is the leading pillar of his church. Then fate throws him into the factory strike where he sees that justice is on the side of the down-trodden employees. It also introduces him to Marna, a girl of the streets.

The factory scenes for "The Quality of Faith" were taken in a large cotton factory. The exteriors depicting the strike were filmed in Jacksonville. Over 600 extra people, it is said, took part in the mob scenes.

Under the direction of Edwin Middleton, Miss Gertrude McCoy is now working on the "south sea" scenes in the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture in which she is to be starred. This five-reel feature will be released May 15. Excellent locations for that part of the story depicting the life of the heroine and her rescuer on what they found to be an unhabited island have been found near Jacksonville, Florida. One of the big features of "The Isle of Love" is the burning of an ocean liner in mid-ocean.

Bluebird Brings Florence Back

To thousands who made Florence Lawrence their favorite, in the days when moving pictures were not so popular as they are now, it will be good news to learn that Bluebird Photoplays will return this splendid actress to the screen. On May 15 she will first be reseen as the star of a feature entitled "Illusive Isabel," adapted from the novel of Jaques Futrelle's by Raymond L. Schrock.

Florence Lawrence, a Bluebird.

Miss Lawrence was among the first women of the dramatic stage to ascend to pictures, in the years when American manufacturers were having a hard struggle to get scenarios to make pictures from —and then found difficulty in finding a suitable market.

In "Illusive Isabel" Miss Lawrence has found a splendid role. The new Bluebird play promises to bring Miss Lawrence back to her old-time popularity. She has been two years in retirement.

The C. C. Field Motion Picture Company has just completed a large and well-equipped studio at Miami, Florida. Alice Hollister and her husband, George Hollister, formerly with the Kalem company, are among the personages annexed by the new concern.

"FIGHT FILMS SEIZED"

Government Orders Seizure of Johnson-Willard Films Rephotographed Across Canadian Boundary—Operators' License Bill Introduced

By Thomas O. Monk
Washington Correspondent for Motography.

The Customs Division of the Treasury Department has given orders for the seizure of the films of the Johnson-Willard prize fight in Cuba, which was rephotographed across the Canadian-United States border line, the Customs Division reaching the conclusion that this method of bringing in the films was a violation of the law. It is pointed out that the law provides that films of this character are prohibited from being brought to or sent into this country and the Customs Division has decided that the method adopted is prohibited.

It is also pointed out that in any event the films could only be permitted to be shown in New York state as the same law which prohibits them from being brought in or sent to the United States prohibits their transportation in interstate commerce in the United States.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives providing for the licensing of operators of cinematographs, moving picture machines, and similar apparatus. The document was drafted by the Board of District Commissioners, which recommends it passage.

The bill provides that the commissioners be directed to appoint a board of examiners, consisting of one employe each of the electrical department, the office of the inspector of buildings, and of the fire department. The board is to examine applicants, who must pay a license fee of $5. For a violation of the law it is provided a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100 be imposed, and, in addition to the fine, the license of the violator be revoked.

The bill provides "that the examination provided for herein shall be a practical examination, and for this purpose the board of examiners is hereby authorized to purchase cinematographs, moving-picture machines, or other similar apparatus, stationery, printing and office supplies, at a cost not to exceed $300 in any one fiscal year."

The commissioners call attention to the fact that applicants for a license are now required to demonstrate their fitness for their work to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of the fire department. They say that in the absence of the necessary machines for a practical examination, the only manner in which the fitness of the applicant can be determined is by requiring him to submit to a written examination.

The bill also provides "that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to promulgate from time to time such regulations as they may deem necessary for the operation of cinematographs, moving picture machines and similar apparatus not inconsistent with the provisions of this act."

An important announcement comes from Edwin Thanhouser concerning the forthcoming Thanhouser-Mutual five-reeler, "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," in which Florence La Badie is featured. Notwithstanding that this play from the pen of Philip Lonergan is dedicated to the Shakespeare Tercentennial Celebration, it is not what might be termed a "costume play." The story is that of a girl of today who is transported to the Shakespearean era. The events are laid mostly at a United States military post, and Shakespeare and Bacon, as well as the characters in the famous Shakespearean plays, appear "personally" in a modern romance.

Japs in Horsley-Mutual Play

Three noted Japanese actors, Kuran Kotani, Sumi Yamamoto and Hana Tanka, have been especially engaged by David Horsley for important roles in the forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Conscience of John David" in which Crane Wilbur is the star. All three have had considerable experience both on the speaking stage and before the camera. Kotani has long been a favorite throughout the Flowery Kingdom and has frequently appeared before the Mikado and other members of royalty.

Six Cameras on Same Picture

In the making of the new Annette Kellermann feature it was necessary for the Fox company to invade the semi-tropics to secure the settings. To prevent any possibilities of retakes or inferior photography Director Herbert Brenon "shot" every big scene with six different cameras from as many different angles.

Two cameras were side by side at the point where the action promised to be most vivid and the other four were placed where they would get the action from new angles. Often the sixth camera placed at the most remote spot would pick up the action on the film in a way that made it superior to the work of all the other instruments and this strip of film would be selected as best depicting what the director wished to show.

Many semi-tropical conditions made this course wise. Heat, coming down via sun-rays at a certain angle, would affect the raw film. Moisture in the air at certain times of the morning or late afternoon would spoil film and cloud up the picture—even penetrating at times the canvas hoods which were jacketed around the film containers when the camera was in action.

Film taken today of a scene will differ materially from a duplicate picture of exactly the same scene taken a week or two later. This is due wholly to atmospheric and light conditions over which man can have no control.

The camera infantry used in "shooting" the new Fox Annette Kellermann picture. Each of these sharp-shooters caught the big scenes from a different angle.

Role of Olga Is Unique

When Miss Hylda Hollis resided in Petrograd, at that time St. Petersburg, she little dreamed she would soon be called upon to play the part of a Russian woman of society. Her acquaintances gained then, now stand her in good stead for in "The Secret of the Submarine" she brings into play all her knowledge of Russian court life.

Hylda Hollis, Mutual-American

Miss Hollis was selected, from a considerable list, to play the part of Olga Ivanoff, in the big Mutual-American photoplay. Physically she just fits the role which, coupled with her great knowledge of the drama, and understanding of the type she is portraying, makes her the ideal Olga.

When Miss Hollis is seen on the screen in this part those in the audience who understand the Rusisan language are asked to watch her lips when she is speaking with Sextus, her underling, for she is one of the very few women of the stage who is conversant with the strange tongue of the Czar.

As Olga, Miss Hollis is required to carry much of the tense drama of the story, a task which is not hard to one of her broad knowledge and vivid appreciation of dramatic values.

FIVE-REEL KNICKERBOCKERS

To Be Released Once a Month Beginning Week of May 15—Lois Meredith in "Spellbound" First

The General Film Company announces the addition of a five-reel feature in the regular service, to be released once a month under the Knickerbocker Star Features brand.

The first release, to be scheduled definitely for some date in the week of May 15, presents the beautiful and gifted Lois Meredith in "Spellbound," a sensational drama of modern society. Henry King, Jackie Saunders and other popular stars will follow, in five-reel dramas of the quality which has made the Knickerbocker Star Features famous. All productions will be under the direction of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The immediate success of any good five-reel feature in the regular service is apparent to every one familiar with the present needs of exhibitors. Surpassing this level of average in the degree which has given the Knickerbocker Star three-reel features their unique position in the regular service, the Knickerbocker Star five-reel features will, it is declared, afford the exhibitor a monthly feature in every respect equal to the best special features obtainable outside of any program.

Speaking of the quality of the productions already finished, H. M. Horkheimer said:

"Nothing more plainly indicates the trend of the times than the public demand for features of exceptional quality. Against this demand, the exhibitors must balance the quality of available productions and the tendency to place the cost of the few extraordinary features out of all proportion to the exhibitor's limitations. The five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features will go a long way toward solving this problem for the exhibitor."

Lois Meredith, star of the first release, "Spellbound" is one of the most popular actresses on the screen, as well as one of the most beautiful women in the annals of the American stage. She won immediate success as Modesty in "Everywoman," then toured the Coast as prima donna in "Madame Sherry." Recent notable screen triumphs of Miss Meredith include "An Enemy to Society," and "The Antique Dealer," in which she was co-star with Cyril Maude.

A special campaign has been planned for the five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features. The campaign includes extensive advertising and newspaper publicity designed to promote direct results for the exhibitor.

A preliminary canvass of exhibitors throughout the country conducted by Knickerbocker representatives acting in collaboration with exchange managers, indicates convincingly that the majority of exhibitors, including both exclusive feature houses and those using program service, acknowledge not only a desire, but an actual need, of productions such as are promised in the five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features.

LATEST ON ACTORS' FUND

Contributions from Theater Managers, Clubs, Cities, Actors and Studio Employees Pour in to Treasurer Commodore Blackton

Thousands of people in the motion picture business are to-day employed with one single object in view. The film industry has promised to raise $500,000 in fifteen weeks to complete an endowment of $1,000,000 to place the Actors' Fund of America on a sure and permanent basis forever.

The National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Campaign, which was organized to promote the collection work, has now completed a chain of committees from Coast to Coast and announces with satisfaction that everywhere most active interest has been awakened among film people.

Theater proprietors and managers in every section of the country are declaring their intention of doing a great work to swell the $500,000 total. Monday, May 15, has been fixed as National Motion Picture Tribute Day, on which it is planned that a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown will be donated to the fund. Already, 1,200 proprietors and managers have promised to contribute 10 per cent or more of the money which they take in on the date. These pledges are not confined to any one section. Their range is the widest possible, as shown by the preliminary honor roll of theaters announced in Motography two weeks ago. Since that time scores of additional managers have signified their intention of joining in the great work. A random selection from these new responses shows the extent to which the active interest of busy, practical men has been awakened in a single humanitarian purpose. Here are a few of the latest additions to the theater list for National Tribute Day. They extend literally from Coast to Coast:

F. H. Schanze, Schanze Theater, Baltimore, Md.; F. M. Bond, Bond Theater, Pontiac, Ill.; Ario Bertotti, Columbia Theater, Clinton, Ind.; Jay E. Gould, Crystal Theater, Glencoe, Minn.; E. Newman, Grand Theater, Helena, Ark.; Guy Mahoney, Palm Theater, Missouri Valley, Iowa; C. A. Orr, Princess Theater, Grace, Idaho; I. W. Dakin, Gem Theater, Hood River, Oregon. The capacity of these houses ranges from 800 down to 200, and they represent cities and hamlets. Never before was a movement of this kind met with such diversified and general support.

A letter received from J. S. Smoot, manager of the Camden Theater, Parkersburg, W. Va., was of the kind that gives cheer to the Motion Picture Campaign's Executive Committee. Mr. Smoot notified Mr. Goldfish that on Sunday, April 30, he will give a sacred concert in his theater, the entire proceeds of which will be sent to Treasurer Blackton.

Monday was selected by the Executive Committee for National Tribute Day, so as not to place too great a tax upon the managers, but many of them have written to headquarters that if their returns on that stated day do not come up to a satisfactory figure they will contribute from the receipts of some other date.

John Kunsky, the millionaire theater owner of Detroit, is working hard. The friendly rivalry among the large cities as to which shall make the best showing on National Tribute Day awakened Mr. Kunsky's interest and his pride to see that his home territory does its share. This hustling picture magnate is in direct control of ten big theaters.

The latest big community to enter the competition of cities is Washington, D. C. An energetic committee has been organized in the National Capital. The proprietors of the Washington Motion Picture Houses are all taking a lively interest in the movement and that they will give a good account of themselves on National Tribute Day.

Among the many other southern cities, New Orleans has taken a seat on the band-wagon and displays a lively interest in the campaign among theater managers.

One of the most unique tributes to the cause given so far took place at the Eighty-First Street Theater last week. A goodly sum was realized for the Fund and A. L. Shakman, president and managing director of "The House Beautiful," afforded his patrons an unusual treat.

No less than nineteen well-known favorites of the screen appeared on the stage in person and were introduced to the audience. The big crowd which filled Mr. Shakman's theater greeted its favorites clamorously. Later the people were given an even closer view of the film stars when they pased out into the house and sold autographed photographs in the aisles. The price of these was supposed to be only 25 cents but dollar bills and in several instances five dollar notes were eagerly waved in the air by enthusiastic fans desirous of purchasing likenesses of their favorites from their own hands. The screen actors and actresses who appeared to the loud acclaim of their admirers were:

Anita Stewart and James Morrison, of Vitagraph; Virginia Norden, of Balboa; Mabel Normand, of Ince; Kathryn Adams, Gladys Hullette and Betty Lawson, of Thanhouser; Nicholas Duneaw, of World; Violet Mersereau and Billy Garwood, of Universal; Christine Mayo and Mary Miles Minter, of Metro; Bliss Milford, of Pathe; Teddy Sampson (Mrs. Ford Sterling) and Alice Lake, of Keystone; Jane Grey and Charles Backus, of Triangle; and Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, of Arrow.

One of the most interesting entries on the list of subscriptions received by J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the Campaign Fund, is "Painters $2.50." This appears on the appeal posted in the Famous Players studio at 130 West 56th street, New York City. Without solicitation from anyone these employees of the studio got together and from their small wages gave their mite to swell the fund.

Vivian Martin Migrates

Vivian Martin, the well known star of the screen and stage, has just signed to appear under the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures brands and will leave New York for the Los Angeles studios of the company on May 4. She will begin work on her initial production for the Paramount Program immediately.

Vivian Martin

Since her motion picture debut in "The Wishing Ring" about a year and a half ago, Miss Martin has gained country-wide popularity among patrons of the photoplay, her first film presentation scoring instantaneous success wherever it was shown. Among other screen plays in which she has since appeared with great personal success are "The Butterfly on the Wheel," "The Little Dutch Girl," "Old Dutch," "Arrival of Perpetua," "Little Miss Brown," "Little Madamoiselle" and "Over Night."

The theatrical career of Vivian Martin commenced at the age of six when Richard Mansfield selected her to play in his supporting cast in a small part. Later she appeared in more important roles with Sam Bernard in "The Belle of Bohemia," Andrew Mack for two seasons, William H. Crane in "Father and the Boys," and Charles Warner in "Drink." In the title role and supported by an all-children cast, she appeared in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" for the Shuberts at the Casino, New York. Her more recent portrayals on the metropolitan stage includes the star part of "Peter Pan," "The Spendthrift," with Fred Thompson, "Officer 666," "The Marriage Game" and "The High Cost of Loving."

In speaking of her new affiliation Miss Martin said: "I am indeed happy in the thought that I am now to appear under the Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures trademarks because of the high quality in photoplays which they represent. I can hardly wait to begin work and wish the long trip was all over with and that I could report at the studio to-morrow."

Announcement has not as yet been made as to Miss Martin's first subject or whether the initial offering will be a Pallas or a Morosco production but it is said that it will prove a subject that will present her to even better advantage than anything in which she has appeared heretofore.

Edison Furnishes Idea for Play

While examining a submarine on which there had been a fatal explosion Thomas A. Edison, replying to a question from fellow members of the national defense board, is reported to have made the following statement:

"To my mind there is no reason why an under-sea boat should not be equipped with a fish-gill-like apparatus, so that it can draw its supply of air directly from the water. Thus the lives of the crew will not be dependent upon the compressed air supply or on the ability of the boat to reach the surface. When this invention is perfected submarine navigation will be perfectly safe and secretive."

Samuel S. Hutchinson, master producer, decided to weave the expression of the great inventor into the theme for a photoplay. This has been done in a wonderfully thrilling manner.

The dangers to which the crews of under-sea boats are constantly exposed are shown in a graphically gripping way in the big chaptered film novel, "The Secret of the Submarine," enabling the audience to gain a vivid appreciation of the wisdom of Mr. Edison's statement. It is a thrilling sight to see a submarine dive below the surface and especially, when it is realized that dangers which the crew cannot combat are liable to appear any minute and make the boat a tomb.

Abiding Faith

An unusual evidence of faith in a film service, is found in the case of E. W. Copely of Dallas. He will be an interesting example for exhibitors throughout the country who may be contemplating signing for General Film Service. Before Mr. Copely laid a stone for the foundation of his theater, "The Golden Oak" of Dallas, he contracted for the General Film Service, planning to use it exclusively, changing his program daily.

"The Golden Oak" will seat about five hundred persons. It is said to represent the final word in motion picture theater construction.

Producers Protect Investors

Declaring that the citizens of Jacksonville, Florida, should be protected from the onslaught of the "fly-by-night" motion picture producers; or rather those who attempt to organize companies by inducing the layman to invest his or her money in a motion picture company by picturing in glowing terms the enormous money that is made in this line of business, several managers and directors of Jacksonville studios will take the matter up with the municipal authorities with the idea of having laws enacted for that purpose.

A Glimpse of Gertrude McCoy

By Betty Shannon

There are so many charming things one might say about Gertrude McCoy, that it is very difficult to know where to begin. I met her in one of New York's spacious depots, just five minutes before her train was to leave for the winter studios of the Gaumont-Mutual Company, in Jacksonville, Fla.

Gertrude McCoy. Gaumont-Mutual.

She has a cordial greeting, a charming smile, a firm hand shake, and is sincere and unaffected.

She is a tall, graceful young woman—this actress who has become such a tremendous favorite. Her hair is fair and golden, her mouth sensitive and sweet.

"Tell them that I was born in Georgia—Rome," she said. "Then I went to Knoxville, Tennessee, to live. I was not very old when I first began to love the stage. I used to take part in amateur theatricals, then one time I had a chance to fill in at a performance of a small traveling stock company.

"Then I came to New York, such a little old woman of a girl, who should have been bounding with life and enthusiasm. I was, oh, so much older than I am now. I was a model first, both for Gibson and Christy. At first I had only parts in melodrama and in musical comedy, but the company was not always congenial and oftentimes very unsatisfactory.

"When I returned to New York after a season on the road, about six years ago, I determined that I wanted to get into the pictures. I went to the Edison Company, and was rewarded with a place with the mob. It was chorus girl that I played. Then I went back to the Pathe studio one day, and was given the leading role in a picture. After having finished it, I returned to the Edison Company.

"The stage next again put in its call. 'The Fair Co-Ed' wanted me, and I left with the understanding that I could come back when I wanted to. The play did not last very long, and soon I was back at the studio, and I stayed," said Miss McCoy, "until I left to go with the Gaumont Company and now I am very happy to be a Mutualite."

"Child of God" Worth $30,000?

Another question of considerable interest to the motion picture world came up in the New York Supreme Court when the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady began there an action for $30,000 damages against the Frank A. Munsey Company.

Mr. Brady's point, which is one of importance to both film producers and publishers, is that an author of a magazine story, albeit he may have sold his brain child for magazine publications, still retains the motion picture rights to it.

Back in 1906 Dr. Brady wrote a story and sold it to the Munsey Company, reserving the book rights unto himself, he claims. He received $240 for the yarn, which was printed under the title of "A Child of God."

Notwithstanding his rights as author, he now asserts the Frank A. Munsey Company sold the motion picture rights to "A Child of God" to the Mutual Film Corporation, which made and distributed a motion picture founded on the theme.

Cincinnati Club Organized

The Cincinnati Screen Club was organized at the Cuvier Press Club on April 13 by a score of motion picture men, newspaper representatives and exhibitors. Co-operation between film men and the press and a general stimulation of moving picture interests is the organization's program. A dinner was served by the Cuvier press to the newly organized fraternity.

C. E. Holah, of the V. L. S. E., Inc., was unanimously elected president of the club. Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra theater, was named vice-president. W. J. Beyers of the Cincinnati Post was elected secretary; and W. S. Wessling of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is treasurer.

Other charter members are as follows:

E. T. Lux, Universal Exchange; C. C. Hite, Triangle Film Company; R. E. Haines, Mutual Service; H. L. Crear, General Film Company; Paul C. Mooney, District Manager Fox Film Company; Gus Muller, Fox Film Company; Harry Bugie, George Kleine Exchange; W. J. Fitzpatrick, Standard Film Company; A. J. Needham, Essanay Company; J. W. Greenstien, Standard Film Company; W. J. Howard, Bluebird Films; Lewis Baum, World Film Company; T. Nolan, Cincinnati Theater Supply Company; W. J. Wessel, General Film Company; George Hummel, Cincinnati Post; Sam Levick, Cincinnati Tribune; Joe Eastman, Times Star; Kenneth Craine, Moving Picture World.

At each man's plate there was found his name and company and a little epitaph of some one of his best features. This was typewritten on pieces of film in its raw state.

Many good speeches were made by those present and each carried forth the trend of the needful co-operative spirit.

Selig Against Big Salary Stories

Stories being widely published concerning the enormous salaries being paid motion picture performers work a detriment to the industry and give the public an entirely false and exaggerated conception of the motion picture business, in the opinion of William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company.

Through misleading tales the public has seemingly gained the conception that the motion picture business is one in which fortunes are made overnight and many have been lead to invest money in promotion schemes which lead only to disappointment.

"Perhaps you would be surprised to learn," said Mr. Selig in a recent interview, "that we receive hundreds of letters weekly from men, women and children in all walks of life who want to become film players. Nearly all of them have exaggerated ideas of the remuneration paid and the class of work desired. If they knew the true condition of affairs most of them would seek their vocation elsewhere, at something with which they are more familiar and at which they can work nearer home.

"Few producers have the standing stock companies of former days. They cannot afford to pay weekly salaries to nonworking players and seldom have more than a half dozen principals under contract. These are given the leading parts in plays while the rest of the cast comprises suitable types selected from unemployed performers.

"The latter are engaged for a stipulated number of weeks or until the picture does not require their services. This affords the producer an opportunity to select appropriate types for his plays from a large field of professionals. Thus he has a combination which he previously lacked. For, frequently, an able player is not suited for the part he is to play, while at other times the proper character does not possess artistic merit."

Censor Bill Passes Senate

The bill providing for the appointment of a board of motion picture censors by the board of regents of the university of the state was passed by the New York Senate by a vote of 34 to 5. The board would consist of three members who are to receive an annual salary of $5,000 each.

The bill is now before the assembly once more and a final vote will probably be taken at once, when the measure will go to the governor. The fact that an amendment to it was killed before gives reason to believe that the bill may be defeated altogether in the Assembly.

The tax to be imposed upon the film producers is excessive, and would amount to $700,000 a year, which would present very serious problems to the motion picture industry.

EXPOSITION IN 1917

Meeting of Exchange Men and Exhibitors in New Orleans Perfects Organization to Boost Next Year's Event

The Southern Motion Picture Trade Association was formally organized at a luncheon meeting held at the DeSoto Hotel in New Orleans on April 6.

This was the outcome of an editorial in our contemporary, the Motion Picture Journal, in which the suggestion was made to hold a big all-southern exposition for the motion picture interests in New Orleans, the logical center for such an undertaking in the south.

Karl A. Bugbee called the meeting of the trade to get the sentiment of the New Orleans people regarding the suggestion made by the above-mentioned editorial.

Mr. Bugbee called on the various film managers, exhibitors and newspaper men to get their views regarding an undertaking of such magnitude as the Motion Picture Exposition will be; and in each talk, the exposition idea was cheered and promises were made for the hearty co-operation of all those present.

Mr. Walker, editor of the Journal was introduced as the originator of the idea of holding the 1917 exposition in New Orleans. He referred to similar events staged in Dallas two years ago, and the one held in Atlanta, March 30, 31 and April 1. In Dallas, there were about two hundred exhibitors present and in Atlanta about the same number. But as each of these affairs had been scheduled a short time after the idea was started, neither was the success that such an exposition in New Orleans next year would be with the ground plans laid early.

In Atlanta the secretary made every endeavor to get picture stars at the ball on the final night; but had failed because the time was too short to secure the co-operation of the producing companies. A "Beauty Contest" was then staged and the ball was attended by over three thousand people.

J. E. Pearce spoke heartily in accord with the movement to start the preliminary organization at once for next year's exposition; and suggested that a permanent organization he made.

Among the other speakers were Messrs. Al G. Shear, H. G. Morrow, S. T. Stephens, Ross Hardenbrook, Raoul Junet, Nat Ehrlich, L. J. Hennessey, R. S. Pritchard and N. S. Thatcher.

Upon Mr. Bugbee's suggestion, Mr. Ehrlich was elected temporary secretary; and later, Mr. Pearce was elected president of the permanent organization, to be known as the Southern Motion Picture Trades Association.

After Mr. Pearce took the chair, he appointed Mr. Shear and Mr. Bugbee as members of the executive board, to confer with the president the following day for making plans for furthering the exposition and sketching out various details such as a publicity campaign, naming various committees and the handling of finances connected with the undertaking.

Those present at the DeSoto Hotel meeting were:

Al G. Shear, manager, Consolidated Film & Supply Company, New Orleans.

H. G. Morrow, manager, General Film Company, New Orleans.

F. W. Baron, manager, Fox Film Corporation, New Orleans.

Karl A. Bugbee, manager, Southern Metro Pictures Corporation, New Orleans.

S. T. Stephens, manager, Mutual Film Corporation, New Orleans.

Rose Hardenbrook, manager, World Film Corporation, New Orleans.

R. King Evans, manager, V. L. S. E., Inc., New Orleans.

Nat Ehrlich, manager, Triangle Film Corporation, New Orleans.
J. E. Pearce, P. Pearce & Son Enterprises, New Orleans.
L. J. Hennessey, Association of Commerce, New Orleans.
J. C. Raglan, Kleine-Edison Feature Service, New Orleans.
R. S. Pritchard, New Orleans Item, New Orleans.
N. S. Thatcher, New Orleans Times-Picayune, New Orleans.
C. A. Walker, Motion Picture Journal, Dallas, Texas.

It has been decided to hold the 1917 New Orleans exposition in March beginning with Ash Wednesday, the day following the close of the Mardi Gras, when low rates will be available all over the south.

POWERFUL LUBIN WRITER

"Dramatists of the Screen Are Needed" Says Daniel Carson Goodman—Facts of New Photoplay Author's Life

A composite of all the arts—dramatic, plastic, literary and even musical—the moving picture has yet to develop a dramatist of outstanding prominence, according to Daniel Carson Goodman, whose photoplays, "Souls in Bondage," "Love's Toll," "The Toilers," and others, released by the Lubin Company through the V. L. S. E., are considered by many to entitle him to this distinction.

Daniel Carson Goodman.

The dramatist of the screen—the author whose prominence rests on his achievements in the realm of the silent drama and in those realms only — who ranks in his field as the directors and the players rank in theirs — who will occupy in the screen world the place held by Augustus Thomas and Winchell Smith in the "legitimate" dramatic world—has not yet appeared, in the estimation of Mr. Goodman.

That is, unless Mr. Goodman is this figure himself—an honor which he disclaims, but which those who have followed his work closely insist is his, and which they declare will be generally accorded by the moving picture public when his reticence is overshadowed by the release of the additional productions which he has recently completed.

There has been no author whose efforts have had a more widespread appeal for the mammoth moving picture public, nor which reflect a more serious conviction of the power of the screen as a vehicle of thought transmission. Also it is doubtful whether any stories have ever been created for the screen which have been more human than Mr. Goodman's. It was the opportunity for reaching the very elemental emotions of the people that prompted Mr. Goodman to answer the call of the camera and to forsake the world of letters in which his name had gained a place by reason of his widely read novels, "Unclothed," "Hagar Revelly," and "Travail."

In these works, Mr. Goodman had reflected the same peculiar psychological trend of thought, combined with the human interest atmosphere of life's stern realities, which is now so noticeable in his screen offerings—qualities which placed the novels above the usual "best seller" class.

It was in the spring of 1915 that Mr. Goodman became affiliated with the Lubin Company. Prior to this association, he had produced several film features for other companies, which were the cause of his affiliation with the Lubin organization at a salary said to be the largest ever paid to an individual author.

Mr. Goodman—or to give him the medical prefix to which he is properly entitled, Doctor Goodman—was born in Chicago thirty-four years ago. He first turned to music, and at sixteen had a composition published for the use of the symphony orchestra, as well as several marches. His choice of a profession fell upon medicine, however, and in 1905 he graduated from Washington University. He then studied four years in Paris, Heidelberg and Vienna, receiving a post graduate diploma in surgery from the University of Vienna in 1909. On Dr. Goodman's return to America he began the practice of medicine. But despite his success, and what most people would deem the reckless folly of casting aside an assured income for the mirage of a possible literary future, he abandoned all else in favor of the latter.

Harry Aitken, former president of the Mutual Film Corporation, was responsible for Dr. Goodman's entrance into the scenario field. It was at the former's suggestion that Dr. Goodman began to produce features for Mr. Griffith, who was then contemplating a change from the Biograph. In this connection Dr. Goodman wrote many features, among which was—"The Battle of the Sexes"—one of the first big productions to be shown at a Broadway house. He followed this with other successes, and finally signed the contract to write scenarios exclusively for the Lubin Company, releasing through V. L. S. E.

Cincinnati to Have Studio

The intention of building a moving picture studio in Cincinnati at once has been announced by the Bagshaw Feature Film Company, at present a $100,000 corporation, which has main offices at 314 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati.

No location for the studio has been selected yet. One picture has been released by the new concern. Actors with the company at present under contract are J. Drury, a Cincinnati man; Selinga Bagshaw, Rhea Paige, Ivan Tull, Zola Brown, C. W. E. James and C. S. Demaison. The company's application for a license was made by Albert James Marshall, Justice McCarthy, Attorney W. H. Valentine, Charles C. Davis, H. C. Wright and J. Baine Forbes.

While the company has been only informally incorporated for the sum of $100,000, it is stated that a much greater capitalization will be put into effect soon, as the proposed plant it is expected to construct will cost at least a hundred thousand dollars.

FAMOUS PLAYERS GETS WRITER

President Zukor Has Annexed the Services of H. R. Durant, Successful and Prolific Writer, for Editorial Department

Famous Players Company has annexed H. R. Durant, a writer of note, and has placed him in charge of its editorial department. This acquisition is in line with the policy of Adolph Zukor, president of the company, to concentrate one branch of his activities upon the securing for literary circles the best and strongest writers for his scenario department. Too much encouragement cannot be given to the photoplay producing concern that does all in its power to eliminate from its output such week-kneed stories as are seen only too often upon the screen.

For several years before joining the Munsey staff, Mr. Durant was a well known free lance writer for the best magazines and has close to two hundred short stories to his credit.

During his five years with Munsey Mr. Durant was editor of the All-Story Magazine. While editor there Mr. Durant wrote many photoplays for the Reliance-Majestic studios, and his contributions to the legitimate stage were "A Man and His Mate," "The Road to Power," "Something for Nothing," and "O'Shea, the Rogue."

A freak literary feat was the writing of "Roped In," a novel, on a wager with the late Paul Armstrong, who bet the author that no man could write a novel in twenty-four hours. Mr. Durant wrote "Roped In," in twenty hours and it was published in the Argosy.

Among Mr. Durant's later contributions to the screen, are "Her God," "David," "The Queen of Burlesque," "A Modern Girl," "The Chain Invisible," "The Spitfire," and "The Social Secretary" to the Equitable Company; "The Exclusive Story" and "Heredity" to the Fine Arts Company; "Healy, the Great" to the Mirror, and several to the Famous Players, titles for which have not yet been announced.

Barred Film Praised by Judge

When the august members of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors saw fit, recently, to place an embargo on the showing of "Dollars and the Woman," a Lubin release through V. L. S. E., an appeal to the courts against their decision was instantly taken.

The case came up in Philadelphia, March 31, in the Court of Common Pleas. It being the first time that a trial of the kind had been held in this court, the justices visited the Lubin studio to gain first-hand knowledge of the film. The members of the distinguished audience were favorably impressed with the film, Judge Audenreid remarking that it was a beautiful picture. The censor brigade, evidently somewhat wary of the outlook, made advances toward peace with the producers. Decision was reserved.

The praise of the film by Judge Audenreid found an echo in another quarter very far removed in social, if not business distance, from the judicial bench. For some time past, George Balsdon, manager of the V. L. S. E. Boston branch office, has injected a little gaiety into the gloom of the Rhode Island penitentiary by exhibiting Big Four pictures to the inmates once a week. An enthusiastic reception was given to "Dollars and the Woman," by the prison patrons, one of whom wrote in part to Mr. Balsdon, as follows:

"We had the good fortune to see 'Dollars and the Woman.' The boys think it is the best picture they have had. There were no impossibilities, nor was there anything suggestive. I looked around and saw many an eye wet with tears."

Forty Per cent of Population "Act"

It is said that of the 600,000 population of the city of Los Angeles, approximately 40 per cent is drawing at least a portion of its annual income from the motion picture industry. As an indication of the extent to which the people of that city are interested in pictures, a recent visit to the Griffith studio of the Triangle Film Corporation brought forth from one visitor the remark:

"It is almost pitiful, the way in which the hordes of people flock to this place when they think there is the least likelihood of a 'mob' scene being staged. They are not stage folk; in fact, most of them come from the ranks of clerks, office workers, store employes, followers of the minor professions; you will find mediocre singers, carnival folk, athletes of the various types, women from their homes, anxious to earn a little to help out the family income. Old men and young men, aged women, infants and young girls, all wait for hours in the steady California sunshine hoping for a day's work."

Live Publicity Works

E. R. Pierson, manager of the V. L. S. E. branch office at Kansas City, is not only one of the kind of men who believe in advertising but he has the executive ability and the "nerve" to put it into practice.

This was proved at the recent two-day convention of the Kansas members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. In conjunction with his chief publicity man, L. J. Scott, Mr. Pearson opened up temporary publishing quarters at Wichita, from which they issued The Clansman, their house organ, handling convention news. As a result exhibitors came to know the convenience of the V. L. S. E. headquarters there and were glad to take advantage of it.

Astra Officer Now Ship Captain

George B. Seitz, scenario editor for Pathe for several years and now one of the officers of the Astra Film Corporation, has become the captain of a schooner. Don't think that "G. B." has changed his profession—he hasn't, but the Astra needed a vessel to blow up in one of the episodes of the new serial they are making for Pathe. Ownership papers couldn't pass without the signature of the ship's captain, and this particular hooker hadn't had a captain for three years. Seitz therefore became the legal captain.

Raver Takes Features to Market

Twenty-eight reels of film, consisting of six subjects, is now being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation.

In addition to its own picture, "The Other Girl," in which James J. Corbett is starred, it is marketing three Ocean pictures—"Life Without Soul," "Fortunate Youth," from William J. Locke's novel, and "Driftwood," Owen Davis' play featuring Vera Michelena. These four picture dramas consist of five reels each.

The Raver company is also handling the two-reel war picture, "Austria at War," and "Fighting in France," the official pictures of those nations.

When Frank E. Samuels left last week on a trip for the Raver company, he took with him all of these pictures, a record load. Mr. Samuels will visit all the buying centers of the country. He will take in such cities as Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis and other cities through the south and west.

E. and R. "Nap" Not on Stage

The notice of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company has been called to a vaudeville act headlining Napoleon, a chimpanzee, and Little Hip, an elephant. The company wishes to state that these animals have nothing whatsoever to do with the comedies produced by E. and R. featuring Napoleon the great and Sally. The chimpanzee acting in these pictures is the original Napoleon the Great, while the original Little Hip, once in possession of the owners of the company, died in Australia in 1915. This announcement is made because several state right holders and exhibitors complained against the supposed practice of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company of exhibiting Napoleon on the stage in opposition to his appearance in pictures.

Actor Studies Machines

Do you know all about your own business?

This question would cause many a man to admit to himself his ignorance of some of the various phases of his occupation.

And the picture industry is no exception to this rule.

There is, however, a well-known screen star who is determined to be as much an exception to the general run as possible in this regard. He is trying to learn all about motion picture projection, and to this end recently visited the plant of the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of projection machines. He studied the complicated apparatus and all the interesting details of its construction.

This unusual student-actor is Devore Farmer, the Triangle star.

Pictures in Greatest English Theater

Motion pictures achieved their greatest triumph in England with the conversion of Drury Lane, England's national theater, into a picture palace for the production of "The Birth of a Nation."

The Drury Lane Theater Royal was opened in 1663, and every English actor of the first rank since that year has appeared upon its boards, including, Nell Gwynne, David Garry, John Philip Kemble, William C. Macready and Henry Irving.

Cabinet Minister Praises "Cinema"

Lord Selborne, president of the Board of Agriculture, speaking at London, recently, on the subject of the settlement of discharged soldiers and sailors on the land, said that many young people left the rural districts on account of the lack of amusements. He believes that "the cinema introduced into the villages has been an excellent social improvement."

Royalty See "Birth of Nation"

Before the most distinguished audience that has been gathered in a London theater in years, a special performance of D. W. Griffith's American spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," was presented last week in Drury Lane Theater, London, for a benefit to the Women War Workers' Fund.

The special matinee was under the personal auspices of Queen Mary who occupied the Royal box with Queen Alexandria, the Princesses Victoria and Mary and the Princes Henry and George of the Royal family. Seats sold for the benefit for $15 each and the combined receipts exceeded fifteen thousand dollars. The entire box office takings were donated by Mr. Griffith by special arrangements made by his representative, Theodore Mitchell, during his recent visit to England. After the performance Queen Mary sent for Mr. Griffith's London manager and requested that her congratulations and thanks be extended the American producer. Miss Olga Nethersole, the English actress, well known in America, first interested Queen Mary in the benefit and took an active interest in its success.

In addition to the royal family the audience included King Manual and Queen Amelia of Portugal. His Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Michael of Russia and other foreign notables.

Lost Boy in Pictures?

As a last resort for finding her four-year-old boy, who so mysteriously disappeared about a year ago, Mrs. C. L. Glass of 13 Lienau Place, Jersey City, has appealed to several motion picture companies for aid.

The boy, James Glass, was last seen in Greely, Pennsylvania on May 12, 1915. Since that time his mother has been informed that he has taken child parts in several motion picture plays, among them being Beatriz Michelena in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation.

Barrymore Stars in "Red Widow"

Bombs to the right of him, bombs to the left of him, but they are the least of John Barrymore's troubles in the forthcoming Famous Players production

The ninth chapter of Pathé's "The Iron Claw."

"The Red Widow," which will be released on the Paramount Program April 20.

"The Red Widow," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, was one of the biggest comedy successes of a few years ago and it has such an abundance of action and comic predicaments embodied in the tale that it is ideal for adaptation on the screen. In addition to having John Barrymore in the stellar role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, the corset salesman, the film has three members of the original cast who scored personal successes in the stage version of the play. They are Flora Zabelle, who again appeared as Anna Varvara, John Hendricks and George E. Mack, who play the Baron and Popova respectively.

Sunshine Anna of Sweden

Anna Nilsson, co-starred with Tom Moore in "Who's Guilty?", the fourteen two-reel series of photo-novels which the Arrow Film Corporation is producing for release through the Pathe Exchanges, was born in Helsingfors, Sweden, just twenty-four years ago. She has been on the stage and in pictures in the United States for the last nine years. Miss Nilsson arrived in New York from Sweden at the age of fifteen. Quickly she learned the language. And then she met one of the leading fashion photographers of the metropolis, and in a brief time Miss Nilsson became the highest salaried fashion model in New York.

Anna Nilsson, Pathe

One day she dropped into the studios of the Kalem Company to visit Alice Joyce. While she was sitting in Miss Joyce's dressing room a director entered and—well, then and there Miss Nilsson became booked for a theatrical career. She worked in small parts for a time; parts so small, she says, that if the audience had winked at a certain point in the films they would have missed her entirely. But by degrees she worked herself up and soon was playing ingenue roles and then ingenue leads.

For four and a half years Miss Nilsson remained with the Kalem Company, appearing in more than 250 pictures in that time. In the feature presentation of "Shenandoah" Miss Nilsson was starred for the first time; also, her work in that picture established her as one of America's premier screen actresses. Upon leaving the Kalem Company Anna Nilsson went to the Fox Company, where she played the lead in "Regeneration." With Kleine she was featured in "The Scarlet Road." Playing then opposite Robert Warwick she appeared in "To Him That Hath," one of the big dramatic roles of her career.

Chief among Miss Nilsson's pleasures are swimming and horseback riding. She is a really expert equestrienne. nor does she confine herself to the bridle paths of Central Park. She can—and unhesitatingly will—take her horse over the jumps and rough country in a fashion to make even a professional horseman envious. And her ability as a swimmer and sailor is second only to her horsemanship.

Soldiers Resent Sunday Closing

The recent order of the Nottingham (England) County Council prohibiting Sunday opening is greatly resented by the soldiers in the camp areas. Soundly reasoned letters have appeared in the press, pointing out the great hardship it has inflicted upon thousands of soldiers—especially on wet Sundays—who previously derived much pleasure and profit from a visit to the picture house on that day.

One soldier pointed out that it was the duty of those in power to provide rational amusement for them, in order to give them an alternative from the "public-houses." Teetotalers have been so short-sighted that they have supported the closing of picture houses on Sunday, when their opening was the greatest aid to temperance amongst the "Tommies" that could be found. The chief constable in a Nottinghamshire town has stated that since the opening of picture houses on Sunday crime and drunkenness has decreased, and only half the police were needed as formerly. In spite of this the order has gone forth to close.

Film Importation "Verboten"

Under a general order lately isued by the German government the importation of films into Germany is forbidden.

As the film business is international and, in spite of the war, has not been much interfered with, the action of the government has caused excitement among the manufacturers and dealers. During the war films have been imported from neutral countries, especially from Denmark.

German motion picture theaters are largely dependent upon films from neutral countries for their attractions, and it is thought the prohibition will affect their business. It is claimed, however, by the German and Austrian film manufacturers that they are in position satisfactorily to supply the market, and that the industry will be benefitted by the prohibition order.

The prices for single films have materially risen since the beginning of the war and it is expected that there will be a further advance. A meter (3.28 feet) of raw film in Germany costs 47 pfennigs (11.2 cents at normal exchange); in neutral countries 32 pfennigs (7.6 cents). Theater owners hope the order may be modified.

Camera Scoop Reported

It is reported that in the film news gathered by the camera sleuths during the recent raid upon Columbus, New Mexico, by the honorable Mr. Villa, the Hearst-Vitagraph service made a scoop by several hours. These "H-V" films of the border war were shown in the release of March 17. They included pictures of General Slocum's start after the raiders and the guard before the tent protecting the bodies of the seventeen Americans who were killed in the Villa skirmish.

Stars Eager to "Frolic"

The Friar's Frolic committee of the New York Actors' club, consistent with its established principle of presenting to the public only "all the stars" at its renowned entertainments is confronted with a most perplexing problem. Ever since he announced the plans for this season's Frolic, Abbot George M. Cohan has been swamped with requests from stars that their services be accepted for the two weeks' tour beginning on May 28th at the New Amsterdam Theater, New York City. So numerous are the offers to appear that every artist has consented to sign as binding a contract as though he were to receive the same good sized remuneration as rewards his efforts when starring at the head of a company.

Contracts have been signed by the following well known players:

Albert Spalding, Louis Mann, Andrew Mack, Frank Tinney, Nat Wills, William Rock, George Primrose, Max Figman, Rube Goldberg, Bernard Granville, Bud Fisher, Will Rogers, Irving Berlin, Fred Niblo, James J. Corbett, Jerry J. Cohan, Lew Dockstader, Hap Ward, Charles J. Ross, Doyle & Dixon, Julius Tannen.

These actors, and others, will swing round the two weeks' tour of leading cities for the benefit of the Friar's building fund.

Veteran Faces Camera Test

With the release of the film dramatization on O. N. and A. M. Williamson's "The Woman Who Dared" now being produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, another actor of long standing prominence on the legitimate stage will make his debut upon the screen.

Joining Andrew Robson and William Pike in their support of Beatriz Michelena in this production is Albert Morrison. Andrew Robson has supported Miss Michelena in every one of her screen productions and William Pike played opposite her in both "Salvation Nell," and "The Unwritten Law." Morrison, however, has never before acted before the camera. His reputation is built on an enviable stage career, which has made him a favorite leading man in stock in a multitude of cities.

"Oscar" and "Conrad" Are Fixtures

The vogue of Falstaff comedy characters has forced a new order of things, to the extent that some of the fun-makers simply must be made permanent. The fans demand it. Therefore Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish, as "Oscar and Conrad," will now be a fixture in Falstaff Comedies. These two estimable gentlemen will engage in various lines of business, handling pickles or sky-scrapers with equal confidence. Lloyd Lonergan, their creator, will give the two comedians ample play for their versatility, and the pictures already finished show an entirely new angle of film comedy. Cooper and McNish are now in Jacksonville, Florida, where they will pick up enough material to lend variety to the settings of their work.

Pictures Aid Suffragist Campaign

The Iowa Equal Suffrage Association in conjunction with a vigorous campaign for recruits and votes in the Hawkeye State is utilizing the picture "The Ruling Power," a Vitagraph three-reel production released through the General Film Service.

The suffragists are working hand-in-hand with exhibitors in that state, and have a plan whereby they share in the receipts. In this way, they have added thousands of dollars to their campaign fund and called their cause to the attention, in a most effective manner, to millions of persons.

"The Ruling Power" is constructed around a story of a big politician caught in his own trap of conniving. It presents, so the women say, many strong arguments in favor of equal suffrage. The strong climax presents a scene on election day after the suffragists are supposed to have been victorious. Incidentally there is a strong line of love and sacrifice running through the story. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt is a notable figure in the film.

Exempt Small Projectors

Gov. Whitman of New York has signed two bills introduced into the legislature relative to the use of miniature motion picture machines.

One of the measures provides that no permit, license or licensed operator shall be required for minature motion picture apparatus, using only an enclosed incandescent electric lamp and approved cellulose acetate or other slow burning film, and of such construction that films ordinarily used in full-sized commercial apparatus cannot be used therewith.

The other bill amends the general business law by exempting this class of apparatus and films from the provision of the law requiring the use of permanent and portable booths.

Earle Williams in New Serial

Another big serial is nearing completion. And this one gives promise of exceptional quality as well as quantity.

The Vitagraph company is producing this new one, which is to have thirteen parts. The popular Earle Williams is the star. Wally Van is directing the serial and is taking especial pains to see that the story is not only injected full of emotions and thrills but that it is unusually satisfactory in regard to logic of action and beauty of setting. Earle Williams has the part of a motor speedster and all-round hero in the play. His surrounding players are said to form an enviable constellation.

Director Richard Garrick secured a strike scene for the newest of the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Quality of Faith" that should occasion more than ordinary attention. In the making of it not only Garrick but his assistants and camera-man, were all but swallowed up in the enthusiasm of nearly 600 extra men. The sight of fourteen mounted police riding at high speed straight into the heart of a mass of men, clubbing to right and left, and the sturdy opposition of the strikers, combined in making a most unusual situation.

The New York Senate has passed the bill amending the penal law by prohibiting the employment of children under 16 years of age in the making of motion picture films, by posing or acting, except with the written consent of the mayor of the city or president of the board of trustees of the village where the exhibition takes place.

"Civilization's Child"

Triangle-Ince Drama with William H. Thompson Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN A foreword C. Gardner Sullivan, the author of "Civilization's Child," states the purpose of his play, it being "to turn the spotlight on a phase of our flaunted twentieth century civilization." This foreword immediately suggested that we were to see a picture dealing with rather serious and somber things and later, when the little girl from the distant wilds of Russian entered into a world of civilization by the back streets and became enmeshed in a corruption from which she never was to free herself, we were glad for the preparation which this first title inspired. Not that "Civilization's Child" is unduly depressing, but with a story of this kind we favor a word that will permit us to assume the proper attitude.

In this story, which depicts some of the disadvantages which trailed the advtantages brought by what is termed a higher civilization, Mr. Sullivan has constructed one that is rather impressive. Its developments is not along novel lines, but there are to be found certain effective touches such as one would expect only from a scenario writer of the experience and skill of Mr. Sullivan. As an instance take the bells hung in the towers of the various public buildings in the towns where Berna happens to be. They are civilization's bells, and their ringing at the time Berna receives a blow from the hand of civilization points the situations of the play.

The story is of a Russian girl, who, at the age of young womanhood is brought from the far country where her life has been spent in the pursuance of wild nature's desires, to the city of Kiev. Her first experience is a massacre. Her uncle and aunt are killed and Berna escapes to America, where she is taken in by a distant relative. A political boss lures her off and the next we see of her is as a habitue of a cheap cafe. She enables a young Russian violinist to reach the place his native talent warrants. He marries her out of gratitude, but later deserts her at the suggestion of the boss's daughter, who is in love with the polished young man. The boss presides at the divorce trial, for by his own influence he is a judge now, and he takes her baby away from her. For this act Berna, when released from prison, kills the boss. In the closing scene she is arrested for the act, but the strain is too much and she loses her reason.

William H. Thompson is featured as Boss McManus. In many respects the boss is a type suggestive of the motion picture studio more than real life. Mr. Thompson portrays the part well and he is interesting. Anna Lehr, Dorothy Dalton and Jack Standing play the other parts effectively. The picture was finely directed and nicely produced by Charles Giblyn, who has brought out the best that the story had to offer and made "Civilization's Child" an interesting picture.

"The Stroke of Twelve"

Eighth Two-Reel Episode of "The Iron Claw" Released April 17. Reviewed by George W. Graves

CONSIDERED in the light of either a link in the long chain of a serial, or as an individual offering, complete in interest of its own without a knowledge of previous events other than that contained in the opening subtitle, "The Stroke of Twelve," is a good bit of photodrama. Its story is interesting, well presented, and well acted by the principals, Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis. The note of mystery concerning the identity of The Laughing Mask is bound to keep fans guessing and to whet their appetites for the next installment, in order that they may further substantiate their deductions.

The most sensational scene in this chapter is the blowing up of the Golden mansion, a scene which required careful preparation and equally careful execution. The set, an interior one, shows the falling of walls, timbers, etc., in a confused tangle of wreckage.

Count Lugi Da Espares, really a confederate of Legar, is a guest in the home of Margery Golden. He wins the latter's confidence and even becomes engaged to her, much to the disgust of Dave, Golden's secretary. Dave's feelings towards the man are a mixture of jealousy and suspicion. When Da Espares persuades Margery to join him in a scheme to capture Legar, his real intention is to betray the girl into Legar's hands. Da Espares' plot is prevented from reaching a successful culmination by Dave, who loves Margery.

Margery's father gives a dinner dance in honor of her betrothal to the Count, at which Legar gains admittance and prepares to blow up the house. Just before the explosion, the mysterious "Laughing Mask" enters the festive hall and warns everyone to get out except Legar and the Count, whom he detains at the point of a gun. Legar effects a successful escape, but his henchman, the Count, meets his death in the explosion.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page"

Chapters Eleven, Twelve and Thirteen of the Essanay Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE mystery of the Mary Page serial begins to clear up as the plot is developed in these later episodes. The story is handled, as in the preceding installments, by devoting most of the two reels to the testimony of the witness on the stand, told by means of "visions," coming back to the familiar courtroom scene. The closing scenes of each show the efforts of Langdon and his detective to discover the real criminal. There is a generous amount of action as the story nears its completion. The photography continues to be good, and the acting of the cast, headed by Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo, is consistent throughout.

Episode eleven contains the testimony of Detective Sergeant Callahan, who states that the police for a time suspected Langdon himself of the murder of Pollock. Mary's adventures after the murder, when she was still suffering from loss of memory, are related. Langdon at last found her, and advised her to give herself up, that he would act as her lawyer. This speech, which the detective overheard, made him believe that Langdon himself was not guilty.

The testimony of Bennett, Pollock's friend, is contained in chapter twelve. He tells of a slumming tour in which he, Amy Lerue, Mary and Pollock formed the party. The important points of his story were the account of Mary's skill with a revolver, her threat to Pollock, who annoyed her, and Pollock's instructions to gunmen to "get" Langdon.

Chapter thirteen begins with the discovery that the gambler who is suspected, Jim Bates, has escaped. The theatrical manager is called to the stand and gives further information regarding Pollock's connection with the play starring Mary Page, and his reasons for backing it. The most interesting part of the installment deals with Langdon's success in locating Bates. The gambler's pals imprison Longdon and get Bates away, but the lawyer follows him and discovers him in a box car. The train begins to move before he has time to call for help, and the chapter ends with the lawyer and the gambler together in the box car of a rapidly moving train.

"A Stain in the Blood"

Signal Mutual Masterpicture Released April 27. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE second five-reel "masterpicture" which the Signal Company has produced contains a great deal of excitement and has something of the melodramatic characteristic of the first play, "In the Web of the Grafters." The principal players in this drama are the same as in the first Signal—Edythe Sterling and Norbert Myles—and Murdock McQuarrie directed the play. He also plays a prominent role. The scenario was written by Robert A. Dillon. As an adventure story, it is interesting and the material well handled.

The opening scenes show the hold-up of an immigrant wagon by a band of Indians, the fight which the owners make, and their defeat. Two children, who have been sent on horseback for help to a settlement, are saved. The story deals with the later life of these two—Mary and Joe Thompson—who are played by Edythe Sterling and Norbert A. Myles. They are adopted by Bill Jenkins (MacQuarrie), and educated. But Joe possesses evil tendencies, and, unknown to his sister or foster father, is a robber. Injury which he receives while holding up a stage coach betrays him, but his sister aids him in escaping. Together they leave for another city, and the foster father, overcome by the disgrace, dies.

Joe is captured and sent to prison, and Mary goes to work in the city. She later marries a young inventor, but their happiness is short-lived, for her husband becomes infatuated with an actress. Then the fact that Mary and her brother had registered at a hotel under an assumed name as husband and wife in their escape, years before, is known by the actress, who uses this information against Mary, who is unable to prove that the man was her brother, since Joe has escaped from prison.

Mary attempts to steal the evidence from the attorney's safe, and encounters Joe, who is continuing his career of robbery. They are discovered by the attorney and Mary's husband, and in the struggle Mary is wounded. But with Joe's corroboration she is able to prove the falsity of the story against her, and there is a reconciliation. And Joe is to be helped to reform.

The play contains a number of thrilling situations, well photographed and well acted. Dorothy Nash plays the actress, Millard K. Wilson the husband. The play will interest those exhibitors whose patrons like a thrilling story with much action and who are not too critical of the finer points of a play.

"By Whose Hand?"

Equitable Production with Edna Wallace Hopper, Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

JUST who is the guilty one in this mystery story by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf the spectator never learns, for the picture closes with the judge, who presides at the trial of David Sterling, charged with murder, addressing the audience and asking "in your opinion who is guilty of the murder of Simon Baird?" That is a rather unique ending for a five-reel production. Were "By Whose Hand" an episode in a serial picture the ending would be less unique and more appropriate. As it is the ending is not entirely satisfactory.

In this mystery story the finger of suspicion points to at least four characters. The spectator is given no reason to suspect one above the other, so it is a task giving little promise of the delight which comes with solving a puzzle to try and arrive at a conclusion as to the person guilty of Simon Baird's murder. As none of the characters in the story are involved beyond the court's acquittal of Sterling, the spectator is more or less inclined to reply to the judge's question with the question "why ask me?", which is not the effect the ending should have.

In the court room the greater part of the story is enacted. This is done in cut backs to the time when Baird was a miner in Alaska and the partner of John Maitland. Mrs. Maitland, it transpires, was a dancer at one of the dance halls in which Alaska apparently abounds. Baird cruelly beat Maitland's servant, who still lives with the man he worked for in Alaska. The murdered man also wronged Maitland, stealing his gold, while the dancer was a victim of one of his nefarious schemes. In this way there is sufficient cause for the jury and the spectator to believe that some one of the three mentioned and Sterling, the inventor, is guilty.

The story unfolded in the court room is interesting. The scenes laid in Alaska have much color and realism. The snow blanketed ground, the dog teams which Baird and Maitland drive about, and appropriate settings all lend interest to these scenes. The play was directed by James Durkin.

Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Ross, both of whom have built up enviable reputations on the speaking stage, and Muriel Ostriche are the featured players. Three such well known names should prove a factor in attracting screen patrons to "By Whose Hand?" Miss Hopper is a pleasant Helen Maitland and Mr. Ross is splendid as her husband. Muriel Ostriche is cast as Helen, their daughter. In the supporting cast Nicholas Duneaw is the most prominent. His characterization as Kimba, the Eskimo servant, is thoroughly satisfactory, his performance being one of the most impressive in the picture.

"A Broken Genius"

Three-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released April 29. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A WIFE'S interference with her talented husband's career and the trouble which comes of it form the theme of an interestingly presented drama, which Thomas Ricketts directed from a scenario by N. P. Oakes. Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorn and George Field have the leading roles. Coxen plays the part of Karl Rittman, an artist, whose wife, Agnes (Miss Thorn), objects to his devotion to painting and is jealous of the models who pose for him.

George Field plays the villian, Jack Hemingway, who is in love with Agnes and tries to persuade her to elope with him. Believing that Karl has broken a promise he made to her, Agnes goes away with Hemingway. Karl, heartbroken, destroys his paintings, which were to mean fame and fortune, and for a time gives up his work. Later he learns that Jack Hemingway has been sent to the penitentiary for theft and that Agnes is supporting herself in another city. Karl goes to this city and one day, as he is near Agnes' home, he sees Hemingway, in his prison garb, enter the house. He follows. Agnes tries to shield the convict, who has been struck by a bullet when escaping from the prison. At last things are straightened out, and Karl learns that Agnes never loved Hemingway and that the threatened elopement never took place because of Hemingway's arrest. And Karl also learns of the birth of Agnes' baby. There is a reconciliation, and Karl is willing to extend forgiveness to the convict, who, however, has succumbed to the bullet wound.

The story is clear and holds the interest. The plot is well handled, and the offering will be liked.

"Artie the Millionaire Kid"

V. L. S. E. Blue Ribbon Comedy with Ernest Truex Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

AN AMERICAN youth of the type created by novelists and of proven popularity with the public, is Artie Hamilton, self confident. spirited and lacking nothing in nerve, the hero of Vitagraph's "Artie, The Millionaire Kid," which V. L. S. E. released on April 17. Ernest Truex makes Artie abundantly breezy and energetic. His acting is in the style very effective on the speaking stage, but before the camera some of his comedy business does not properly register and in some instances his actions are too fast, but taken as a whole one can speak only favorably of Truex's performance in this Blue Ribbon comedy.

The story, by William Courtenay, was produced by Harry Handworth and deals with Artie's romance with an attractive girl and his successful venture into the realm of high finance. His million dollar enterprise is fashioned after the methods of J. Rufus Wallingford, made famous by George Randolph Chester. The business deal is interesting, more interesting than many of the comedy incidents are amusing.

Dorothy Kelly plays opposite Ernest Truex and gives a pleasing appearance and delightful personality to Annabelle. Artie decides that he is going to marry Annabelle the first time he sees her. This is when he is traveling through the country as a book agent after his father, the railroad magnate, has ordered him out to make his own way in the world. It is Annabelle's attraction for him that makes Artie determined to remain in Byways.

He opens a real estate office, and knowing that his father's road is in need of a right of way through Uriah Updike's farm he sets out to get an option on the property. This he does by telling Updike that the railroad will not use his property and the syndicate Artie forms buys the land at a comparatively small sum. Then with the aid of a college chum, who masquerades as a woman, he tricks Updike into buying some other land; thus Artie makes good on his option with Updike's own money. After some more flights into the haze of high finance Artie sells his farm to his father for a million cash, and his marriage to Annabelle is sanctioned by her parents.

Albert Roccardi, as Updike, uses every opportunity to be amusing which comes his way, and John T. Kelly is good as Artie's dad. Etienne Girardot as the widow and William Dunn in the role of a detective are commendable in fruitless parts. The production and photography are praiseworthy.

"The Great Problem"

Bluebird Drama Featuring Violet Mersereau. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"THE GREAT PROBLEM" seems to refer, in the opening scenes of the play, to the proper method of punishing crime. With realistic scenes, the story begins as a sociological play. The theme changes later. "The Great Problem" is narrowed down to the question of what is to become of "Peggy," the heroine, a little pickpocket whom the reformer hero adopted as an experiment.

The opening scenes show the early life of Peggy Carson, her home, her parents and associates. Little Kittens Reicherts plays Peggy when a little child, and she plays the role very well, with feeling and intelligence. Strangely enough, the quiet little girl in the tenement home seems more "grown-up" than the later, vivacious ward of the reformer. Peggy's father, captured while stealing to aid his invalid wife, is sent to prison for a long term. The mother dies soon after and Peggy is cared for by an old friend of her father's who trains the child to be a pickpocket.

The rest of the story deals with Peggy when about eighteen years old. She is arrested as a thief, just in time to be the first prisoner brought to trial after a lawyer, George Devereaux, wagers that he can "reform" the next wrongdoer arrested and in two years make him a model citizen. Accordingly, Peggy becomes his ward, and the rest of the play is a comedy dealing with her various adventures while becoming educated.

The play depends on Miss Mersereau and her pranks to make it entertaining, which she does. Her escapades, her encounters with the butler, with the governess, and with Devereaux' prim relatives, are all amusing. And of course Peggy and her guardian fall in love, but do not realize the fact until Peggy has come very near to marrying Devereaux' friend. When she finally realizes for whom she cares, Peggy runs away. At this time her father is released from prison, and he and his daughter and Dereveaux are brought together in reconciliation in several dramatic scenes at the close.

While the play is not to be taken too seriously, it forms an agreeable entertainment. Miss Mersereau plays an ingenue role in a delightful manner, and the character parts, especially the butler, as played by Howard Crampton, are well done. Rex Ingram directed the play. Lionel Adams is Devereaux. Others in the cast are Dan Hanlon and William J. Dyer.

The release date of the play is April 17.

"The Leopard's Bride"

Mutual Masterpicture from the David Horsley Studios Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH its settings suggesting the strange land in which it plays "The Leopard's Bride" presents the popular Margaret Gibson in the role of a Hindu girl. This part is a sympathetic one and Miss Gibson appeals as the daughter of a jungle trible who sacrifices herself to the happiness of the English officer she loves so deeply.

Though Miss Gibson is the featured player the most important part falls to William Clifford, who is cast as Captain Morey. As is the case with the other players in this cast Mr. Clifford's acting is satisfactory. Brooklyn Keller, Nan Christy, Edward Gordon and Frederick Montague make up the balance of the cast.

The story, by Theodosia Harris, tells of a captain in the British service in India. Of the two suitors for her hand the wealthy Marjorie Lansdown favors Morey. His rival is Major Carr, who is Morey's superior officer. As a subtitle states, Carr is superior in military rank but Morey is his superior in honor. The Major seizes his opportunity to be rid of Morey. He sends the Captain to a post in the interior, where the climate is bad and only white men of robust constitution can live without falling a victim to the fever.

On arriving at the post Morey saves a little Hindu girl who is about to be sacrificed—burned at the stake in the performance of some Hindu religious ceremony. Needless to say she is his willing slave from that day on. The Major sees to it that Morey's letters to and from Marjorie are intercepted and destroyed. From worry and work Morey grows weak and falls a victim of the dreaded fever. Nadje, however, knows a cure for the disease and with constant care nurses her benegactor back to health.

After his recovery Morey marries Nadje. But later circumstances bring Marjorie and the Captain together again. Nadje then wanders off into the jungle, where she gives herself up to the ferocity of a leopard. The closing scene shows Morey and his sweetheart in each other's arms.

The Bostock animals, some two or three handsome leopards, which appear in this picture, are wonderfully trained and the scenes in which they appear are the most interesting in "The Leopard's Bride." The photography is clear but it could be much better.

"The Danger Line"

Essanay Three-Reel Play Released April 29. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY of the theater, just the sort of thing which every stage-struck girl wishes would happen to her, forms the theme of this release. It is a pleasing offering, one which will be liked. It is nicely presented and in the main is convincing. Edward Arnold, very well cast as John Herriman, a popular actor, and Elizabeth Burbridge as Rose Lane, the girl in the case, are the important people in the play.

Herriman meets Rose first when she appears in an amateur play at school, and he is impressed by her histrionic ability. Some time later, Rose is called home by the sudden death of her father. She learns that their fortune is gone and that she must support her mother and herself. Accordingly, she takes up stenography and her first position is in the office of Samuel Jermaine (Richard Cotton), a theatrical producer. There she meets again Herriman, the actor, and through him is given a small part in the play. She does well but incurs the jealousy of the leading woman, who is infatuated with Herriman. Things go from bad to worse until the night before the opening, when the leading lady, encouraged by the stage director who has annoyed Rose by his attentions, refuses to appear if Rose is not discharged. Herriman in turn refuses to appear if Rose is discharged. Rose, who had copied and studied the play, begs to play the leading role. The manager, Jermaine, allows her to, as one way out of the difficulty, and of course she wins a wonderful success as well as the heart of the leading man.

The play moves along rapidly and is presented in a light manner, with several comedy touches. most of them furnished by the acting of the stage property man who has a part in helping the lovers out of their difficulties.

There is one scene, short but important, which appears odd and untrue, the one in which the girl, called home by her father's death, first greets her mother. The mother, until the girl enters the room, is apparently absorbed in a magazine, and almost at once the daughter is deep in a magazine. The scene, as handled, might better have been omitted, a subtitle used instead. In other respects, though, the play is convincing and entertaining.

"The Love Mask"

A Lasky-Paramount Western Drama. Released April 13. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

CLEO RIDGLEY as a fearless, determined gold miner and Wallace Reid as her sheriff lover, play strikingly effective parts in this drama dealing with greed and treachery in the gold fields. Cleo Ridgely as Kate Kenner, a girl whose rich claim is seized by a band of dishonest ruffians, accomplishes a portrayal which necessitates a number of daring feats and much vigorous acting. The thieves have filed their claim and are within the law, but the girl, incensed at their dishonesty, determines to regain her gold irrespective of the demands of law, and this indomitable purpose characterizes Miss Ridgley's impersonation.

Wallace Reid is very well suited to and convincing in his part, which is no more prominent than the role entrusted to Earle Foxe, as the desperate but gallant bandit, "Silver Spurs." So conspicuous, indeed, is the latter character, that we are led to believe that the girl is in love with him and not Dan Deering, the sheriff.

Determined to recover some of her stolen gold, Kate disguises herself as "Silver Spurs" and lies in wait for the stage that is carrying the gold to town. The bandit, also intent upon holding up the stage, meets with his diminutive likeness and retires in her favor. Kate, although successful in making a daring holdup, is outwitted by the man who has the gold in charge. "Silver Spurs" detains the sheriff and his posse, and thus gives Kate a chance to escape. He is wounded in this encounter, but the girl later comes to his aid.

At the "Red Dog" saloon the yellow metal is put in charge of the saloonkeeper. Again in the bandit's disguise, Kate holds the occupants of the saloon at bay and is about to make away with her cherished metal when Dan, who has followed the supposed bandit through the window, takes her completely by surprise. Overwhelmed at the identity of the robber he is torn between love and duty, finally deciding on the latter. A trial is held in the adjoining room. Dan has his hands full to prevent the angry mob from lynching the girl at once.

When the jury retires to the main room they discover that the real "Silver Spurs" has been there and made away with the whole loot. His sarcastic note is the means of acquitting Kate. Dan takes the girl in his arms, while the men quickly exit, anxious to be on the trail of the elusive bandit.

The production of "The Love Mask" is of high quality, the interest in the development and outcome of its story is well sustained, and the picture is wholly enjoyable entertainment. The story was written by Cecil B. DeMille and Jeanie MacPherson.

"Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player"

Mutual Masterpicture. Released April 20. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

PRODUCED by the Thanhouser Company and dedicated to the Shakespeare tercentenary celebration, "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," is a modern romance in which England's bard plays an important part, first indirectly causing an engaged couple to part and then, just as indirectly, reuniting them. The story is by Philip Lonergan and Frederick Sullivan produced the picture, which, in the details of settings and costumes, is a credit to both director and the company's studio whence it came.

Florence La Badie is the featured player. She is the central character in a story prsenting a rather strange mixture of present day romance in which a recent outrage near the Mexican border figures and a shift of scene back to England in the days of "the good Queen Bess," Shakespeare and Bacon. These three and Miss La Badie become the moving spirits in a melodrama. Lord Bacon is the villain. The Elizabethan period is a visualization of a dream, certain phases of it being explained when the Colonel, in the last scene, tells his daughter that she has been delirious for some time.

The play is entertaining and Miss La Badie is rarely charming in every instance. Every scene in which she appears benefits by an assemblage of graces which cause one to look upon Miss La Badie as the prime factor in what pleasure "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," affords. She is Miss Grey, who, because of her belief that Bacon, and not Shakespeare, wrote the dramatic masterpieces attributed to the latter, quarrels with her fiance, Lieutenant Stanton, an admirer of the bard of Avon.

The Lieutenant asks to be transferred to the service at the Mexican border. There he is severely wounded in a battle which his bravery wins for the Americans. Upon receiving word of this Miss Grey swoons. Then there is a picturized dream. She is the daughter of Earl of Pembroke and sought with means both fair and foul by Lord Bacon. The latter is jealous of Shakespeare and bribes one of the courtiers to accuse him of stealing Bacon's plays. Miss Grey regains consciousness to find herself an admirer of Shakespeare and reconciled with her soldier lover, who has also recovered.

Robert Vaughn is the courageous Lieutenant and he does well with his part. Robert Whittier as Lord Bacon and Lawrence Swinburne as Shakespeare are alive to their opportunities and give satisfactory performances.

"The Woman Who Did Not Care"

Three-Reel Selig Play Released April 24. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN THIS case, "The Woman Who Did Not Care" conducted a column of society gossip in a newspaper, and the thing she did not care about was the effect of her various revelations on the good name of her friends. The play, written by Charles J. Buckley and produced by Frank Beal, deals with an unpleasant phase of newspaper activities, the publishing of scandalous details, whether true or imagined, in the lives of people of the higher classes. In this case, the cruel statement proved to have far-reaching results, injuring most the writer of the article.

Eugenie Besserer handles very skillfully the role of Mrs. Boyd, secretly "Madame Gossip." She shows her as a woman at home in high social circles, apparently a friend of those she associates with, but really without any sincerity or warmth of feeling. And although Rose Carlson and Jack White are fond of her, she does not hesitate to publish in her column, when their engagement is announced, a story she has heard to the effect that Rose is an adopted child. The story is true, but Rose had never known of her parentage and is heartbroken. She breaks her engagement until she can learn more of her own history. In her sorrow, she sends for her friend, Mrs. Boyd. The Carltons tell her the story, showing her the clothes which Rose wore when they adopted her. Mrs. Boyd is overcome by emotion. Then she tells her own story.

Rose, whose happiness she had destroyed, is her own daughter, though she has just learned this. Years before, she and her husband had quarrelled, and later her husband had secured a divorce and the custody of the little girl. By sacrificing her own good name, Mrs. Boyd had regained the care of the child. Then she was injured in an accident and for a time was insane. What became of her child she never knew, and the result of her troubles was that she cared for no one, and was willing to earn her living even by ruining those who care for her.

At the end of her story, she has won the sympathy of her audience and the love of her new-found daughter. And later Rose is reconciled with Jack.

The story is clearly and interestingly told, and well photographed. Edith Johnson appears as Rose Carlson, Harry Mestayer as Jack White.

THIS Red Seal play is a picturization of the stage play by David K. Higgins. It was arranged for the screen by Gilson Willets and directed by William Robert Daly. Both deserve credit for the clear and interesting way in which the complicated story is presented. The material in the story is well handled in five reels.

As Cindy Lane, the unfortunate mountain girl, Fritzi Brunette has a role neither easy nor especially pleasant, but she plays most sincerely and skillfully. The most likeable character in the story is played by Leo Pierson, who as Jack Rose, the young farmer, gives a pleasing performance. The entire cast, however, does very good work, and each character stands out clearly portrayed. Edward J. Piel has the heavy role, Mark Brierson, who is responsible for all the trouble in the play. Al W. Filson is Zeb Lane, a mountaineer, the father of Cindy. Frank Clark is General Deering, a southern gentleman of wealth, and Vivian Reed is his daughter, Azalia. Lillian Hayward appears in an important role as Dagmar, an octoroon, whose confession later forms the "key" to the plot, and brings the guilty man to justice.

The threads of the plot link the home of Cindy Lane, at Piney Ridge, in the Tennessee Mountains, and the bank in the town below, and trouble in both cases is caused by Mark Brierson, who has taken funds from General Deering's bank and invested them unwisely, and who is refusing to keep his promise to marry Cindy Lane.

Mark Brierson plans to get out of his own trouble by marrying Azalia, the daughter of Deering, and he does not care what becomes of Cindy. His scheme does not progress as he wishes because of Azalia's interest in Jack Rose, a wealthy young farmer, who is the heaviest depositor in the bank. Danger threatens Jack from two sources. In the first place, Cindy's father suspects him of having ruined his daughter, since Cindy refuses to confess the name of her lover, and intends to kill him. And when Brierson learns of Azalia's love for Jack, he announces that Jack is of negro blood, being the son of Dagmar. Since Jack is a foundling, the story is not easy to disprove. In the end, Dagmar confesses that not Jack but Brierson is the one tainted with negro blood. Brierson's other sins are discovered, and in the end he is killed. Jack comes into an inheritance, saves the bank and, when his good name is cleared, married Azalia. And Cindy is consoled by a youthful mountaineer whom she had loved before her affair with Brierson.

The story is not a cheerful one, and, while the general outline of the plot is very clear, there are a number of minor events which are not explained. The background of the play, the mountain scenery, is beautiful, and the local color is convincingly presented. There are many beautiful pictures in the story, not the least of them the scenes containing several handsome saddle horses.

"A Social Highwayman"

World Film Corporation's Crook Story in Five Parts. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

THOSE who expect a lot for their money will surely get it in this whirlwind melodramatic offering, featuring Edwin August as a brilliant society sneak thief who is infinitely superior in intellect to the common run of sneak thieves, and for that matter superior in intellect to the society people among whom he moves.

Miss Ormi Hawley is also featured, but her opportunities are limited. The story was taken from a former Broadway stage success of the same name, but there have been numerous changes and very many additions to the original manuscript as first produced by Richard Mansfield. It is one of those detective plays that makes frequent excursions into the realm of the improbable; one of those plays for which the spectator should check his analytical inclinations at the doorway of the theater, and go in prepared to sit back and enjoy himself, letting probability go to the winds.

There is such a thing as a movie patron being too all-fired smart. It is unreasonable to expect that every photoplay must stand a microscopic test for probability, especially a detective story. Everybody knows that they are more or less improbable and frequently impossible. Often the more impossible they are, the better they are liked. After about the first reel of an impossible detective story the tired business man screws himself further down in his seat and says to himself, "Away with probability. Let's see what he is going to do next." And so it is with this production. It is so improbable and impossible that anyone will enjoy it in the wonderment of what will happen next.

There are trap doors, sliding mantels, secret elevators, lightning changes, clever escapes, and all the rest of the inexhaustible impossibilities that enter into such a story. The public admires all of these things in a detective story in proportion to the cleverness with which they are done. This production is unusually clever in the mechanical devices and quick-witted expedients used by Mr. August in deceiving other people. The production was directed as well as played by Mr. August, and on that account he is entitled to the lion's share of credit for this entertaining and thrilling offering.

There is an attempt to bring in the element of pre-natal influence. The early part shows how the thief's mother, shortly before he was born, had stolen a necklace to keep herself and husband from starvation. This thieving propensity is supposed to have had its influence on the child that was born soon after. The father of the child is the son of an English nobleman and was disinherited for marrying an Italian peasant woman. Later the son is shown as a grown-up young man having inherited his grandfather's wealth, but hopelessly addicted to thieving, supposedly through inheritance from his mother.

As a grown-up young man, he is seen as a New York society man who gives receptions and robs his guests, until he is finally caught with the goods and is killed in a police raid on his mysterious dwelling place.

Photographically the production is of a very high standard. The stage settings are all elaborate, the acting is intelligent, and the direction is fast and full of life. For a story of this kind, it is one of the best, with a punch in every reel, and sometimes more.

"The Children in the House"

Triangle-Fine Arts Drama Has Pleasing Elements Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH a modern domestic drama, some fantastic scenes of striking pictorial beauty and a melodramatic climax in which the villains are pursued to their doom in a thrilling motor car chase, "The Children in the House" has a variety that undoubtedly will cause each picturegoer who sees it to speak favorably of some portion of the offering even if the picture as a whole fails to create a pleasant and lasting impression.

"The Children in the House" is interesting. Times there are when one feels that the story is not moving but in these places there is something to engage the attention and hold it consistently. The story by Roy Somerville is rather well constructed and the direction of the Franklins (C. M. and S. A.) is admirable. The producers have drawn the play slightly beyond its natural length to the required five reels gracefully and pleasantly.

In the after thought of "The Children in the House" Norma Talmadge, who enacts the central character, assumes the most prominent place, and certainly this image is far from displeasing; in fact, it is wholly charming and something to be courted. Miss Talmadge brings much grace and appeal to Cora, the neglected wife of a caddish young man whose father is rich. Cora was in love with another, but Arthur won her by means that were not entirely honorable. Cora remains true to her husband, though his affair with a dancer is causing considerable talk.

On the evening when Arthur is aiding some crooks in robbing his father's bank, Cora for the first time gives way to her natural impulse to elope with Brown, her first love. But her two children who, frightened, at the storm that is raging, call their mother, which awakens both Cora and Charles to their duty. The next day the robbery is discovered and because Charles, who is the cashier, cannot give an account of his whereabouts at a certain hour the night before he is arrested. Cora is about to tell the truth to save her loyal friend when word is received of the capture of the crooks and the accidental death of Arthur.

The settings and the photography are in every sense attractive. The picturization of Brown's story of his lost love to the children and in the terms of a fairy tale is particularly pretty. William Hinckley plays opposite Miss Talmadge, while Eugene Pallette is cast as Arthur, her husband. Jewel Carmen is successful as Jane, the dancer, a character which she makes vastly attractive. The players mentioned have the important parts and they all deserve praise. The actors in the supporting cast prove adequate.

"Molly Make-Believe"

Marguerite Clark in Famous Players-Paramount Romance. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH the dainty Marguerite Clark to lead one on, the road to the land of airy romance is smooth and the journey easily made, which is the necessary thing if grownups are to enjoy "Molly Make-Believe," the Famous Players' picturization of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's widely known stories. The children, who, since they make up such a large part of the picture loving public, are entitled to the producer's consideration, will find in "Molly Make-Believe" all that they could desire from a photoplay, and, too, it will prove a beneficial entertainment.

On the other hand it is not venturing far to say that adults will be as pleased with this latest Marguerite Clark picture as they were with her former appearances. The role is a sympathetic one and it is more so for the manner of her characterization. The story tells of a little girl and her brother who decide to make their own way when it becomes known that their grandmother is poor and little able to support them.

Molly and her little brother make off one night. The circumstances which make their trip to the city take on a rather serious aspect for them turn out to be opportunities. Molly makes the acquaintance of a wealthy chap. There is a strong mutual attraction and later, when Molly is conducting a business of her own, Stanton and Molly are caught up in an interesting romance. Molly has discovered that there are many hungry hearts who are willing to pay for sympathy, so she establishes a letter-writing business.

Stanton becomes one of her subscribers. With a broken leg to confine him to his room and a fiancee too indifferent to even write an occasional note from the South, where she is busily seeking her own pleasure, Stanton's one pleasure is the notes he receives from "Molly Make-Believe." She is to him an imaginary sweetheart, for he has never seen her, or at least he thinks he has not. One day, however, he sees Molly, then Cornelia's breaking off of her engagement to him and his marriage to Molly quickly follow.

There is in this picture a wealth of charming incidents and as Marguerite Clark as Molly is quite as delightful as she ever was. "Molly Make-Believe" is good entertainment. The production is pretty and the photography highly satisfactory. Mahlon Hamilton heads an effective supporting cast, which includes Master Dick Gray, Helen Dahl, Gertrude Norman, J. W. Johnston and Edwin Mordant.

The Pollard Picture Play Company, which left New York about March 15 for California to stage "The Pearl of Paradise," with Margarita Fischer, Harry Pollard and several others, was lost for several days during a severe storm on the coast, according to news received by George W. Lederer.

The magnificent schooner "Ida A," which they had chartered to take the company to the Santa Cruz islands, was so badly battered by the storm that several of the company were injured; an iron drum which was lashed on deck, on being released by the wind, severely hurt two members of the company.

Anxiety prevailed on the coast when news of their being lost was heard, the newspapers joined in the search, all seacraft were on the lookout for signs of the missing party, and M. R. McKinstry of the company, who remained in San Diego, tried to charter every boat on the coast in his anxiety to locate the lost ones.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

William Garwood, who recently went east, is expected back at the western Universal studios soon.

Anna Little plays the role of a school teacher in "Unlucky Luke," a three-reel "Mustang" drama. Frank Borzage, who directed it, plays the title role, with Jack Richardson as "heavy."

George Periolat has a dual role in "The Counterfeit Earl," directed by Carl Le Vinoss for the American Company.

Mary Charleson.

"Your work in "Passers By" simply stole the picture—I've watched you for three years and it's the best thing without a doubt you ever did."

This tribute, by long distance, from one of the foremost directors on two continents started another happy day for Mary Charleson. It came as an addition to hundreds of compliments, all directed at her magnificent portrayal of Margaret Summers in the C. Haddon Chambers play.

Vivian Rich, Louise Lester, Marie Van Tassel, Alfred Vosburg and Al Fordyce appear in the cast.

Lizette Thorn appears as a society girl who becomes a social worker in "The End of the Rainbow," a three-act American drama. Edward Coxen is leading man. Leona Hutton, George Field, Jack Farrell, Hazel West, Joseph Beaudry and George Ahearn are in the cast.

"The Return," a "Mustang" drama featuring Art Acord and Nita Davis, contains a number of scenes on a large California bee ranch.

A number of scenes were staged at the Leper Colony at Manaos, Brazil, by John Ince, for "The Struggle." The company also secured many beautiful tropical settings for other scenes.

After an extended tour of Australia, Jessie Arnold has joined the stock company at Universal City.

Alice Morton Otten, who played the Indian girl in the prologue to the film play, "Ramona," is in the cast of "The Eye of God," which the Smalleys are producing at Universal City.

William Worthington is producing for the Universal Company a two-reel story of studio life entitled, "A Movie Romance." Pliny Horn wrote the story. Herbert Rawlinson is the star.

"The Other Half," written by W. B. Pearson, is a story of the underworld which Jacques Jaccard directed for the Universal Company. Roberta Wilson and Raymond G. Nye have the leading roles.

Jay Belasco, who played the bashful lover in "Tangled Hearts," has an important role in "The Full Cup," the new Ida May Park play featuring Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney.

Margaret Whistler, character actress at Universal City, has many talents. She is an expert at make-up, an artistic dress designer, an architect, and, because of her travels abroad, an authority on foreign sets.

Louise Lovely, starred in the Bluebird play, "Tangled Hearts," when fourteen years old, played the role of "Camille" in Australia, her native land.

Georgia French, the eight-year-old Universal actress, surprised Director De Grasse and members of the cast by her acting in the role of "Enid Hammond's" child in the Bluebird play, "Tangled Hearts."

"The Hare and the Tortoise," a strong drama which Director Frank Beal is filming at the Selig studios, was written by Anthony McGuire.

The basic idea for "The Grip of Evil," the new Balboa series, was supplied by La Monte Waldron, a New York newspaper man. Douglas Bronston is preparing the scenario. There will be fourteen two-reel episodes, each complete in itself.

Jackie Saunders, in the gowns she will wear in "The Grip of Evil," the series in which she is featured, will appear in the Pathe Weekly for fourteen weeks in advance of the production's first release.

Rena Rodgers, leading woman in Vogue-Mutual comedies, is mourning the loss of "Nips," her pet Pomeranian, which was killed by an automobile.

Ben Turpin, late of Essanay, will soon appear in his first Vogue-Mutual release. Jack Dillon is directing.

Ed Sedgwick is another newcomer to the Vogue-Mutual studios. He is one of the biggest men in screen comedies, standing well over six feet and weighing in proportion.

Rube Miller, while recovering from injuries which prevented his working in pictures, has completed the direction of "The Love Pills," a Vogue-Mutual comedy.

"Chinatown Villians," which Jack Dil- lon directed at the Vogue-Mutual studios, contains much clever trick photography.

Marie Walcamp has been transferred from the direction of Henry McRae to that of the Smalleys. She played feminine lead in "John Needham's Double," featuring Tyrone Power.

Flora Parker De Haven is featured in "The Madcap," which William Dowlan directed from a story by George Gibbs, adapted by Leonora Ainsworth. Vera Doria and Richard Sterling are in the cast.

"The Eye of God," written by Lois Weber, is said to be a powerful psychological drama. Tyrone Power plays the lead, with Miss Weber opposite him. Phillips Smalley directed the film, which is in five reels.

Jack Nellson, who appeared in the support of George Beban in "The Alien," is also in the cast of "Pasquale," featuring Beban.

Al W. Filson, Selig character man, was once a member of the vaudeville team of Filson and Errol and used George M. Cohan's first playlet as a popular vehicle.

A set so large that the camera had to be placed two hundred feet away to get all the construction into the picture was built at the Balboa studios for "Sultana," in which Ruth Roland and William Conklin will appear.

Norman Luke, now with the Balboa players, was once a bank clerk.

Edgar Keller and Philo Goodfriend are co-directing a one-reel novelty picture. The idea was furnished by Mr. Kellar, who is an artist of note.

Henry King has returned from his vacation, which was spent at Arrowhead Springs.

In "The Man Who Forgot," Anna Little and Frank Borzage play a husband and wife whose paths diverge, and who are brought together by an old miner.

Several wolves and a lamb appear in one scene for a feature which Ed J. Le Saint is directing, with Stella Razeto as the star. The wolves proved easier to manage than the lamb, who wanted to examine the camera.

Dwight Whiting, manager of the Rolin Film Company, and W. H. Doane, his secretary, went to Tia Juana, Mexico, recently to make arrangements for taking comedy pictures in and around the gambling halls and the race track. The company of players will go south soon.

Balboa players staged a cabaret entertainment at the annual banquet of the Long Beach, Cal., Chamber of Commerce, under the direction of Norman Manning. A burlesque entitled "How the Movies are Made" was the most ambitious offering.

Howard Hickman is acting the heavy lead opposite Dorothy Dalton in a feature personally directed by Thomas H. Ince.

The costumes and sets being used in the one-reel novelty being produced by Edgar Kellar and Philo Goodfellow at the Vitagraph studios are said to be of unusual beauty and novelty.

Nona Thomas is not only a clever actress. She is an excellent housekeeper, sews well and devotes part of her time to music and voice culture.

Charles Ray has a prominent role in the picture which will star Louise. Glaum in a "vampire" role.

The Rolin Film players, who produce the "Phunphilms" for the Pathe release, have moved from Edendale into their new studio in Hollywood. For one week they were without a studio and produced a comedy, written for the occasion, in an old barn and back yard.

W. A. S. Douglas, director of production for Pathe, is at the Balboa studios in Long Beach, supervising the production of a release for the Pathe program.

Recent productions at the Lubin studios in California under the direction of Captain Wilbert Melville include "The Return of James Jerome," "The Scarlet Chastity," "One of the Pack," and "Playthings of the Gods."

Jackie Saunders, Balboa-Pathé.

Jackie Saunders is to be featured for the first time in a serial, "The Grip of Evil," which the Balboa Company will produce for Pathe. The stories, which will appear as fourteen complete two-reel episodes, were planned by La Monte Waldron, a New York newspaper man. Miss Saunders will wear some very striking gowns in the series.

For the Signal production of "Whispering Smith," Director J. P. McGowan required eleven actors each at least six feet tall and weighing between 190 and 230 pounds. McGowan himself is one of the eleven.

Many of the funny incidents in Charles Chaplin's first Mutual release, "The Floorwalker," occur in connection with a moving stairway, built for the big department store scene.

Gladys Brockwell, who came from New York to be leading woman with the Raoul Walsh company, is enjoying her western experiences in California and Arizona in the production of Fox pictures.

Bebe Daniels, who supports Harold Lloyd in the Pathe "Lonesome Luke" comedies, is just sixteen years old. She made her first appearance on the stage when ten months old, appearing in a road production of "Jane" under her father's management.

Cleo Madison is finishing a two-reel story, "The Emissary," at the Universal studios. She directed the drama and played the leading role.

"The Highest Bidder," a five-reel "Flying A" feature, has been completed by the William F. Russell company. The company spent one week in the mountains filming exteriors.

Except William F. Russell's company, which will continue to produce four and five-reel features, the "Flying A" companies at Santa Barbara are returning to one and two-reel pictures.

Ashton Dearholt is to play the leading juvenile role in the American Film Company's seven-reel picture featuring Audrey Munson, the exposition model. Rea Berger will direct the play.

Anna Luther is enjoying her present role in a Keystone comedy, which gives her a chance to appear at the studio and elsewhere in man's attire.

Lena Baskette, the little dancer, has a new Buick roadster.

Louise Lester's short stories, published at various times under a nom de plume, have been collected into one volume, entitled "Life's Heres and Theres," and presented to Miss Lester by a number of her friends.

Art Acord is the star, William Bertram the director, and Karl R. Koolidge the author of "A Life at Stake," a two-reel western drama with plenty of action. Nita Davis plays the feminine lead.

Members of the Rolin company, who expect to go to Mexico to film a comedy, are brushing up on their Spanish.

The great annual run of the Pacific salmon from the sea to shallow headwaters of Alaskan rivers will be photographed as a feature of the Lubin production of "The Silver Hoard," Rex Beach's novel.

Helen Holmes is mourning the death of her father, a well-known railroad official, for a number of years traffic manager of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois R. R. Mr. Holmes died suddenly at his home in Chicago.

Charlie Murray, at the Keystone studios, has been featured in three releases in seven weeks.

"Casey at the Bat," Ernest L. Thayer's poem, which De Wolf Hopper made famous, is to be produced on the screen. William E. Wing has woven it into a human interest story.

To add to the realism of the American serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," the actors playing foreign characters will speak in the national language of the character portrayed. Hylda Hollis and Harry Edmondson, who appear as Russians, have lived in Petrograd and can speak Russian, while William Tedmarsh, as the Japanese, learned that language when in the Orient.

Jackie Saunders, before entering pictures, posed for such artists as Harrison

Fisher, Clarence Underwood and Howard Chandler Christy.

Alice Neice, now with the Vogue Film Company in Los Angeles, was formerly known as "The Alaskan Prima Donna," and appeared in Nome, Fairbanks, Dawson City, and other cities of Alaska.

The Horkheimer Brothers, in conjunction with exhibitors showing "Little Mary Sunshine," are promoting, in many cities, free entertainments for the children in orphan asylums, many of whom have never seen a picture show.

Hal Cooley, who usually plays a juvenile role in photoplays, appears as a man near middle age in "The Courtesan," an American feature.

Helene Rosson of the American Company is denying rumors recently printed in Santa Barbara papers that she is engaged to an actor in that company.

Otis Turner directed "Son of the Immortals," from Ruth Ann Baldwin's version of Louis Tracy's novel. J. Warren Kerrigan plays the title role.

Elliott J. Clawson, who has been writing feature plays for the Morosco Company, has joined the Universal City scenario staff.

"The Land of Make-Believe," a fairy story with a clever plot, filmed at Universal City with Robert Leonard and Ella Hall in the leading roles, contains an especially beautiful night scene.

Hobart Bosworth and company, with Director Lloyd Carleton, went to San Diego for exteriors for "The Way of the World," a film version of the play by Clyde Fitch.

Margaret Mayburn is now leading woman with Henry McRae's Universal 101 Bison Company, now making railroad pictures. Miss Mayburn, who is a sister of Grace Cunard, formerly played under the name of "Mina Cunard."

Captain R. Forde, director of the employment bureau at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, will in the future engage principals as well as extras, thus relieving Director-General Cecil De Mille.

Rollin S. Sturgeon has a vest pocket kodak and spends Sundays taking snapshots of his friends.

George Holt is to play the master criminal in the Cleveland Moffett detective story which Rollin S. Sturgeon will produce.

"God's Country and the Woman" is scheduled for release May fist. It has already been booked for Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles.

Corinne Griffith plays two parts, mother and daughter, in a one-reel comedy which William Wolbert finished recently. Jack Mower has an important role. William E. Wing wrote the story.

Nell Clark Keller designed and superintended the making of all costumes in the novelty picture now being produced at the Vitagraph studios by Edgar Keller, the artist. Carmen Phillips plays the part of a dancer. Webster Campbell, Corrinne Griffith, Florence Vidor, Claire Toner and Al G. Blake are also in the cast.

Arthur Moon impersonates a woman in the Vogue comedy, "Slipping It Over on Father," released April 23.

Edythe Sterling, now leading lady with the Signal (Mutual) Company, has played stellar roles in 101 Bison and Big U pictures.

Marguerite Nichols, now with the American Company, has been in pictures for two years. She has been on the legitimate stage since she was a little child.

Louise Lester has insured her wardrobe for American Mutual productions for $30,000.

Dorothy Bernard plays two roles in "A Man of Sorrow," in which William Farnum is starred.

"Peggy," a clever canine player, has an important part in "A Man of Sorrow."

Dorothy Bernard's early ambition was to be a sculptor.

William Hart will next appear in "The Primal Lure," a story of the Canadian northwest, adapted by J. G. Hawks from a novel by Vingie E. Roe. Margery Wilson plays the heroine, the daughter of a French settler.

Having completed Lois Weber's drama, "The Eye of God," the Smalleys have begun the production of their next Universal feature, "Shoes," from a story by Stella M. Herron. Mary McConald will be featured.

Vola Smith, leading lady for the last two years for the Biograph company, has signed up at Universal City to play a "vampire" lead in Carter de Haven's company. Miss Smith is nineteen years old and an exceptionally pretty girl. This "vampire" lead will be the first of that variety Miss Smith has ever attempted. It will mean the smoking of her first cigarette and the wearing of her first snake-like gown, for both of which events she is in daily practice.

Ashton Dearholt has made application for entry in the July 4th auto races. Mr. Dearholt holds an enviable speed record as autoist as well as that of juvenile lead for the American Film Company.

William Christy Cabanne, on completing the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "The Bouncer," was allowed by the Fine Arts management to retain Mr. Fairbanks as lead in his company. Just what the new Fairbanks vehicle will be has not been decided.

A series of western and underworld stories is being arranged for Harry Carey by the Universal company, in which pictures he is to be starred. A special release is being arranged for "The Three Godfathers," the five-reel Peter B. Kyne story, in which Mr. Carey is said to have given a wonderful performance.

Hugh Russell finds that the climate of southern California, in contrast to that of Australia, is first aid to the making for unwelcome weight. As a result of this knowledge, he finds it is quite necessary to walk three miles every morning.

Nell Shipman comes to the Vitagraph studio every morning in relays. The trip from the big home she has taken in Alhambra to the Vitagraph Hollywood studio is exactly one of an hour and forty minutes. She leaves her home as 6:50 each morning in an auto, which takes her to the interurban car line, at the terminal of which in Los Angeles she is met by Marjorie Cole in her Dodge car. Miss Cole then delivers Miss Shipman in safety and on time, one-half hour later, at the studio.

Adelaide Woods is one of the distinctive Biograph types who was set at liberty last week when that company disbanded. Immediately the Morosco company sent for her with the offer of a big part in the feature picture now being arranged for at that studio, and which will be directed by William V. Taylor. Miss Woods is the rare type of young woman who possesses white hair and a youthful face. She is a Californian and has been pronounced one of the most beautiful women in the California colony.

Albert Russell is another new name that has just been added to the Universal pay roll. Mr. Russell is to co-direct with Billy Mason in the latter's comedy series, in which Mr. Mason is to play lead. Mr. Russell is experienced in the directing line, having assisted and co-directed at the Biograph company for the past two and one-half years.

"Smiling" Billy Mason was given a company of his own at Universal City and immediately requested Albert Russell as co-director. Mr. Mason will write his own pictures and play the lead in them; these will be a series of "Billy" adventures, the first several having to do with his baseball career.

Arthur Shirley has finished his work as Vassar, the lead in Thomas E. Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation," and has motored up to Bear Lake for a vacation of a week or two.

William Russell is now a director and author as well as an actor. His first venture, "The Secret Mating," will be released soon as an American Mutual Masterpicture. Russell played the leading role, supported by Harry Keenan and Leona Hutton.

"Bill" Russell has been promoted.

Who said "common" folks don't like Grand Opera? Witness New York crowds going after the Essanay-Chaplin "Carmen."—Broadway Theater.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

"Sherlock Holmes," featuring William Gillette, will be released by the Essanay company in seven reels.

The Essanay company has begun production on a new set of George Ade fables.

Edna Mayo is learning to play golf.

E. H. Calvert is spending several weeks at French Lick Springs.

John Cossar, who appears as the prosecuting attorney in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," has an important role in "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row."

Will Machin, who is playing the role of Captain Lige Brandt in the Selig production of "The Crisis," was a lieutenant in the British army during the Boer war.

Richard Travers and John Junior had a narrow escape from injury in an automobile accident during the filming of "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row."

Sallie Fisher, who is starred in the Essanay production of "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," was born on a ranch in Wyoming. She is well known for her work in musical comedy.

SOUTHERN NOTES

By William Noble

The Liberty theater at McAlester, Okla., was closed and dismantled April 1. Former Manager John A. Steinson has accepted a traveling position with the V. L. S. E. with headquarters at Dallas, Texas.

Douglas Steinson has accepted the managership of the Queen theater at Sulphur, Okla.

The Yale-Majestic theater at McAlester, Okla., was reopened April 10 after having been dark for past month for remodelling. The seating capacity has been increased to 800.

Thomas S. Wilcox is building a new $5,000 moving picture theater at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Winter and Block are remodeling the Royal theater at Chattanooga, Tenn. The Victoria theater, at Nashville, Tenn., is being remodeled.

Peter Fabacher has taken over the Dixie theater at New Orleans, La. Mr. Fabacher also operates the Wonderland theater.

The Yale Theater Company will build a motion picture theater at Yale, Okla., in near future.

The Cozy theater at Shawnee, Okla., is to be remodeled and enlarged.

The Palace theater at Hobart, Okla., was burned recently; loss, $5,000.

J. H. Harlow is having a studio fitted up for the Dixie Film Co. in South Jacksonville, Fla.

L. W. Brophy announces that he will build a modern picture house at Fort Smith, Ark., in near future.

W. E. Cookscy, proprietor of the Pastime theater, was assassinated March 25 after leaving for home after night performance.

The De Luxe theater was opened at Bristow, Okla., April 1 with 500 seating capacity. Both pictures and vaudeville will be run.

BRITISH TRADE GOSSIP

Lord Selborne, president of the Board of Agriculture, stated in a speech recently his belief that the introduction of motion pictures had been an excellent social improvement in villages and small towns, since heretofore a lack of amusement has been an important factor in driving the young people to the cities.

Vesta Tilley is to appear in motion pictures in "The Girl Who Loves a Soldier" for the Samuelson Film Manufacturing Company.

A. Prins, of the X. L. Film Company's headquarters, has joined the colors.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" is to be the first of the plays of Oscar Wilde to be produced on the screen. Irene Rooke will play the leading role, for the Ideal Company.

"The Miracle of Life" was greatly liked by the people of Cardiff and it will be shown again in that city.

The owner of a theater in Southport loans umbrellas to his patrons on rainy days, requiring a small deposit when the patron is a stranger.

The Lasky production of "The Chorus Lady" is being well received.

The Trans-Atlantic Company's new serial. "Graft," is attracting attention.

DANCER WITH LUBIN

Mlle. Garda Polotskova, the beautiful dramatic dancer and talented actress, will appear in the important role of the Russian dancer in Daniel Carson Goodman's "Love's Toll" which is shortly to be released by Lubin through V. L. S. E. This will be the first appearance of Mlle. Polotskova on the screen and her unusual type of beauty and unique talents are certain to win for her a niche of her own among photo-drama celebrities.

"Split Reel" News for Theater Men

A POCKET program of current and coming attractions is a valuable thing for any theater and this idea is well carried out by the Novelty Theater of Malone, New York. The front page carries a cut of the house with a crowd entering and the line: "Don't throw this away. Shove it into your pocket for reference." A good feature about the program is the urge to patrons to write in criticisms of the house, program or of photoplays, companies or players in general, giving preferences and so on. An advertisement is carried on the back of the four-page folder, which is a bit larger than postal card size.

The five reel feature "The Heart of New York," which deals with the troubles of a working girl in a new way, and therefore has had a jolly time with the censor moguls of New York has been finally passed and the rights for Greater New York, northern New Jersey and New York state have been purchased by B. S. Moss. He will first exhibit the film at the Prospect Theater, New York City. For his string of theaters and the eastern territory mentioned above Mr. Moss has also purchased "The Birth of Character," another "virile" drama. "One Day," "Three Weeks" and "The Salamander" are also controlled in his territory by Mr. Moss.

A unique little pink programlet is issued at the front of each week by the Edisonia Theater, Union, South Carolina. It's about vest pocket size, which makes it all the handier as a reminder to the patron who can so easily keep it in a pocket without inconvenience.

Herman Fichtenberg has taken a ten-year lease on the William Kline property, 614 Canal street, New Orleans, La., and will begin work on the erection of an up-to-date motion picture house in the near future. The Globe, which will be the name of the new house, will have a seating capacity of 800, and will be in line with the finest picture houses in the South. It is planned to have the theater ready for opening by the first of October.

Work is to begin at once on Joe Ryan's new motion picture theater and apartment building, which is to be erected on the west side of Egan avenue, Madison, S. D. The building is to be a two-story brick structure, 25 feet frontage and 136 feet deep. The theater will have a seating capacity of 450, and will be operated by Mr. Ryan. If no delay is experienced in getting materials the building will be ready for occupancy about the middle of June.

To convince exhibitors of Eastern Canada of the merits of Blue Bird films the Toronto office of that concern is conducting an extensive advertising campaign. The Montreal Blue Bird office is now in charge of James Orkney.

It is possible that in the future the Ontario Board of Censors will pass upon display posters and other advertising matter for a film at the same time that it reviews the picture. This will come as a result of a complaint made by the police against W. J. Holstein, a Toronto exhibitor, for displaying a poster which had not been "inspected." The police lost because the by-law designated no official "inspector."

When the Triangle Film Corporation's lease on the Knickerbocker theater in New York expires the first of September, the Charles Frohman estate and Klaw and Erlanger will get the house again for a term of five years. The lease has been signed.

A new picture theater—one story and balcony—will be built on lower Eighth avenue, New York, at a cost of $18,000. The builder, Thomas Dimond, has leased the house already to the Greenwich Movie Company.

For the purpose of obtaining better pictures, the Brooklyn Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, has been urging its members to increase the roll of the organization. New members are being admitted daily.

A program typical of the average theater of Philadelphia is the following, which ran at the Princess last week:

Florence Reed in "Woman's Law," was shown on Monday. Tuesday, "The Devil, the Servant and the Man." Wednesday, the Triangle feature, "Peggy," featuring Billie Burke. Thursday, "The Girl and the Game," continued, and other good subjects. Friday, "The Greater Wrong" and Saturday John Mason in "The Reapers."

Toronto is to have a million-dollar hippodrome, according to the Canadian Universal Bulletin. The big theater is to be built by the Empire Amusement Company, with H. H. Williams, a broker and real estate dealer of Toronto at the head of the enterprise.

Here is an exhibitor who publishes a miniature serial story to give to patrons to advertise the Universal serial "The Master Key," which he is running. He gets out a small booklet containing a short story of each episode so that people can follow the whole story through with greater interest. This scheme was originated by Manager Morrison of the Meaford Theater, Meaford, Ontario.

The Clark Amusement Company, Louisville, Ky., which was recently incorporated, has taken over the Oleon Theater, Thirteenth and Walnut streets, and will reopen the theater as a picture house, catering exclusively to the colored population of the city. The company also has the Ruby Theater, another colored picture house on Walnut street, under their management.

The old Superba Theater, Atlanta, Ga., which was formerly used as a vaudeville house, but which has been in darkness for some time, has been reopened by Alpha Fowler. The new proprietor has completely renovated and refurnished the house, and has changed the name to The Alpha. Straight picture programs are being given.

"If the following parties have time to read this they can claim two passes to the Ideal this week: Mrs. M. C., 736 Raymond street," etc.

The above is taken from the weekly program issued by the Ideal Theater of Akron, Ohio. Five other names followed the one given. Another good feature of the Ideal program is that it prints the casts of the plays. Many people are much interested in the persons who play the different parts.

Six donkey carts, all passing down the leading streets and advertising on large boards the display of Metro pictures, were used last week by four picture houses of Dublin, Ireland. The houses showing the films were the Bohemian, the Carlton, the Grafton Street and Grand, and further point was given to the novel outside show by a full column of advertisements in the leading Dublin papers, all extolling the attractions of the above famous brand of productions.

More than thirty plays which are to be seen at the Doric Theater of Detroit are listed on the back of the gay green program issued weekly by Manager Frank L. Hanson. This gives the patron some good things to look forward to and keeps his mind turned toward the Doric.

Rochester, N. Y., has joined the censorship crowd and until the mayor can appoint a permanent official, the comsioner of safety is cutting film.

H. & H., Chicago, reports good business from W. H. Lawrence in Illinois territory.

I. Van Ronkel has taken larger quarters on the third floor at 109 North Dearborn street, Chicago, to take care of the Bluebird business of which he has charge in that territory.

C. R. Miller and I. R. Parnass have been engaged to sell Bluebird features in Chicago territory.

Have you ever thought of furnishing your patrons with umbrellas? Well, an English exhibitor has. Manager H. J. Sherlock of the Picturedrome, of Southport, England, originated the scheme and has worked it out successfully. During bad weather the rain-shedders are lent to regular patrons free of charge and without security. From strangers a deposit of about 75 cents is required.

The Chalk Beeson Theater, Dodge City, Kan., Beeson Brothers, owners, has just been completed. The theater is a modern fireproof structure, 75x70 feet, and has a seating capacity of about 1,200. The building cost something like $40,000.

George E. Thomassey is planning to build a two-story motion picture theater building at Burgettstown, Pa. The building will be of brick, 25x90 feet, and will be modern in every respect.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by makers, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Blind Princess and the Poet—Biograph—April 24.—Featuring Blanche Sweet, Florence LaBadie, Charles H. West and Francis Grandin. A wise man declares that the first kiss of unselfish love will restore her sight to the blind princess. John Selfish, Duke of Worldly-Wise, and many another, including Lords Gold, Folly and Presumption, put their fortunes to the test, but fail. A poor poet, who loves the princess, kisses her eyes, and she sees. He, hastening away, fearful that his love is really selfish, is waylaid by soldiers of the furious duke, who is about to kill him when the king comes on the scene and rescues the bestower of the miraculous kiss.

Germs and Microbes—Lubin—April 24.—Featuring Davy Don. Colonel Otto, whose one fear is the dread of germs and microbes, refuses to give his son any more money and Harold gets an idea and proceeds to put his plan into execution by sending his father a germ letter, putting insect powder in the letter, which when opened flies over the person reading same. Otto receives the letter, which tells him to send $5,000 to the old cave rock and in return get a serum which is the only thing that will cure him. Harold gets the money and with his friends he proceeds to the cafe for a good time. Otto finds his son having a good time spending his money and takes it back.

The Woman Who Did Not Care—(Three Reels)—Selig—April 24.—Featuring Eugenie Besserer. A full review appears on another page of this issue.

Mr. Jack Goes Into Business—Vitagraph—April 24.—Featuring Frank Daniels. This, Mr. Jack's first attemtp to enter the theatrical field, ends disastrously. He opens a theatrical agency for ladies only. Wifey catches him rehearsing with his patrons and after reading the riot act forces him to close up the office, and against his will.

The Rookie—Vitagraph—April 24.—Featuring Evart Overton, Dorothy Kelly featured. Jim Rooney, a recruit on the police force, is anxious for action. He gets his chance and while fighting with a murderer who tries to escape, remembers his captain's words to "get" the man you are after. He succeeds in fastening handcuffs on him but dies from his efforts.

Celeste—(Two Reels)—Biograph—April 25.—Featuring Vola Smith, Jack Mulhall and Charles Perley. The artist's wife and baby leave for a trip abroad and are shipwrecked. He believes them lost, but the baby is washed up on shore and adopted by a fisherman. Grown to womanhood, she is loved by a tourist who visits the fishing village. Her fisherman lover, in a fit of jealousy, attacks the tourist. Both fall over a cliff and are thought to have been killed. But the tourist later meets the artist, who believes that he identifies the fisher girl as his daughter. Searching for Celeste, they find her eventually as an artist's model.

The Little Samaritan—(Two Reels)—Essanay—April 25.—Featuring Joyce Fair and Thomas Commerford. Joyce, while in the park one day, gives five dollars which she received from her father as a birthday present, to an old man. Her mother reprimands her for doing this, saying that old men steal little girls. Joyce goes the next day to the park to see if this is true and finding her old friend and invites him to come to her home. When he does she secretes him in the attic and he tells her of how years before he had left his little girl with friends and when he returned all trace of her had been lost. Joyce's parents return from the opera and discover her in the attic with the old man. The old man recognizes Mrs. Farley as his long lost daughter, much to the delight of all.

The Spring Chicken—(Three Reels)—Biograph—April 26.—Squab? No! Broiler? No! Those terms were all right when applied to any other Jane under twenty years of age; but She was the only one of her kind—"The Spring Chicken"—and because she was the sweetest, cutest, most distracting of her sex she could wipe her little boots on any male citizen south of Broadway and Forty-second. You know the play—or, if you don't, you ought to. Here it is in three reels of delicious comedy, with Gertrude Bambrick, Tom McEvoy, those Morris boys and a galaxy of pretty girls, all raising Ned.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Rome—Essanay—April 26.—The ancient glory of Rome is exceptionally well pictured in these motion drawings from the pen of this noted sketch artist. The Vatican from all its impressive angles has been caught by the photographic eye of the artist. The ruins of the Coliseum are vividly pictured also in this split reel feature, which shares the thousand feet equally with film of the beauties of western America.

Playthings of the Gods—(Three Reels)—Lubin—April 27.—Featuring Allan Forrest, Ruth Saville and Cecil Van Auker. When Earl Raymond marries Claire Travers, his model, his father disowns him. Earl gives under the strain of privation and Claire goes to Mr. Raymond for help, unknown to her husband. She meets Mrs. Raymond, who gives her some money, and Raymond coming in and finding the money with Claire accuses her of stealing it and has her arrested. Earl comes to his father's in search of his wife and Raymond tells Earl that she came for money and getting it went away. Claire is released and immediately goes to the home of the Raymonds and enters through an open window of a room and gets a glimpse of a man leaving. Earl entering the room finds Raymond dead and Claire holding a bloody paper-cutter in her hand. At the trial Claire proclaims her innocence, stating that she saw a man there and suddenly she sees in the audince the face of the man she saw in the drawing room. He proves to be Carlson, Raymond's secretary, who killed Raymond in self-defense.

The Broken Promise—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—April 28.—Featuring Ann Drew, Geo. Larkin and Joyce Moore. Aleda Shannon goes on the stage and is disowned by her father. Roland Felder, with whom she is in love, is threatened with disinheritance by his father if he marries an actress. Edith, Aleda's sister, who loves Roland, gives him the wrong address to Aleda and as time passes they drift apart. Later Aleda returns home weary of the stage and longing to see Roland. She promises him to quit the stage and marry him, but in order to save her father from ruin she secretly returns to the stage, where Roland's father recognizes her. Roland, when told of this, goes to the theater and Aleda shows him why she is there, and he reclaims her with diviner love. They return home and Roland's father is convinced that he was mistaken about Aleda returning to the stage.

Terry's Tea Party—Vitagraph—April 28.—John T. Kelly, Hughey Mack, Kate Price, Jewell Hunt and Doc Donohue featured. George McManus, the famous newspaper cartoonist, tells of the trouble father has in getting out to his "cronies" in the corner saloon. He finally manages to get there and incidentally makes mother think him a hero. The cast includes John T. Kelly, Hughey Mack, Kate Price, Jewell Hunt, Doc Donohue, and Lawrence Semon.

The Danger Line—(Three Reels)—Essanay—April 29.—Featuring Elizabeth Furbridge and Edward Arnold. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

Love and Bullets—Lubin—April 29.—Louisa Gunn's father insists upon selecting a husband for her himself. He gives her two to choose from, one Hector Timid, a gentle, nervous, absent-minded man, and the other Wiseman, whose only requirement for a wife was that she must be a home body. In an interview with Mr. Timid she developed a disposition so irascible and catty that he would not have married her for words and to Mr. Wiseman she showed inclinations so fast and sporty that he too balked. And finally after much excitement Louise is granted permission to marry the man of her own choice.

Badgered—Selig—April 29.—Featuring Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond. Paul Robertson, newly elected to the legislature, is in love with Vera Jackson. George Prentiss, a grafting political boss and who has been instrumental in causing Robertson's election, schemes to reclaim Empres Valley by diverting water from the Folsom tract, and demands that Robertson support this reclamation measure. Robertson refuses to do this and Prentiss and his henchmen set about to force Robertson into submission. They induce Fanny Stokes to aid them in their attempt to compromise Robertson. They arrange to make it appear that Robertson has met the woman at a hotel and they summon some reporters to be there at a certain time. Prentiss and Colonel Jackson and the reporters appear in the hotel and call Robertson. He appears and with him is Vera. They tell the callers they were secretly married that morning and thus it is that Jackson and Prentiss find that their scheme has been circumvented.

The Man Hunt—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—April 29.—Featuring James Morrison. The theme deals with the Fourteenth Regiment, which leaves for the front at seven next morning, and whose captain has been missing for three days. His friend, the assistant secretary of war, finds him in a drunken condition. He has been tricked and is being detained by enemies, who have discovered his weakness. After many thrilling experiences he is returned to the head of his company and saved from further disgrace by the young secretary.

Mutual Program

The Bookworm's Blessed Blunders—Beauty—April 23.—Featuring Orral Humphrey and Lucille Ward. Ignatius, a confirmed bookworm, is the proprietor of a second-hand book store. One evening en route home and reading, he absently wanders into the house next door. He seats himself at the table and starts to eat. The spinster Cully, thinking that he is courting her, sets out a feed in front of him. He goes on eating and reading until he chances to look up and sees her and it is the beginning of a romance between them. Ignatius is too poor to get married, and as he is counting his savings a customer enters and Ignatius absently slips a dollar bill in the book. Several customers receive the same treatment and the customers discovering the bills hasten back to buy more books. His bookstore does a big business and is soon sold out. He calls on the spinster and tells her his good fortune and later they are married.

The Counterfeit Earl—(Two Reels)—American—April 24.—Featuring Vivian Rich, George Periolat and Alfred Vosburg. Earl Twombley comes to America on a business trip and Mrs. Bronson sees an opportunity to arrange a match between her daughter Lucy, who is in love with Ralph Cullom. The earl employs one of the hotel valets and "The Banjo Eyed Kid," a well-known crook, kidnaps the earl's valet and takes this job himself. At a house party the Kid disguises himself as the Earl and gets into numerous dramatic situations in his endeavors to keep out of sight of the real Earl and continue his thefts. Many complications ensue, but finally the Kid is captured and Mrs. Bronson learns that the Earl is already engaged to marry a girl in London and she willingly gives her consent to the marriage of Ralph and her daughter.

Dad's Darling Daughters—Falstaff—April 24.—With Riley Chamberlain and Walter Hiers. Father's five daughters marry and leave him in a bad fix, for the man is naturally lazy. One by one he visits his various sons-in-law, but they all treat him with an equal amount of contempt. Finally, being leap year, Father is proposed to by a widow who owns a delicatessen store. He gladly accepts and vows to blot out of memory his cruel sons-in-law.

A Man of Honor—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—April 25.—A young athletic man has a love affair with a banker's daughter, but it finally comes out that he is a pugilist in the prize ring. The girl is shocked at first when she learns this, and the young man thinks his romance is shattered. Both the banker and his daughter realize, however, that his motive for entering the ring was to make quick money to support the mother and sister dependent upon him. The banker favors the young man, but puts his honesty to a severe test before he gives his consent to the marriage. Then, after the boxer has refused fifty thousand dollars and a promise of happiness, preferring to be strictly honorable in a bout, he finds that the banker has been testing him. Thus all ends happily.

Willing Wendy to Willie—Falstaff—April 29.—Featuring Francis Keyes and Jay C. Yorke. The rich man of the village hates anybody who gets the best of him and therefore his desire to revenge himself upon Willie who has beaten him in a horse deal, and Wendy, an ambitious widow who has had him sued for breach of promise. He works sweet revenge upon these two by pretending to be dead, and willing his money to them provided they marry. This they do merely for the money. Then the rich man returns and has the laugh on his victims.

The Traitor—Cub—April 28.—Featuring George Ovey. For sufficient reasons Jerry is suspected of being wrong in the head and is taken to a phrenologist. The latter happens to be a military spy who is wanted. He hypnotizes Jerry, makes him change clothes with him and then puts incriminating papers in his pocket. Soon after Jerry's capture as the spy, however, he makes a sensational escape in an aeroplane. He accidentally runs across the spy head examiner and marches him to the police station. Jerry thinks to receive pardon from the police because of his capture, but he is disappointed.

A Broken Genius—(Three Reels)—American—April 29.—A full review appears on another page of this issue.

The Carriage of Death—(Three Reels)—Thanhouser—April 29.—With Marion Swayne, Bert Delaney and Gladys Dore. A desperate bandit with his men kidnaps a wealthy signor's daughter, intending to hold her for ransom. His niece, however, has overheard the plot and has tried to prevent the carriage in which the signor's daughter is riding from passing by the kidnapers, only to be taken captive with the rich girl. The niece has also summoned her peasant lover, and he is the means of extricating the girls from their perilous position and forcing the bandit into the trap of death he has prepared the wealthy girl should she try to escape. The signor arrives in time to receive his daughter safe and sound and reward the brave peasant lovers with one thousand lire.

See America First—No. 32—Gaumont—April 19.—Cripple Creek, Colorado, trade center of the world-famous Cripple Creek gold mining district, is shown in this number of "See America First," together with a trip across the picturesque Continental Divide. On the same reel is:

Comic Cartoons—A little comedy furnished by Harry Palmer's laughable animated cartoons.

The Conquering Hero—Cub—April 21. Featuring George Ovey. The first part of this film shows how Jerry steals away Hank's sweetheart and has all things his way in his love making. The last part deals with the lanky Hank's persecutions of Jerry, who proves to be death-proof after being thrown off a high building and otherwise maltreated. But Jerry comes out on top after all, betraying Hank into the hands of the cops and escaping into the wild stretches of the park.

Ridgley. Kate Kenner, working alone in the gold fields, strikes a lode of gold which will make her rich. While she is at the assayers, however, a band of dishonest miners, who have seen her make the discovery, jump her claim and file it legally before the girl can do so. Determined to get the gold out of which she was cheated, Kate disguises as "Silver Spurs," a notorious bandit of the vicinity, and holds up the stage that is carrying the metal to town. She is outwitted, however, in this attempt. The real bandit comes to her rescue and she in turn does him a favor. Later Kate tries to recover her stolen gold at a saloon but is captured by her lover, the sheriff, who thinks she is "Silver Spurs." The story ends after the bandit steals all the gold himself and leaves a note exonerating Kate.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 30—April 12.—Animated map illustrating the rapid advance made by the American troops; Uncle Sam's Atlantic fleet steams majestically out of the bay in battle line formation, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; clouds of dense smoke fill the atmosphere when six oil tanks explode and destroy a two hundred foot pier and three barges, Bayonne, N. J.; friends bid godspeed to David R. Francis, the newly appointed Ambassador to Russia, as he sails to take up the arduous duties of his post, New York, N. Y.; great Institute of Technology, famous for its scientific training, is now adopting same methods of drilling its students for National Preparedness, Boston, Mass.; fifteen automobile ambulances, destined for early service on the battlefields of Russia, form the gift of the American Hospital Unit of the Red Cross Association, New York, N. An exhibitor in London states that he has attracted a good deal of favorable attention to his house by means of the following verse:

TO-NIGHT'S THE NIGHT.

When you're tired of business worry,
Get your hat and quickly hurry
To that restful spot where all is gay and bright;
Where the wife and kiddies greet you,
Saying softly when they meet you:
"Will you take us to the pictures, dad, to-night?"

Our programme of propriety
Will banish all anxiety,
And all the show is strictly up to date;
So, as wholesome recreation
Is the mind's chief elevation,
Bring them all along at once, and
DON'T BE LATE.

Hickson & Whitener, proprietors of the Hippodrome Theater, Miami, Fla., are preparing plans for the erection of a large, modern theater on Twelfth street, same city. The theater is to be erected especially for a picture house, but a stage is to be installed so that the house could be used for vaudeville or the spoken drama.

The New World Film Trade Mark Typifies a New Day for Exhibitors

For with it comes the first of the New Day Brady-Made pictures.

For the first time exhibitors may obtain pictures not alone under the name of but under the personal supervision of the foremost theatrical genius of the time.

Into these plays are thrown all the stars, all the directors, all the resources that formerly went to make up two big weekly feature releases.

Then comes the great national advertising campaign to still further popularize the pictures of this already nationally known producer.

Never before has a new trade mark symbolized so much of dependable quality backed by years of experience and success.

Don't delay your booking and miss the opportunity to be the exhibitor of your community to tell the public through the display of this trade mark that you can show them the much demanded.

Film Expositions In Harmony

BOARD OF TRADE AND EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE TO CO-OPERATE

ALTHOUGH there will be two motion picture expositions in New York, May 1 to 14, one at the Grand Central Palace and the other at Madison Square Garden, there will not be two dissenting factions. After a controversy, lasting a number of weeks, complete co-operation has been restored between the Motion Picture Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Instead of two big film carnivals held one after the other, each of a week's duration, there will be one carnival lasting for two weeks.

This amicable settlement was reached last Thursday night and was the outcome of an address by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, in behalf of the Board of Trade, to the Brooklyn Exhibitors' League. Through Commodore Blackton the Board of Trade presented a proposition to the League. This was accepted with but one alteration. Lee Ochs, president of the State Branch of the Exhibitors' League, ratified the proposition of the Board of Trade acting for the national body, and sent the following letter to Commodore Blackton:

We have your communications and after due deliberation, we are satisfied that it is the intention of your body to co-operate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and therefore, we accept your proposition with thanks, and we will forthwith recommend that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America give its hearty approval and support to the Exposition held by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., at the Madison Square Garden, May 6 to 14, inclusive.

With the acceptance of your offer, we feel that all misunderstandings are swept away and that henceforth it will be the duty of both of our bodies to co-operate in every possible manner for the best interests of the entire industry.

Yours very truly,
LEE A. OCHS.

By the terms of the new agreement the National Exhibitors' League is to receive 50 per cent of the net profits of the Board of Trade Exposition at Madison Square Garden, and in return is to co-operate with the board in making the affair a success. The exhibitors are to hold their own exposition at the Grand Central Palace, in which the board as a unit and as individuals will take a large part. Moreover, the Exhibitors' League has agreed to turn over half the receipts of the Chicago Exposition, to be held early in July, to the Board of Trade, in return for which the board will co-operate in running the affair.

The Exhibitors' League is rejoicing in its victory and through its president, Lee A. Ochs, made the following statement after the letter of acceptance had been sent to Commodore Blackton:

"The exhibitors have won a sweeping victory for full and complete recognition and are now in a mood for full co-operation in fair return for the Board of Trade's agreement as individuals to unreservedly support the Grand Central Palace show.

"Harmony is our middle name when we are convinced we are being treated fairly. It is not our desire to take advantage of any manufacturer or in fact any other element of the industry. We feel that at the Chicago Exposition the meeting should be one big get together affair where all branches of the industry should unite on a harmonious and effective program of cooperation. This is the time we must get together and work together and the present victory of the exhibitors is regarded by them as a genuine evidence of good faith.

"We feel that the manufacturers will find that a broad, friendly policy of personal and business recognition of the exhibitors will spell better results, continued harmony and real unity on all matters vital to the industry.

"The stand-off policy is a thing of the past if real results are to be obtained.

"We shall ask all exhibitors to attend the Garden Show which follows ours. Our best wishes go with this endorsement."

Commodore Blackton is also rejoicing at the amicable settlement reached, and made the following statement:

I am sincerely gratified at the outcome of the controversy between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the Board of Trade. It never should have existed. There was no occasion for it. A little frank discussion betwen the parties to it would, in my judgment, have avoided it. Now that it is over, I am sincerely pleased.

It means this:

That the motion picture industry has reached such proportions, and the interest in it so tremendously keen, that, in order to give the public the proper conception of its magnitude, standing and artistic possibilities, it will be necessary to secure the two biggest showing places in the United States to hold the exposition, which will bring these factors home to the public.

Therefore, instead of one exposition in Madison Square Garden, there will be two, one in Grand Central Palace. Instead of one week of motion picture festivities and instruction there will be two weeks. The public will, for the first time, be given an opportunity to meet and talk with thousands of motion picture stars.

The combined problems of the two weeks' exposition will thoroughly cover all branches and activities of the motion picture industry. Instead of there being an exposition with only one, or at least two, of the main branches of the industry represented, there can now be no doubt that all branches, including especially that tremendously important branch, the exhibitors, will be represented in this exposition.

In like manner, too, the profits accruing from the great show will be distributed equitably and fairly among all branches of the industry.

It means more than this, however. It means that the Chicago show in July in the big Auditorium in that city will be a real trade exposition equal in kind and character and size to the New York show if it had been held in either the Garden or the Palace, instead of in both.

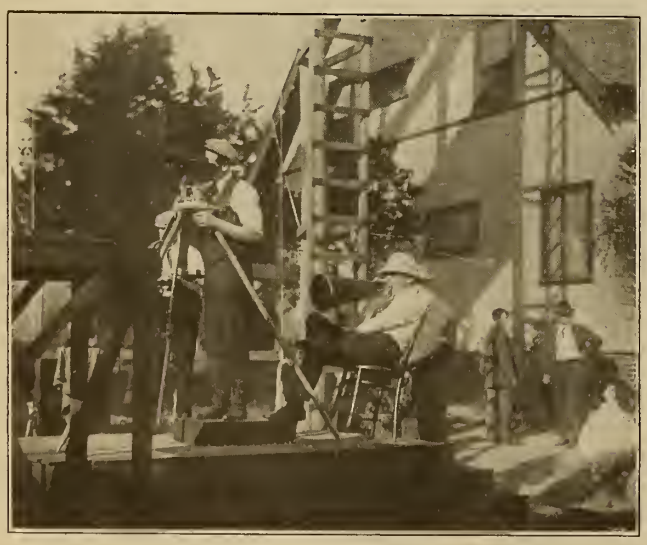
These are the material advantages resulting from the common sense, sane outcome of the misunderstanding. The more important results are the elimination of the suspicion that one branch of the industry is antagonistic to any other.

It will mean, too, the knitting together of all of the factors responsible for the tremendous advances made by the motion picture industry into one homogeneous effective fighting unit, equipped as never before for repelling the enemy from without and for solving its internal problems which are bound to arise from time to time in an industry of the magnitude and importance as has the motion picture of today. This is my firm belief. To do this is the primary purpose for which the Motion Picture Board of Trade was organized.

This purpose has animated the splendid work done by the Board of Trade to date. It will continue to animate our plans and purposes in the future, and it is a source of sincere gratification to know that, all the misunderstandings having been cleared away, we shall in the future have fighting with us, shoulder to shoulder, the great army of exhibitors throughout the country, and with united front we will move against the common enemy—whether that enemy be censorship or any other hostile and unjust legislation—we are bound to win.

The final decision and settlement was influenced by the fact that the profits from the joint exposition here and in Chicago, whether earned by the Board of Trade or the Exhibitors' League, will be used for an identical purpose—to fight political pre-publicity censorship of motion pictures.

All of the big producing companies have given their support to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Among those to be represented by large exhibits are Triangle, Metro, Fox, Pathe, Vitagraph, Rolfe, Popular Plays and Players, Columbia, Mutual, Universal, Famous Players and more than one hundred others.



The "men behind" in the making of a big scene at the Fine Arts corner of Triangle. Director Allan Dwan is handling the crowds through the megaphone and Vic Fleming mans the camera.

It has been decided to donate a large percentage of each day's receipts to some charity and the program has been arranged as follows:

Monday, May 1, Jewish war sufferers; Tuesday—Allies' Red Cross Societies; Wednesday—German Red Cross Societies; Thursday—Orphans' Day; Friday—Surprise day and frolic night, with famous screen stars; Saturday—Motion Picture Actors' Fund.

Arrangements have been completed for the amateur scenario contest. This will be a most unique affair. A scenario will be chosen from those submitted by amateurs and a prize of $100 will be paid to the winner, with royalties on the film. Then a cast composed only of amateurs will be selected and the picture will be filmed in twelve instalments, one being put on in regular studio technique each afternoon and evening, then each night this work will be projected on the screen for the public's amusement.

The cast committee is composed of Billy Quirk, president of the Screen Club; E. T. Lincoln and Joseph W. Smiley. The scenario committee is Jacob Wilk, Hazen Conklin of the New York World, and Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World. There will be a special room at the Grand Central Palace for candidates and the cast will be selected next Monday afternoon, between 2 and 5 o'clock.

Among the artists who will be present will be Francis X. Bushman, De Wolf Hopper, Beverly Bayne, Viola Dana, Marguerite Snow, Mabel Normand, Norma Talmadge, Mae Bush, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Gish, Lillian Gish, William Collier, Theda Bara, Dorothy Bernard, Stuart Holmes, Mary Fuller, King Baggot, Dorothy Phillips, Edna Hunter, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Valentine Grant, Hazel Dawn and Pauline Frederick.

Fox Invades Canada

The Fox Film Corporation has opened a new branch office at St. John, New Brunswick, and from there will cover the maritime provinces of Canada—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. This office is located in the British Bank of North American building and is in charge of C. M. Crawford, as branch manager.

William Fox service already has been inaugurated and at the introduction the Fox stars received an ovation. L. T. Rogers, in charge of the Canadian territory for the Fox organization, was present for the opening.

Within a few weeks additional branch offices will be opened in western Canadian cities, in British Columbia and the middle provinces.

Loew's Program

The features at Loew's New York Theater and Annex last week were: Monday, De Wolf Hopper in "Sunshine Dad" and the fourteenth episode of "The Strange Case of Mary Page"; Tuesday, House Peters in "The Closed Road" and the ninth episode of "The Iron Claw"; Warren Kerrigan in "The Gay Lord's Warning" and the first episode of "The Mysteries of Myra" on Wednesday; Thursday, William H. Thompson and Anna Lehr in "Civilization's Child"; Friday, George Walsh in "Blue Blood and Red"; Saturday, Bruce McRae in "The Chain Invisible"; Sunday, Harold Lockwood in "The Come Back."

Northwestern Convention Booming

EXHIBITORS' COMMITTEES APPOINTED FOR MINNEAPOLIS EXPOSITION

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, which has charge of the motion picture exposition to be held in Minneapolis May 2 to 5 inclusive, is making elaborate plans for the entertainment of its guests during those four days. It is planning to have many notable people of the film world present during this convention.

Henry B. Walthall and Edna Mayo, of the Essanay Company, who are now starring in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," have promised to be present and lead the grand march at the ball on the closing night of the exposition. A number of other Essanay stars will try to attend, and the Selig Company will also be represented by some of its leading players.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America will be represented by W. J. Sweeney, of Chicago, who will have a prominent part in all the affairs of the exposition and convention this year.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be represented by its president, Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, who will speak on the opening day.

A well-known figure in the film industry who is coming to help the exhibitors and their friends celebrate, is Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal Film Company. Fred S. Meyer, manager of the Laemmle-Universal Exchange in Minneapolis, has arranged a schedule of entertainment for Mr. Laemmle that promises to keep that gentleman on the go during his visit.

The committee on entertainment is planning some entertainment feature for every night of the convention.

Following the regular program at the armory the opening night, a cabaret entertainment will be held at the West Hotel.

The midnight entertainment will be given at the New Palace Theater on the second night. Acts from all of the theaters and a number of local stunts will make up this program. The regular Palace orchestra will play. Rubens & Finkelstein, owners of several of the large downtown theaters in Minneapolis, kindly donated the use of the New Palace for the exhibitors' show.

The banquet on the third night will be held at the West Hotel. Thomas Furniss of Duluth, Minn., has been invited to act as toastmaster.

The grand ball on the closing night is to be an elaborate affair. Several of the film companies are planning special stunts for this occasion. Rossiter's regimental band-orchestra will provide the music.

Prominent Minneapolitans, Shriners, film people, newspaper men and the ten Minneapolis Tribune girls will have parts in the official convention movie.

The following committees have been appointed to handle the various details and entertainment features of the convention and exposition:

Tickets.

C. E. Van Duzee, chairman; James A. Keough, F. Thayer, Fred S. Meyer, A. A. Hixon.

Nelson, Independent Film Corporation, Minneapolis; John Elliott, Elliott-Sherman Co., Minneapolis; Mike Conhaim, Supreme Features, Minneapolis.

There is no room for doubt in the minds of those who have come at all in touch with these live wire workers for the exposition but that the big show will be an overwhelming success, and will set a mark which will be difficult for succeeding expositions to out-rival.

ANOTHER FILM MERGER

Reported That Lasky, Famous Players, Fine Arts, Kay Bee and Keystone Are to Combine—No Denials Issued

Although they claim there is no secret about it, no one connected with what promises to be a most interesting combination in the film world cares to be quoted as making a definite statement at this time.

Evidently "silence means consent" in this case as to the proposed merger of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Famous Players Film Company, the Fine Arts, the Kay Bee and the Keystone into one corporation.

The capitalization mentioned was in the neighborhood of $25,000,000. Neither Mr. Lasky nor Mr. Aitken would make any definite statement as to the truth concerning this new organization, saying that the official announcement would probably come from New York.

It is reported that two New York bankers backing the proposition have been inspecting the various plants in California, and have returned to New York with Samuel Goldfish of Lasky and Adolph Zukor of Famous Players.

It is understood that the contract between Morosco-Pallas and Paramount expires next fall, and probably will not be renewed. If this is true it will leave only Famous and Lasky of Paramount to merge with the Triangle. Mr. Lasky is quoted as saying both Famous and Lasky would retain their present well-known trademarks.

EXHIBITORS SIGN TRIANGLE

Loew and Proctor Circuits Sign With New York Branch—Latter Will Use Triangle in Eleven Theaters

The Triangle Film Corporation reports that its New York branch has just ended a record-breaking week for the increase of its service in the distribution of the picture features of Griffith, Ince and Sennett. Alfred Weiss, district manager, and S. Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York branch, were the collaborators. Each obtained five additional theaters on circuits which have already tested the drawing powers of Triangle. Weiss got five on the Marcus Loew chain and Eckman gets credit for increasing the Proctor-Triangle theaters to eleven.

Loew will put the new service into his Broadway house, the New York, at Forty-fifth street; also the Eighty-sixth street, Circle and Murray Hill theaters; the Lexington Avenue, New Rochelle; and the Globe in Boston. Proctor, who has been using Triangle at the Fifth Avenue, Twenty-third street and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street theaters in New York, and in his houses in Plainfield and Elizabeth, N. J., adds two theaters in Troy, the New and the Griswold, the Leland in Albany and the Proctors of Mt. Vernon and Yonkers.

Fox, Keith and Poli have been using Triangle for several months. Mr. Eckman is now serving 300 theaters from the New York exchange, and plans a great spring drive that will increase this number to half a thousand at least.

Signal to Film "Judith"

Director General J. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film Corporation, has just closed negotiations with Alice McGowan for the film rights to her popular novel, "Judith of the Cumberlands."

Critics regard this story of the "South" as one of the best-fitted pieces of contemporary fiction thus far offered for screen production.

Although the scenario has not yet been prepared, it is understood that Miss Helen Holmes will be cast in the title role, with the direction in charge of J. P. McGowan.

Filming of this story will follow the completion of "Whispering Smith," which is now under way.

Equitable Releases Fife Play

Shannon Fife's newest play, "The Shadow of a Doubt," is to be released shortly by the Equitable Company, featuring Carlyle Blackwell. Wray Physioc directed the picture, which Blackwell declares is the best in which he has appeared thus far with Equitable. It is a story with an entirely new twist, and the fact that 12,000 feet were used in producing the picture is ample proof that it possesses plenty of meat.

Many Kleine Changes

Preparations for the handling of the big Billie Burke serial were responsible for a number of important changes in George Kleine's marketing organization last week.

W. C. Condell, formerly a traveling salesman out of the Kansas City office, was promoted to the management of the Dallas, Texas, office, vice E. J. Moskowitz.

New York's Rialto Opens

PREMIERE OF AMERICA'S FINEST PHOTOPLAY THEATER

ON FRIDAY, April 21, a new electric sign elbowed its way into public interest on Broadway. Just above the door of a brand new theater in Times Square a swirling ball of light whirled skyrockets of color towards the roof which they neatly evaded by a graceful curve and dropped the letters R-I-A-L-T-O.

It was the theater's formal opening and the crowd hovering between the lobby and the street indicated that others than the invited knew that S. L. Rothapfel was making more motion picture history. The Rialto has taken a long time to get on its feet. More than one who saw the mass of rock out of which its foundation is hewed had more hope than confidence that it would eventually get there. And now that it has, nothing short of an earthquake could jar this structure which has consumed more time in erection than many towns.

The house is the property of the Rialto Theater Corporation, which in turn owes its birth to Crawford Livingston, Felix Kahn and S. L. Rothapfel. The latter's official title in the corporation is vice-president and managing director. His principal duty is being the soul of the theater. He is a familiar personage to MOTOGRAPHY readers through his "First Aid to Theater Men."

One of the Rialto's interior vistas.

The beautiful stageless stage and the Rialto's symphony orchestra.

None of you exhibitors are too far from Broadway to be interested in its newest theater. To say that it is beautiful and wonderful would not be original. Everyone will tell you that. Rothapfel no doubt had all the money he needed at his command in fitting up this theater, but that it not what has made it "The Temple of the Motion Picture." Luxurious furnishings cost money, but the Rialto represents more than just that.

Everything in it contributes to either the physical or optical comfort of the patron. Rothapfel renders "service beyond the film." I take a chance on hearing from a certain releasing concern on a charge of theft, for that phrase is their slogan, but it is the one handy line which describes Roxie's method of entertainment. The picture itself is important. It is what the people come to the theater to see, but there are other things which in the Rialto are treated with equal respect. The music and the efficient politeness of the attendants are most noticeable of these; other details, such as surroundings, seats, programs, lounging rooms and tasteful decorations, are in perfect accord with the more prominent features of the house and leave with one the pleasing impression of having been in a theater without discord.

In the Rialto Rothapfel has joined the best of the past with a little of the future. Where the stage would ordinarily be located there is a permanent decoration in the form of a colonade. Its marble stairs afford an effective spot for soloists, while one panel of the colonade contains the screen. Concealed about here somewhere is the mechanism of the largest organ ever installed in a theater.

Instead of confining his lighting effects to the proscenium arch, Rothapfel has carried them into the audience. Most any color effect may be obtained from the light combinations which, due to the wonderful installation and its large number of dimming units, blend so gradually as to be almost unnoticeable.

For the opening better pictures than "The Good Bad Man" and "The Other Man," could scarcely be chosen. The former features Douglas Fairbanks in a western play that even westerners should take to. Fairbanks dispenses fun and thrills with equal success, and falls in love with demure Bessie Love in a way to satisfy the most particular romance critics. It is said that once during the picture Fairbanks was seen to touch a stirrup in mounting his horse, but this is popularly contradicted. His particular pleasure is to leave the ground on a run and land in the saddle out of the blue sky. Roscoe Arbuckle got the final laugh and applause in "The Other Man."

The Rialto is its own best recommendation and advertising medium. The theater is one which makes people feel glad that they have come, and look forward to the change of program for another visit. In addition to the multiple-reel pictures, an overture, the Rialto Topical Digest, a travel picture and several solos held places on the program.

Among those who were present at the opening were:

CLEVELAND HOUSES TO CLOSE?

Northeastern Ohio Exhibitors' League Discusses Plans for Photoplay Famine in July and August to Freshen Picture Interest

It is possible that Cleveland will be a city without motion pictures for a month this summer, according to plans of the executive board of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The board drafted a plan last week to have all motion picture theaters there closed from July 11 to August 7. It will now be submitted to individual exhibitors for approval.

According to C. A. Megown, special representative of the League, the closing is expected to stimulate interest in motion pictures on the theory that the public, temporarily deprived of picture theaters, will display increased interest when the picture houses reopen.

Chain of Triangle Houses

With the public opening of the new Rialto theater in New York by S. L. Rothapfel, the Triangle Film Corporation now points to twelve theaters along Broadway which use Griffith-Ince-Sennett picture plays either exclusively or on their big feature nights.

Proctor and Marcus Loew have recently increased the number of houses on their circuits using Triangle to include the Fifth Avenue, New York and Circle theaters. The Knickerbocker, Eighty-first Street, Schuyler, Riverside, Broadway Photoplay, Nemo, Claremont and Audubon have been showing this service for several months.

All these houses are in the territory bounded by Twenty-eighth street on the south and 167th street on the north. Twelve theaters in this single thoroughfare within a distance of approximately seven miles has inspired the slogan: "There is a Triangle theater near you." This concise statement now appears in all display advertising placed by Triangle in its widespread newspaper campaign.

The view from any angle of the Rialto auditorium is impressive.

International Presents New Ideas

OFFERS OUT-OF-THE-ORDINARY RELEASES

AN innovation in plot and theme has been introduced in "The Mysteries of Myra," one of the first releases of the International Film Service, Inc.

From the main title of Myra to the end of the second episode startling psychic revelations are presented with such rapidity that the layman will be stricken with awe.

Hereward Carrington and Charles W. Goddard collaborated in the writing of the play. Carrington is undoubtedly one of the greatest living exponents of psychic phenomena. But Leo and Theo Wharton, producers and directors of this feature series, are not far behind him. It has been stated that the Whartons spent six months making a study of mental suggestion and thought transmission. A special showing of this film was given and 1,487 exhibitors, trade press reviewers and newspaper men attended. The verdict of all was that "The Mysteries of Myra" was the most revolutionary step ever made in serial production.

J. K. Burger, manager International Exchanges.

"The Exploits of Elaine" was the first serial which had a scientific appeal and its success led to the making of this second scientific series.

"The Mysteries of Myra" is evoking a repetition of this former interest because it has struck a scientific note hitherto untouched. The basic theme of this splendid continuous feature is the science of psychology and psychics. A more perfect example of science possibilities cannot be found. This different and yet absorbingly interesting subject has been handled in such a way as to make it a real contribution to the motion picture art.

Without the semblance of a doubt, the psychic investigator in "The Mysteries of Myra" will equal, if not surpass, any scientific detective heretofore appearing.

In this play the motif throughout is such that much depends upon methods of intuitive expression. The star must be capable of portraying the emotions of one subject to the compelling influences of a superior will. She must have grace, poise and a personality which will actually reach out from the screen, take possession of the people and make them instinctively and irresistibly respond to each impulse and thrill with every emotion which the star experiences.

This requires more than screen technique, more than acting, it requires real mental expression.

A few people possess this subtle power, but the selection is indeed a question for the scientist and psychologist to decide. Consequently Hereward Carrington, the man who wrote the original story, was called upon. Mr. Carrington's position in his field is well defined. He has written extensively on the subject of psychology and psychics. As an investigator, he won fame by his exposure of Palladino.

Mr. Carrington used various psychological tests upon the various candidates and finally selected Miss Jean Sothern.

In addition to her extraordinary mental powers, Miss Sothern's past work proved her qualifications to assume this task. She will be remembered as the little blind girl in the screen version of "The Two Orphans." In this picture her work rivalled that of her co-star, the now famous Theda Bara. Miss Sothern gave up her stage career, where she was beginning to make a distinct impression, realizing the greater opportunities which lay before her in motion pictures.

Thrilling War Pictures Released

With the British troops in France; with the French in France; eight months with the Serbians before and during the Teuton drive; with the Italians in the Isonzo Valley; photographing the Greek Army returning from Salonica; official photographer with the French and British at Salonica; are some of the thrilling experiences of Ariel L. Varges, of the International Film Service, Inc., whose startling motion pictures of Zeppelin and aeroplane raids upon Salonica are being released together with other striking pictures made with the Allied armies at the Balkan base.

Mr. Varges was allowed unusual liberty in photographing these war pictures and every effort was made to help him in securing the most thrilling pictures possible. He was given passes to the front freely, and consequently he was enabled to secure some very unusual and intensely interesting pictures.

J. K. Burger, the Hearst exchange manager, is very well pleased with the enthusiastic reception given the initial International releases, "The Mysteries of Myra" and "Has It Ever Happened to You?" That these releases were highly appreciated is demonstrated by the fact that out of 1,487 witnessing the films 703 contracts were actually closed. Commenting on this Mr. Burger says:

"All of which only proves that we have correctly felt the pulse of the public. How? Through our newspapers, authors, editors, dramatists, and cartoonists, who are the best in the country. It means that twenty million people daily, reading the Hearst newspapers, and other publications, can at last see what they read, visualized on the screen. We are presenting drama and comedy, which is interesting, constructive, and worthy of public review. We are catering to a large percentage of the public through our newspapers today, and our highest ambition is to do even more constructive work through moving pictures."

Victor Moore, comedian of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will appear as a clown in his next photoplay on the Paramount program.

EXHIBITORS MEET

Discuss Northwestern Motion Picture Exposition and Exhibitors' Convention to Be Held at Twin Cities in May

By far the most spirited and enthusiastic meeting ever held there was the session of motion picture exhibitors of the Twin Cities which met in the ball room of the West Hotel in Minneapolis. James Gilosky, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, presided. Mr. Gilosky emphasized the importance of the motion picture industry and urged the exhibitors to co-operate in any movement tending to bring the public into closer touch with it.

The coming convention at Minneapolis in May was discussed and many plans laid to make it the biggest and most notable ever held. All promised their heartiest co-operation to make this exposition a success. The Minneapolis exhibitors are planning to hold another meeting at the West Hotel to discuss further the plans for the exposition.

The speakers at the meeting were James E. Keough, D. C. McClellan, Dave Rodgers, Treasurer Van Duzee, W. A. Steffes, Harry Green, Henry P. Greene, Thomas Hamlin, publisher of Amusements; J. B. Reisman, Charlie Ellsworth and others.

President Gilosky invited the Minneapolis exhibitors to meet in St. Paul with the exhibitors of that city and a number attended this session in the afternoon.

I. B. Crissman, representing the National Carbon Company of Cleveland, was present at the meeting, and he is again congratulating himself on being the first to sign a contract for a big display at the May exposition. Mr. Crissman says his company is planning to make an elaborate display. Our valued contemporary, Amusements, publishes a warning to all exhibitors in the northwest against a new concern which it is rumored is going to locate in the Twin Cities and peddle films at fifty cents a reel.

It is said this concern bought a few carloads of film, which has gone the rounds of practically every picture house in the country, and changed the titles and sub-titles so that the exhibitor would not know he had played the subject before, and is offering them at this bargain price. If this is done it is quite possible that there may be some exhibitors who may not think enough of their regular patrons and proceed to book this "junk" at such alluring prices. The name of the concern which will attempt to create chaos in the northwest is not positively known, but it is known that any concern which attempts to rent film at such a price must have some sort of nigger in the woodpile.

The Friedman Film Corporation, successor to the Western Kriterion Film Company of Minneapolis, will move into its new quarters at 300-302 Film Exchange building, 16-18 North street, Minneapolis, the first of May, and will be at home at that time to all the exhibitors and their friends who expect to attend the convention.

The Kimball & Cobb Film Manufacturing Company, Minneapolis has been chosen as the official moving picture photographers for the convention. This company will make 2,000 feet of film during the exposition, and the two-reel picture, the name of which will be announced later, will be offered to the exhibitors of the Northwest for bookings immediately after the convention.

A studio will be erected at the armory, and the Kimball & Cobb cameramen will make pictures there afternoons and nights throughout the convention. Scenes for the two-reeler will be taken at the armory and about the city.

Alice Rinaldo with Horsley

Alice Rinaldo, who was engaged by the David Horsley company to appear only in one picture, "The Love Liar," portrayed the characters in that play in such a forceful and striking manner that Mr. Horsley has retained her as a member of his company and Miss Rinaldo will take one of the leading roles, that of the worldly woman of the vampire type, in the new Crane Wilbur release, "The Conscience of John David."

Detroit Exhibitors Elect President

A. J. Kleist of Pontiac has been elected to the office of president of the Detroit Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Kleist was appointed by the league to fill the place left vacant by the resignation of Herman Speyer, who, having disposed of the ownership of the Eagle theater, can no longer claim membership in the Exhibitors' organization.

Big Four Releases Eight Reeler

FOUR OTHER LARGE PRODUCTIONS ON FIRE

WITH "The Battle Cry of Peace" still playing to crowded houses; "The Ne'er-Do-Well" creating a monumental success; and "Salvation Joan" establishing box office records, the V. L. S. E. this week releases another big eight-reel feature, "God's Country and the Woman," presented by the Vitagraph Company.

The next big special production which will be released May 15, is the Essanay film version of "Sherlock Holmes," in seven reels, with William Gillette in the part which he has made famous on the stage.

Work on "The Crisis," an adaptation of Winston Churchill's novel, is proceeding rapidly at the Selig studios. The same cast which appears in "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will be seen in this play.

A powerful and original drama entitled, "The Combat," is fast assuming shape under the hands of Director Ralph Ince. This picture is scheduled for nine reels, and is expected to prove a greater sensation than any of the big Vitagraph productions yet exploited. The settings are of the most elaborate nature, and a thoroughly unique and thrilling plot maintains its interest from start to finish.

The Lubin Company is rounding out its extensive preparations for the filming of the three Rex Beach novels, "The Barrier," "The Iron Trail," and "The Silver Horde." All of Mr. Beach's stories are noted for their rapid action and wealth of stirring incidents, and those mentioned above are particularly well suited for camera purposes.

These notable additions to the V. L. S. E. program are "special" only in their exceptional drawing qualities. They all will be offered in strict accordance with the Big Four's popular policy of basing the rental price of every picture on its box office value.

During the past week, there was distributed by the Board of Directors of the V. L. S. E. to its employees, twenty per cent of the net profits of that organization, in accordance with the plan established almost at the inception of the Big Four, for the purpose of stimulating the maximum interest in the company's service to its exhibitors. This is the third time within a period of nine months, that such a division has been made.

The efficiency developed by the Big Four sales and office forces in their labors for the company's customers, has more than proven the wisdom of the plan, the V. L. S. E. directors believe. It has demonstrated that when an employee realizes that his individual exertions in behalf of his employers bring about a corresponding increase in his own earnings, he will spare no time or pains to achieve results.

The prospect of substantial monetary recognition depending upon the showing each makes in his territory, combined with the knowledge that he is actually working for his own interests, tends to stimulate the average employee to a degree far beyond the usual.

All the employees of the twenty-three V. L. S. E. exchanges throughout the country who have been with the organization for a period of three months, shared in the recent disbursement.

J. Karnes, of the Lyric Theater, Blacksburg, Va., proved himself equal to an emergency in the handling of "The Battle Cry of Peace" exhibition. His patrons demanded this Vitagraph film but Mr. Kearn could not afford to show it at his popular prices. He therefore made a canvass of his patrons and secured the names of 150 who would pay one dollar a piece to see the film. This made the showing possible but he also desired appropriate music. A second canvass resulted in 150 more who were willing to sign for one dollar apiece so the exhibit was made in proper shape.

Reports from the V. L. S. E. exchanges in Canada indicate that these two features, "The Christian" and "The Ne'er-Do-Well," recently released, are finding a ready market in that country. The success in Canada of these two productions furnishes clear evidence that the clean photoplay, alive with action, and presenting stories replete with human interest, is the best drawing magnet from the box office standpoint.

V.L.S.E. Pictures Outdraw Burlesque

Russell B. Jones, manager of the Jackson Theater, Kirkland, Washington, is a type of the American showman who never fails to adapt himself to popular taste. Kirkland is a town of the boom description, which came into being suddenly, languished for a period, and then revived. Mr. Jones decided that burlesque and melodrama, such as had been the usual offering at the Jackson, would not pay, and turned the place into a moving picture house, exhibiting high-class screen attractions.

It was with the Selig-V. L. S. E. feature, "The Rosary," that Mr. Jones started his picture campaign. It played for a week to packed houses.

Irwin Visits V.L.S.E. Exchanges

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., has just returned to New York, following a series of "flying trips" to the Big Four branch offices, in the middle west and eastern territory. These included visits to Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges.

The tour was for the purpose of getting in touch personally with conditions in each territory, and to meet the many new recruits to the Big Four organization, which its constant expansion during the past few months has made necessary. The trip will be supplemented by visits to other offices, until the V. L. S. E.'s complete circuit has been completed.

Mr. Irwin met a number of prominent exhibitors during his tour, and at Minneapolis a gathering composed of leading members of the Northwestern Exhibitor's League called upon him, and complimented him upon the steady success attained by his company's policies during the past few months.

In every section, the Big Four's general manager found things humming at top speed, with exhibitors generally enthusiastic in their advocacy of the V. L. S. E. program and principles.

Essanay-Chaplin "Carmen" Breaks Records

When announcement was made of Charley Chaplin's debut as star of a four-reel burlesque of "Carmen," under the Essanay-V. L. S. E. banner, it was generally felt and predicted that the feature would prove a tremendous success. Several months having elapsed since Chaplin had been seen in a new picture, his legion admirers were naturally expected to gather in full force to welcome the eccentric comedian extraordinary of the screen world.

Yet even the most optimistic believer in the drawing power of a Chaplin film would not have ventured to prophesy the utterly unprecedented reception which was given the "Carmen" fantasy at the Broadway Theater last week. At the opening performance Sunday it was not merely a packed house that greeted the flitting form of the inimitable Charlie—it was a mad mob of enthusiasts tightly jammed together, with lines extending out into the street and down Broadway for several blocks. And the same crowds continued night after night.

VOGUE ADD BIG GUNS

Ben Terpin, "Big Ed" Sedgwick and Number of Other Notable Funsters Join the Humor Works of Vogue Films, Inc.

Ben Terpin, formerly with the Essanay, and who has appeared in a number of "Chaplin" pictures, has been signed up by Vogue Films, Inc., to add his comic ability to the already formidable forces of this organization. Mr. Terpin will appear in forthcoming Vogue comedies under the direction of Jack Dillon—along with Paddy McQuire, Rena Rogers, Arthur Moon and Louise Owen.

"Big Ed" Sedgwick, formerly of Universal and Lubin, has also joined the Vogue forces, and will lend his "bulk of fun" to the Vogue comedy production, under Jack Dillon's direction. Sedgwick will be remembered by picture fans as the fat boy who played in comedies with Vic Potel. Sedgwick is a graduate of the legitimate stage, having played several years in vaudeville with his sisters, Eileen and Josie.

Paddy McQuire is making a big hit as "Bungling Bill"—and the series is growing into strong popularity. The stories from the versatile, original mind of Robert A. Dillon are giving the public a new kind of comedies under the Vogue brand, and the assemblage of well-known comedians, far-famed for their laugh making abilities, assure Vogue Films, Inc. of a long life and a prosperous one.

Rube Miller, directing the second Vogue Company, with Madge Kirby, Arthur Tavares and Alice Neice in the principal roles, has been laid up with a case of bloodpoisoning resulting from a wound received in his foot while producing "Out for the Count," a Vogue comedy to be released May 2. Production of his comedies has suffered only a slight delay on account of his inability, as the industrious Rube has been wheeled about the stage in a wheel-chair. continuing the production of his laugh-makers.

EXHIBITORS REORGANIZE

San Francisco League Holds Meeting and Again Takes Over Quarters. Pay-in-Advance Plan and Other Matters Considered

Formal reorganization has been effected by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco and the offices formerly occupied by the body in the Mechanics' Bank Building will again be taken over. The organization had been temporarily ineffective following the national convention held here last summer, but now that many matters of importance have come up the need of co-operation has been felt and the activities of the league have been resumed.

Among the problems of material importance now under consideration is the pay-in-advance plan. The fight against the new censorship ordinance proposed here is being waged actively also.

It is planned to admit to membership in the new organization any exhibitors in the San Francisco territory instead of confining them to the city proper, as in the past. The former by-laws have been adopted with but slight changes, and affiliation will be maintained with the national organization.

On either side, glimpses into the striking "Mysteries of Myra," Wharton-International Film Service. In the center, Essanay's "Once a Thief."

Variety Marks New Vitagraphs

MANY UNUSUAL DRAMAS OFFERED

"GOD'S Country and the Woman," from the pen of James Oliver, is one of the photoplays of unusual excellence offered by the Vitagraph Company on its program for the week of April 24.

This play was filmed in California under the supervision of Rollin S. Sturgeon, and the beautiful views of the snowy expanses of woodlands, with dog teams rushing to and fro, help to make this a masterpiece. William Duncan as Philip Weyman, Nell Shipman as Josephine and George Holt as Arnold Lang have strong parts.

The story tells of the strict standard of morality in the North. Her mother having fallen into the clutches of Arnold Lang, a disreputable beast, during her father's absence, Josephine Adare steps bravely forward and shoulders the responsibility of claiming the child which is born as her own.

Harry I. Morey, Vitagraph.

Philip Weyman comes to the North to spend a year trapping and shooting, and falls in love with Josephine. In order to protect her own honor, she gets him to pose as her husband and the father of the child. He follows her and protects her, unaware of the true cause of her great sorrow, and knowing only that in helping her he is subjecting himself to great danger. The villain, who had betrayed her, kidnaps Josephine, and Philip pursues them. In the pitched battle which follows, the worthless scoundrel is slain by Josephine's faithful wolf hounds.

"Mr. Jack Hires a Stenographer," another of the Escapades of Mr. Jack, is another offering on this program which shows up to excellent advantage. An exceedingly funny and interesting story is woven around Mr. Jack engaging a "pippin" of a stenographer, getting himself into and out of a lot of trouble, and finally being forced by his better half to discharge the beauty. Alice Washburn and Betty Howe render valuable assistance to Frank Daniels, as Mr. Jack, in the enactment of this picture.

Another one-reel comedy released on the General Film program is "Jane's Husband," which depicts the troubles of a homely spinster in securing a husband. She finally succeeds in cornering a helpless tramp only to find him already married. Edith Storey is the principal funmaker under the direction of George D. Baker.

"Some Chicken," another single part comedy listed for Friday, was enacted by the western division of Vitagraphers, under the supervision of Dave Smith. A crowing rooster starts a feud between two pairs of lovers, but all ends happily when the offender is devoured at the wedding breakfast of the two couples. Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell play the leading parts and are supported by Anne Schaefer and Otto Lederer.

"The Resurrection of Hollis" is the title of the Broadway Star Feature for the week, which is scheduled for release on May 6. This is a three-part picture, written by George Strayer Maxwell and produced by Harry Davenport. The cast includes Walter McGrail, Belle Bruce and Arthur Cozine.

From the pen of Cyrus Townsend Brady comes another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature announced for release May 8, entitled "Britton of the Seventh." This feature was filmed along the border line and the famous Seventh and Fourteenth Cavalries, now engaged in the man hunt in the wilds of Mexico, are seen in action. "Custer's Last Stand" is vividly pictured with regular United States troops and a number of Indians that were brought from the reservations in Oklahoma especially for this picture. The cast includes Charles Kent, Bobby Connelly, Eulalie Jensen, Harry Northrup and Ned Finley as General Custer.

The Vitagraph releases for the week of April 17 to 25 were "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," a five-part rollicking comedy of the Blue Ribbon Brand, featuring Ernest Truex and Dorothy Kelly. Mr. Truex and Miss Kelly are ably supported by John T. Kelly, Albert Roccardi, William R. Dunn and Etienne Girardot.

Frank Daniels in "Mr. Jack's Artistic Sense," another adventure of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," is listed on the V. L. S. E. program for April 17. Rose Tapley is seen as Daniel's wife and Arthur Cozine plays the part of the son. C. J. Williams supervised the filming of this photoplay.

April 17 is also the day on which "Life and Training in the U. S. N.," will be ready for exhibition. It is a single reel subject depicting the life of Uncle Sam's "jack tars," from the recruit at the Newport training school to the highest officials in navy matters. Scenes at Annapolis and other well-known points are shown. It was taken by special permission and in cooperation with the United States Navy.

"His Lucky Day" is the title of the one-part comedy on April 21, in which Freddy gets arrested, but manages to escape and succeeds in locking up the constable. Both compromise and agree to be good friends when they earn a reward for an escaped lunatic and split "fifty-fifty." William Dangman plays the part of Freddy and is supported by William Lytell, Jr., George O'Donnell, Harry Mayor, Lucille Crane and Florence Natol. It was written by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

"A Caliph of the New Bagdad," a three-part Broadway star feature by William Addison Lathrop, on the General Film Program for Saturday, April 22, presents Van Dyke Brooke, Leah Baird, Templar Saxe, Edward Elkas, Emmanuel A. Turner, Harry Fisher and Charles Edwards, is a picture telling of a romance in a boarding house and gives us an insight into the ways of the people of the "painted world." Besides playing an important part in the production, Van Dyke Brooke also produced the photoplay.

"The Law Decides," is the title of a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, scheduled for release May 1. This is a seven-reeler and is said to have all the dramatic situations common to its theme, love, marriage, divorce and distribution of a large estate. This play was both written and directed by Marguerite Bertsch in collaboration with Director William P. S. Earle. In the cast are Harry T. Morey, Dorothy Kelly, Donald Hall, Bobby Connelly, Louise Beaudet and Adele Kelly.

The Vitagraph Baseball Team, with no change in the line-up, are again ready for the 1916 campaign and issue a challenge to any of the producing companies who dispute their claim to the title. The Vitagraphers are ready to arrange their schedule and would like to hear from the other producing concerns regarding a game or a series of games.

Fifty students of the mechanical engineering department of the Case School of Applied Science in Cleveland, Ohio, headed by their professor, F. H. Vose, visited the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. A representative of the company guided the party through the plant and explained the process of picture making. The class is on a tour of all the important manufacturers of Greater New York.

The Hearst-Vitagraph camera is the lensograph of all things great, big and wonderful that are going on everywhere on earth. The Hearst-Vitagraph reel No. 26, just released, pictures the explosion of an arsenal at Fort De La Briche, France; a fire which swept through Paris, Tex., leaving thousands homeless; the work of Chicago High School Pupils; troops of the Allies rushing work on defenses in Salonika; United States cavalry leaving Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., for the Mexican Border; Colonel Fierro and his Caranzista soldiers en route to join the Villa hunt; and the New York and Paris fashion notes.

That the moving picture has won out with the church is substantiated by the fact that Rev. D. D. Irvine, of the Methodist Church, Bay Shore, L. I., presented a "motion picture service" at his church on Sunday, April 16. The Vitagraph have loaned two scenic films for the occasion. "Niagara in Winter Dress" and "Beautiful California"; and a pictorial Bible story entitled, "The Life of Daniel," together with a picturization of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Film Funeral Almost a Real One

Edward Jose's "most embarrassing moment" occurred while he was producing Pathe's "The Iron Claw." This production calls for an elaborate staging of a funeral and Mr. Jose had taken his company, including Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis on Long Island to find a suitable location. His search led to a magnificent private estate and his request to use the grounds was met by the information that the owner was in the south and would not return for a week, but the caretaker was persuaded to allow the use of the grounds.

As the long procession of carriages, headed by the hearse, was winding down the driveway it blocked the progress of a big touring car which turned rapidly into the grounds. An elderly man jumped out, his eyes as big as saucers.

"What in —— is this?" he demanded.

The situation was explained to him. "Well," said the man, "I don't know that my word counts for anything here because I'm only the owner!"

Universal has now captured in films the climbing of the famous "Jungfrau," the highest mountain peak in Switzerland. Frederick Burlingham, a notable climber, made the pictures.

This familiar scene from Vitagraph's "Mr. Jack Hires a Stenographer," cannot fail to thrum the chord of human appeal.

The Expositions Promise to Co-operate

WE NOTE with considerable pleasure that harmony has come suddenly out of discord in the exposition situation. A few words from man to man, and competition has been changed to co-operation. It would be easy, and almost excusable, to point a moral here that would apply to the improvement of humanity in general. We are content, however, to confine our sense of satisfaction to the immediate event.

We said last week we were glad there are to be two expositions. There seems to be no reason for changing that attitude. All the reasons we gave then for the advantage of a double-header exposition are strengthened now by the fact that the big shows will help, and not hinder, each other.

The amicable correspondence exchanged by leaders in the two exposition movements pertains solely to those passing events. We have no doubt, however, that its spirit will continue to rule the relations of the organizations, and that so long as all branches of our industry may not be wholly and sufficiently embraced in one association, the divisions may be merely technical, and not temperamental.

The functions of an exhibitors' organization cannot be successfully undertaken by an association of manufacturers or distributors, nor can the exhibitors hope to make their associations broad enough to serve the producing end of the trade as it demands. Therefore there must be different societies for the different parts of the industry, and since they are different, in membership, function and operation, there is no reason why they should interfere. Each has its own work, yet each can benefit by the co-operation and advice of the other. Each is entitled to the other's respect, confidence and help. That such an ideal condition will follow the mutual interchanges of the double exposition in New York next week is our hope and belief.

The Distributor and the Complete Show

SO LONG as there shall be competition in the making of motion picture programs—and we hope that will be always—that program which is most complete, which supplies all the elements of a well-balanced show all the time, will be the surest of survival.

The film distributing house is a dangerous place to encourage specialization. It might be reasoned that the people love comedy, and hence a distributor of comedies exclusively would always be assured of a place in the sun. But the people do not want comedy exclusively. They want it with their drama. They want a certain percentage of their sum total of entertainment to be comic, and no more. It would be entirely possible for one distributing company to supply all the comedy, and another all the drama, and so on. This is a free country, at least for the last few years, and the exhibitor who thinks his service is deficient in comedy can split the service between two or more distributors. For instance, he can, and does, take a dramatic feature from one house and a comic single reel "filler" from another. That is his privilege; but it is bad for both the feature distributor, who cannot supply the "filler," and for the program distributor, who supplies the "filler" and nothing more. The two distributors are in competition on that exhibitor's screen; they are dividing a service that should go to one or the other. It would go to one if that one could supply all the elements necessary to make the show.

The feature distributor with a constant and consistent supply of single reel fillers has the best appeal for the exhibitor's business today. We do not know that this should be so, but evidently it is so.

And yet, even conceding the feature's hold, the program manufacturer, not the feature maker, is the indispensable factor in the game. The program maker can furnish a complete show; the feature man cannot. The exhibitor can go to the program man and get all he needs in his business. But if he goes first to the feature house, he must go to the program man anyway for a single reel or two.

So the program house is sure of business, such as it is; but it runs the risk of being less than a half loaf share. The feature house never gets all the business, but it frequently gets the biggest end of it. Therefore, the ideal distributing house will not specialize on either features or fillers, but will specialize and concentrate on facilities for supplying everything that may be needed for a complete show.

The manufacturers who supply the component parts of a program, operating through a single distributor, can specialize to their hearts' content. So long as the aggregate of their efforts gives all the variety there is, each may concentrate on his own particular and peculiar talent.

But the distributor who would monopolize the hearts of the exhibitors must aim to leave no room for a possible division of his trade. If some competing distributor takes away a customer now and then by fair competitive methods, all right; that is business. But it should be all or none.

When an exhibitor is forced to go to one distributor for one part of his show and to another distributor for the rest of it, there is too much lost motion and efficiency is low.

This is in no sense a criticism of any existing conditions. It is merely an outline of what appears to us, and to many exhibitors, the ideal provision for film service. Every distributor, we believe, should be prepared to supply the whole show for every exhibitor.

The Mortality of the Films

THE life of the best of photodramas being two years, on the word of Mr. Frohman, Charles E. Whittaker in Harper's Weekly says it is not art; it has no persistence. Of course his logic is inadequate. Art is art, though the painter destroy his canvas as soon as the paint is dry.

We may concede the evanescence of the film. Mr. Frohman was undoubtedly right, with a few exceptions. (The Fly Pest, for instance—it's five years old if it's a day, and we had an inquiry for it last week; but it is not a drama, and scarcely art.) The Birth of a Nation is getting old, by photoplay standards, and no doubt still has far to go before it dies. Maybe it will be immortal; our art has not lived long enough to demonstrate anything but mortality so far.

But Mr. Whittaker and those who agree with him, and possibly Mr. Frohman for that matter, should not forget that the vast majority of new literature dies in infancy also. Of our best sellers among novels the publishers in two years get out a fifty-cent edition and go after the country and hall room trade because the first run business is exhausted.

Only one literary "release" in a hundred thousand becomes immortal. All the rest die in their infancy. The motion picture producers have not yet given to the world fifty thousand photodramas, yet already there are glimmerings of immortality among them.

Of the short stories in literature not one in ten million can claim the right to live even the two years life of the average film story. Yet the film story is, as a rule, a parallel to the magazine short story. And it already outlives its most "artistic" prototype several hundred per cent.

The death rate among films is actually lower than it is among the supposedly more esthetic branches of art.

Play Features Submarines

AMERICAN-MUTUAL RELEASES BIG MYSTERY DRAMA

JUST at this time of an international crisis risen from complications in submarine warfare, a photo-drama dealing in a powerful and vivid manner with under-sea vessels and their mysteries is of keen interest to the public.

Realizing this fact the American company has for some months been engaged in the production of a chaptered photoplay which capitalizes this tremendous wave of interest and provides a uniquely thrilling mystery story. Its title is "The Secret of the Submarine." The real basis of the plot was found in this idea expressed by Thomas A. Edison; that it is possible to construct submarine vessels equipped with fish gill-like structures capable of absorbing direct from the water the oxygen necessary for the life of the crew.

"The Secret of the Submarine" not only works out this theory in mechanical detail, but clusters about it adventures which have never been rivaled for tense interest. The cast features the charming blonde, Juanita Hansen, the capable Thomas Chatterton, the clever character man William Tedmarsh and the captivating Hylda Hollis. Following are some personal things of interest concerning the play and its players:

To see Thomas Chatterton, the "Lieut. Jarvis Hope" in "The Secret of the Submarine" dive from a pier in order to rescue "Hook" Barnacle, no one would believe that it was practically the first time Mr. Chatterton has done "water stuff." The dive was a long one and the actor was weighted by his uniform and shoes, but there was no hesitation when the camera began turning, on the action.

William Tedmarsh, as Satsuma, the Japanese spy in "The Secret of the Submarine," actually took his life in his hands in order to put one of the most intense scenes ever filmed, into the first chapter of the new big feature.

A hard hearted scenario writer called for the actor to make his escape from a sinking submarine, after the conning tower was under water. Tedmarsh took his place in the submarine, the camera was set up in another boat and the signal given.

The submarine settled swiftly and Director Sargent shouted to Tedmarsh to make his escape. There was no movement aboard the submarine. Sargent called again and still there was no response. The submarine was now almost out of sight.

Just as the director and his assistants were beginning to believe an accident imminent, the trap in the almost "down" submarine was thrown quickly open and the head of Tedmarsh appeared. It could not have been timed better with scores of rehearsals. It is evident on the film that the spy actually comes from the submarine, showing beyond all peradventure that there was nothing of the fake order in the filming of the scene.

Character Work Explaincd by Tedmarsh

Perhaps no actor on the screen has made such tremendous strides in his chosen profession in such a brief space of time as has William Tedmarsh.

Mr. Tedmarsh created the role of Quabba, the hunch-back organ grinder in "The Diamond From the Sky," and competent critics declare his work to have marked an important advance in screen characterizations.

"Many persons imagine that make-up so called is an indifferent operation as long as the actor strikes somewhere near the character he is to portray," said Mr. Tedmarsh recently. "The fact is, that the actor playing character parts must do a vast amount of study not only of his character in the story but of the character outside the story. When I was cast to create the role of Quabba, an Italian hunch back, I went down to the Italian section in Los Angeles and remained a week. I mingled with the people I was to portray and watched their habits, their eccentricities, their joys and sorrows.

"I have been afforded unusual opportunities to study the Japanese people, a race I admire very much. There is a certain crafty expression which flits across the Oriental face that is very hard to reflect. I practiced for hours at a time before I could 'get' it and you who see 'The Secret of the Submarine,' may note whether I succeed in my interpretation of the role of Satsuma."

A "Submarine" Thriller

Bound to a post in the cellar of a bomb-maker's house when a bomb tossed within a few feet of her explodes, is one of the thrills recently "enjoyed" by Miss Juanita Hansen, who as Cleo Burke in "The Three good examples of the powerfully striking scenes in the American-Mutual chaptered drama, "The Secret of the Submarine."

Secret of the Submarine," is the object of continual machinations by a group of relentless conspirators.

Miss Hansen proves she is a regular "do or die" heroine, too, for Director Sargent is a fiend for realism and as a result the role of a leading woman in his company is not, by any stretch of the imagination, a "peaches and cream" existence.

When the scenes were being taken showing Miss Hansen, or rather Cleo Burke lured to the home of Stephansky, the bomb-maker, Lamar Johnstone playing the part of Gerald Morton, was very careful in "handling" Miss Hansen.

"Hey," shouted Director Sargent, "what's the idea of this Waldorf greeting? Let's get in on the action—like this."

And he proceeded to show his idea of capturing a dear sweet thing and binding her away in a cellar for future reference. Miss Hansen thereafter, was properly dragged up to a trap door, her limbs bound and then tumbled down stairs with about as much consideration as is ordinarily accorded a bag of coal by luggers working for bread line positions.

But Miss Hansen didn't object, in fact, urged them to do their utmost, and they did. In the scene showing the exploding bomb and the house sent skyward, it is a miracle that she escaped unhurt for the acme of realism is surely reached.

Here's the way William Tedmarsh looks back at himself from his make-up mirror while he is playing Satsuma, the Jap, in the powerful American-Mutual drama, "The Secret of the Submarine."

George Clancy, the "Hook" Barnacle of "The Secret of the Submarine" company, furnished a deal of unintentional humor to the serial cast before he could be persuaded to stage his under-water fight with a shark in the first chapter. Clancy said that he was afraid the shark would not appreciate the important part it played in adding thrills to the picture and might forget to "make believe" when the fight came off.

The rotund character man is rather attached to his right hand, which the shark is supposed to bite off in the struggle and he said that he had no intention of allowing the realism to go too far. But Clancy allowed none of his misgivings to show when the fight actually took place, as he fought the shark to a stand-still until he was "rescued" by Tom Chatterton, in the guise of Lieut. Hope, U. S. N.

NEW NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

Exhibitors, Manufacturers, and Exchange Men to Be Included in Proposed Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce

Although no authorized statement has been issued there is a well founded report to the effect that the next ten days will see the formation of a national organization to be composed of exhibitors, manufacturers, and exchange men to be known as the Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce.

A great deal of interest has been manifested in this project and seven manufacturers and about fifteen exchange men have testified as to their intention to join the new organization.

One man who is vitally interested in the furthering of this new project has personally guaranteed the enrollment of 2,500 exhibitors at an annual fee of $10 as a foundation for the organization.

The purpose of this Chamber of Commerce would be to represent the members in all matters pertaining to the film industry that may arise of a legal, business or other character but there will be a complete avoidance of all personal grievances and an unselfish attention to matters of importance involving those whom it will represent.

Speaking of the matter a prominent film man said:

"This is more than a mere rumor, and while I cannot now be personally quoted, I am willing to say that there is every prospect of its going through. A meeting has been held, attended by several well-known men engaged in the industry from one angle or another, who have expressed their desire to co-operate thoroughly, and who believe that the new organization will have a most salutary effect upon the motion picture business. While no formal action has as yet been taken there is little doubt that the organization will soon be effected."

The project was also discussed at the Brooklyn exhibitors' meeting Thursday night and there was a sentiment in favor of it.

The Friars' Club of New York wanted the old stand-by comedian, Richard Carle, to box a burlesque bout with former champion James Corbett in the "Frolic" performance which the club is to put on in several cities in May. Carle said he would do anything else in the world for the club.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM

What Per Cent of Your Music Is Noise?

By J. M. Dilmar

Jefferson Amusement Co., Philadelphia

As I was a vaudeville and minstrel performer for 26 years, a vaudeville agent in Philadelphia for 10 years, in the motion picture business ever since it began, organizer of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia and also the Exhibitor Booking Offices, I naturally boost with all my might anything that will tend to make the business bigger, better and of more value to the world.

The total of my ideas in regard to how to run a successful picture house is to give the public the best, and the best only. Play the best and advertise them strong and you will succeed.

Music should be furnished that is not a good per cent noisc, and noise only. The musical accompaniment has a continual effect upon the audience and it should be according to their ideas and the manager should find out whether or not they like just the kind he gives. I use both the organ and an orchestra, sometimes combining both with really good solo work upon different instruments. It is really a joy to listen to it.

Employees should be not only polite and kind, but should do anything in their power to oblige a patron.

The house should have the right odor,—one of absolute cleanliness. Every part of the building should be clean and attractive. A neat program—not a cheap one plastered with ads—is essential, as is also quiet, restful interior decorations.

Be a Good Merchant

By Will H. Sohm,

Secretary and Manager, Belasco Theater Company, Quincy, Ill.

My humble efforts have been rewarded through my irrevocable determination to be a good merchant, for after all there is little difference between the mercantile and the show business.

The same class of trade is encountered, the same conditions imposed and all efforts made toward the same end.

The showman like the merchant buys merchandise. In the case of the exhibitor, entertainment, education and "service" are so much stock which he markets to the public for a consideration. How well he succeeds depends entirely upon his judgment in selecting his wares and the facilities employed to market them. I have directed amateur, semi-professional theatricals for the past fifteen years and entered the motion picture field as an exhibitor. Throughout this period I have held fast to my contention that a good, clean story, well presented, will satisfy in most cases, at least to the extent of insuring a steady and regular patronage, which to me is eminently more satisfactory than the spasmodic rushes due to immoral or suggestive subjects which ultimately reflect upon the house and all its performances.

I sincerely believe that the amusement seeking public have a large majority in favor of the elevating tendencies of the better kind of pictures, and I'm for that class exclusively.

I take a decided interest and pleasure in working on the problem of pleasing my patrons more and more; my vocabulary does not include the words "good enough." Appreciation is a word spelt in capital letters at my theater, and it permeates the atmosphere in my house. I find it the cheapest and yet the most valuable quality in the make-up of mankind, next to honesty.

I censor my pictures at each change, watch carefully the impression made upon my audience and govern myself accordingly.

I have stabilized my program to the extent that picture patrons have come to realize they need not measure the value of my program by the size of my advertisement appearing in the newspapers nor by a poster plastered front. They feel assured in seeing a good show always. I will admit my competitors likewise show good pictures and doubtless some that will please better sometimes, but I give my patrons the best I can secure—always their money's worth.

My advertising is regular and clean. I tell the truth about my attractions and rest in the thought that if the public read the ads they make no mistake in visiting the Belasco.

I co-operate with the exchangeman and meet my obligations promptly, rather one day early than one day late. I frequently ask and obtain help from these gentlemen incident to advertising. My associations with the exchangemen are most pleasant. I find them endowed with a generous supply of the milk of human kindness.

I could continue for sometime longer listing other ideas, but some readers may say "that chap isn't up against the proposition that we are."

That may be true. I don't know it all by any means, and I am learning every day. I might add, however, concerning competition, that I am doing business in a city of 38,000 souls and have eight motion picture theaters, one vaudeville and the legitimate house, also using pictures, to contend with.

The biggest set of words that I know of in my mental makeup governing my operation are: Cleanliness throughout, courtesy, cheerfulness, regular show hours, no speeded programs, refinement, high class music. And the balance rests in the hands of the gods.

New York Strand Makes News Films

The Strand Theater of New York is to maintain what it calls the "Strand Daily News Service," a departure in motion picture exploitation which promises to launch a new era in the showing of illustrated news on the screen. Events of interest which occur during the day will be photographed by the Strand cameraman and the pictures will be shown the afternoon following at the Strand.

A temporary arrangement has been made to carry the camera man around the city, pending the completion of the Strand Cameracar, a motor car especially equipped with a mounted moving picture machine.

The new car will be painted white, trimmed with red and properly lettered so as to be identified at a glance. Aside from the driver and the camera operator the cameracar will carry a representative of the Strand who will act as a sort of city editor and will direct the taking of the daily news.

While not engaged in photographing fires, accidents, parades or other important events in the day's happenings, the cameracar will be scouting around the city hunting for scenes characteristic of the metropolis and its activities.

Beginning its third year at the Strand, the management offers for the coming week Marguerite Clark in "Molly Make-Believe," a film adaptation of the stories written by Eleanore Hallowel Abbott. The rest of the program consists of a comedy, the Paramount novelty, the Pictograph and the Strand Topical Review. The Strand Orchestra, under the direction of Carl Edouarde gives a program of an overture and incidental music. Soloists for the week will be Miss Grace Hoffman, a coloratura soprano, Bruce Weyman, baritone, Nat. K. Cafferty, baritone, and Master Alfred Newman, the boy pianist.

Uses Big Four, Fox, Triangle, World, Equitable

By C. Roberts,

Manager, Hanford Opera House, Hanford, California.

My first experience in the management of a theater was in France, where I was manager of the Theatre de la Liberte in Marseilles, France, for five years. Afterward I came to America and my first venture here was in Chicago, where I opened a theater under the name of the Liberty theater. After a year and a half I sold my Chicago house and came to Hanford, Cal., and took the management of the Hanford opera house, which is under the direction of the Northwestern Theatrical Association.

The Hanford opera house plays all the road shows, books W. V. M. A. vaudeville, and exhibits every day a feature of the following services: Fox, Big Four, Triangle, Equitable and World. This theater is affiliated with the following houses: McDonough theater, Oakland; Clunie theater, Sacramento; Yosemite theater, Stockton; Victory theater, San Jose; White theater, Fresno; Theater Visalia, Visalia, and Bakersfield opera house, Bakersfield. We have the only pipe organ in this valley and it adds greatly to our orchestra.

The following extract from a notice in the Hanford Morning Journal shows you the standing we have in this community:

> The Opera House has positively become the place of comfort and pleasure and consequently the rendezvous of Hanfordites. Everybody says, 'Meet me at the Opera House.' That is the theater where current events are shown on the screen, new every day, through the courtesy of the First National Bank. That is the theater for which free tickets are given away by large firms. We wish to congratulate Manager Roberts on his good work.

Some Posters Drive Public Away

By Glenn Goff,

Manager, Empire Theater, Monte Vista, Colorado.

I am strong for advertising a feature like a circus; by that statement I do not mean to fill up my lobby with posters that drive the public way, but to use new photos, new posters, and try to arrange the lobby in a new way, for each different picture.

There is another thing I firmly believe is part of any exhibitor's success, and that is personal advertising; by that I mean for the small town exhibitor to pass his own handbills through the business district, and by doing that I find that there are a number that will ask about the kind of picture you are showing that night, or by seeing you may think of a slide he wants you to run, also the exhibitor who attends to this matter positively knows that he is getting his money's worth out of the bills which he has paid good money to have printed, instead of giving them to boys who may throw them away, or at best will be careless with them.

In my eleven years' experience in the moving picture business, I have found out that there is only one way to success, and that is by constant advertising, boosting and pulling for your theater, whether you be employe, manager or owner.

The essential things relative to winning the public are, first, good pictures; second, good music, and the rest deals with an attractive front, comfortable seats, good projection, attentive ushers and ticket sellers, a clean house, which you must keep up-to-date in every respect.

These things have helped me to whatever success I may have attained, and only by living up to these standards can I or any other exhibitor hope to say we are successful.

In anticipation of the coming warm weather, the Signal Film Corporation has constructed a row of bath-houses at its plant for the use of the players.

First Aid to Theater Men

BY S. L. ROTHAPFEL

DO NOT hold the mistaken idea that all problems which you present to me in this department must be big ones. Send in your questions no matter how small the problems are, for your puzzle may be exactly what is puzzling your fellow-manager, and my answer to you may at the same time be helping a dozen others. I make this statement because many letters received have been filled with apologies for asking such trivial questions. That is not the point; sometimes the little fellows are harder to solve than the bigger ones and have just as important a bearing on the ultimate success of your theater.

17—A number of my patrons have requested that I run a special performance on Saturday for the children, either in the morning, or else devote the entire afternoon run to the children. Do you know of any exhibitors who have tried this and whether it has proved a success? Where can I secure a list of films which would be appropriate for such a program?

The fact that a number of your patrons have come to you asking for the introduction of a special matinee for the children is sufficient reason for you at least to try it out. You should cultivate this habit of the patrons coming to you and asking for new things; it shows a bond of sympathy between the exhibitor and audience which you should encourage. If they find you are always willing to meet them half way on any requests they will begin to come to you with all of them instead of taking part to the other exhibitors, until your theater will come to be looked upon as an influential factor in the community.

Special performances for children, while they are an innovation, are not untried ground. A number of exhibitors have tested them and found them very successful. They draw crowded houses and you can charge an admittance of ten cents for all ages. Both methods have been tried with success, the special performance in the morning and devoting the afternoon runs to films for children.

In the April 15 issue of MOTOGRAPHY I published in this department a list of films which are suitable for such children's performances. Vary your program with a fairy story or an adaptation of some child's story, an industrial film and a comedy. Do not forget that the children love the comedies as well as the fairy stories. One exhibitor also had a professional story teller attend each performance and tell a story to the children, and this proved a strong added attraction.

Do not make the mistake which one exhibitor did of advertising a program especially for the children and simply adding a two-reel fairy story to his regular program, which happened to include a feature which should not have been shown to children. This so incensed the parents that they not only would not send their children to any more of the matinees, but they showed their resentment by not patronizing that theater themselves.

If you are running these special performances for children be sure to let the teachers in the neighborhood schools know about them, for they will recommend the bills to the children and the parents. Also it might be a good idea to distribute to the school children on Friday afternoon as they came out of school, a little handbill telling what is to be shown on the following afternoon. The expense of these will be very slight and they will undoubtedly materially increase your attendance.

18—I am not pleased with the appearance of the lobby of my theater. The bills which some of the film companies issue advertising their releases are printed in such vivid colorings that they seem to cheapen the appearance of my house. I cater to a refined class of people and would like some lobby decorations which would be advertising matter and still give an air of refinement. What would you suggest?

The posters which are issued by the film companies are rather meant for outside display than for close inspection in the lobby. These are quite vivid when viewed at close range and no doubt do make the lobby appear rather garish. Why not model your lobby after some of the better opera houses which have the walls decorated only with framed pictures of the various actors and actresses? If you will write to the publicity departments of the various film companies and tell them you would like some large photographs of their leading actors and actresses for framing and hanging in your lobby, they will be glad to send them to you. Add to this gallery of notables a few palms placed near either entrance and you will have a very attractive but at the same time refined display.

19—Do you believe that a printed program showing the films to be displayed each night during the week would help to increase the attendance at my theater?

There is always a large percentage of your audience made up of people who go to the theater regularly two, three or four nights a week and do not pay much attention to whether any special program is being shown that might especially appeal to them. They know that you always have good shows and that is why they patronize you. These are your regular patrons, the people you are sure of. You do not need to put forth any special effort to keep them coming because they will do so of their own accord. But there is a much larger percentage of people who do not come regularly. They may attend a motion picture theater two or three times a week, but they go from one to another, they go where the program especially appeals to them. This large percentage of theatergoers you want to coax into your house, those one or two nights a week they spend in a theater you want spent in your theater and not in the other exhibitor's down the street. If you want to gain their attention you will have to show them that you have something to offer which will please them. You may show the slides on your screen announcing your program for each night in the week and they will see some feature which they want especially to see but the chances are they will forget which night it was to be shown. If they have a printed program which they can take home with them for future reference they will know which night that feature is to be shown and they will be there. Also in looking over the program to find that particular film they will notice others mentioned which they will desire to see. After a while they will form the program habit. Whenever they feel like going to the theater they will consult the program to see what you have to offer for that evening's entertainment. Perhaps the other exhibitor around on the next street will not issue programs and this will give you an added advantage over him. Good business methods do not only mean keeping the patronage which you have but also constantly adding new patrons to your list and one of the surest ways of doing this is to issue a printed program which each one attending your theater can take home and keep for reference. The cost of these programs is not great and can be covered if desired by obtaining small advertisements from the local merchants. Make your advertising rate small and you can sell a number of the dealers space in your program if you show that every person coming to your house receives one, for this means that their advertisement is being read by a large number of the people living in that locality and trading in that locality.

20—I have just installed a new pipe organ and have a good organist and the music has proved so popular that my patrons are asking for more of it. I have been having one selection given before each run of pictures and do not see where I can introduce more. Can you help me out?

You are very fortunate in having found something which is proving so attractive to your audience. If you have created a demand for music then meet that demand by giving them more music. Why not announce that you will have a short organ recital before each performance and give three good selections? As it is always hard to fill your house for the beginning of your evening performance this would be a good place to add a little more of the music they enjoy and so have all the seats filled when you start the first run. Let the people know that your doors will be open at six-thirty or six-fifteen, if you desire, and that the organ will be played for fifteen minutes at that time before the show begins. Also you might encourage their interest by asking that they leave at the box office requests for special selections of which they are particularly fond. You can tell in two or three nights whether this is going to prove popular or not. If you give an afternoon performance you might also have the fifteen-minute recital before your first run there. It is always well to cater to any interests which your audience portray as this helps to keep your house popular.

21—To me confidence is the most important element in presenting pictures to the public. How can I develop confidence in my house as a place of entertainment and education? How can I develop confidence in myself as a person with the interest of the community at heart and capable of selecting proper plays for the public?

You are entirely correct in your surmise that to establish confidence in yourself and your theater is the first step to be attained in gaining success. Unfortunately this cannot be built up in an instant but must be worked up by degrees. In all your advertising tell the public that you are going to run the class of pictures they will want to see. Assure them that you will have good programs and good pictures, and then live up to the text of your advertising. Be sure that you are securing the best pictures, that you are running a first class theater in the true sense of the word. Invite expressions from your patrons as to the kind of picture they like best. Always be sure that your employes treat your patrons with all courtesy, make a point of being around the lobby often yourself so that the people will begin to know you personally, and never be too busy to discuss a picture with them, or any of the policies of your house. In this way you will find that the confidence which you so much desire, both in your theater and in yourself, will be slowly but surely built up, and soon the public will know that you stand behind your word and behind your theater, and the coveted end will be attained. The people will come to your theater and they will continue coming, for they will be sure of receiving value for their money and a good evening's entertainment.

22—I am about to venture into the moving picture theater business and would appreciate it very much if you could give me some suggestions as to the best location for such a theater.

The motion picture theater is purely a local affair, drawing the greater part of its patronage from the residents, business men or transients passing through its immediate vicinity. For this reason the prospective owner of the theater should make a careful study of the character of the neighborhood to determine the probable likes and dislikes rather than to start out with some predetermined policy without regard to the characteristics of his patrons. Shows that are located in residential districts, which cater principally to women and children, require a different program and arrangement from those located in the business section of the city. A show in the business section of the town might prove a success with a saloon on either side of it, but such a location would be rather risky in the residence districts.

While many shows have proved successful on side streets and out of the usual line of traffic, due to the steady patronage drawn by an excellent show, it will usually be found a slow and difficult process to build up this clientele compared to the ease with which a theater is filled on the more prominent thoroughfare.

Locations in the vicinity of schools or churches are usually to be looked upon with suspicion, owing to the frequent "crusades" organized against motion picture shows by the notoriety-seeking politicians and clergy. In some cities there are ordinances regulating the location of picture shows in regard to the schools and churches, and the investor would do well to look up this matter before negotiating for a lease. Similar regulations sometimes govern the proximity to parks or boulevards. Do not be frightened out of a neighborhood because there is already one well established theater there. Competition in a given neighborhood really increases the attendance of the first show instead of diminishing it, and with equal conditions the second show will soon reach the attendance of the first. Should one show conflict with another in a neighborhood having a population of over five thousand, there is certain to be some fault with the program, the management or the appearance of the unsuccessful show.

It is stated by several authorities that a town of one thousand should pay from $35 to $50 per week into the ticket office, which is the same thing as multiplying the census population by 0.05. This checks very closely with the conditions in Chicago, where 400 picture shows serve a little over 2,000,000 people. When the theoretical count is checked, approximately, with the count of some theater in the locality, the expenditure necessary for building the theater and the running expenses should be considered. The rent and payroll are among the most important factors in well settled communities, and the prospective owner should carefully examine into these features of the expense.

Ever since beginning work at the Mutual-Chaplin studio in Hollywood, the comedian has been considerably annoyed by the large crowds who have worked their way into the studio under one pretense or another. Chaplin put up such strenuous objections, declaring that the crowds were interfering with his work, that Studio Manager Caulfield recently issued an order barring all but members of the Chaplin company and other employes of the studios, unless they possessed a pass signed by him.

In one day Manager Caulfield issued 200 passes.

Then Chaplin saw that there was no use attempting to keep people away. Now two sides of the studio are lined with benches, to which the visitors are shown and asked to remain seated while the comedian is at work.

"Million Dollar" Film Completed

WILLIAM FOX PRESENTS HUGE NEW KELLERMAN FEATURE

THE spectacle which has not yet been named, but is known as "The Million Dollar Picture," has been completed.

One million dollars is a gigantic sum to be spent on one film but William Fox is positive that the public will agree it is well worth the money.

Annette Kellerman is the star of this spectacle, said to be the only million dollar film ever made in the history of the industry, and Herbert Brenon, the director general, Florence Deshon, Violet Horner, William E. Shay and two hundred other principals and mermaids support the "diving Venus."

The drama was produced at Kingston, Jamaica. The British Government in that city were most courteous and did all in their power to facilitate the making of the spectacle, which required nine months of labor to complete. Twenty thousand persons were employed in it as actors. Thousands of horses were brought to Jamaica for use in the battle and caravan scenes. Camels were brought down from the "States" and permitted to enter by special dispensation of the Colonial government.

Three-fourths of a year has been put into the production of this picture, and they have been months of unremitting labor. The climate of Jamaica is unsurpassed for picture making and only four days have been lost in these months of work. While the climate is ideal for photography it is not always pleasant for working as the tropical heat at noon time is sometimes almost unbearable and the players had to be guarded against sunstroke.

A great number of mermaids were used in this picture and these girls were recruited from every part of the country and are the best women swimmers of the country. Some of their work has been decidedly dangerous as the rough seas made the work hazardous, and they were buffeted against the rocks that line the edges of St. Anne's Bay. These girls have returned just in time for the opening of the summer season at the resorts on both coasts and will work throughout the summer at the beaches as instructors and lifeguards, and also as swimming supervisors at the playgrounds and small parks throughout the large cities.

When Mr. Fox first conceived the idea for this tremendous spectacle he said that he was going to make a picture that would top the five biggest pictures ever made up to this time, that he would have the picture invested with wonders never before dreamed of by motion picture producers, and now that the production is finished he feels satisfied that he has lived up to that prophecy.

No release date has been named for this film but Herbert Brenon assisted by William Fox himself will start now on the task of cutting and assembling this huge land and water spectacle, and will probably be a month at this work.

Miss Kellerman and the other players returned from Jamaica on the United Fruit Company's liner Saramaca on April 19.

Virginia Pearson Featured in "Blazing Love"

Another notable release of the Fox Company for May 1 is "Blazing Love," featuring Virginia Pearson. In this play Miss Pearson who has a long line of successes to her credit on both the speaking and the screen stage has been given an exceptional chance to display her talents as an emotional actress. Miss Pearson is supported by George Selby, Frank Goldsmith, Lew Stern, Frank Burbeck, Wilmuth Merkyl and Louise Huff. This is a drama of love and intrigue and in it Miss Pearson is called upon for some strong emotional acting.

Following is a number of the very unusual criticisms which have appeared concerning Miss Pearson's work:

"An actress of force, distinction and vast possibilities hitherto undeveloped."—Butte Miner.

"Virginia Pearson scores a big success."—Philadelphia Evening-Ledger.

"Virginia Pearson is truly an artist, slender, graceful and beautiful."—New York Dramatic Mirror.

"Virginia Pearson—The most wonderfully gowned woman on the American stage. Quite worthy of the wonderful costuming art that Doucet and Poiret have lavished upon her."—The Boston Post.

"Virginia Pearson—A dangerously beautiful but feminine actress."—New York Evening Journal.

"Miss Pearson possesses Southern warmth and charm—is today the lovliest and most perfect physical specimen of womanhood that can be found in North America." New York American.

"Virginia Pearson is an actress of marvelous beauty. She can sway and control audiences as Joan of Arc ruled the armies of an empire."—San Francisco Bulletin.

"Unless we are vastly mistaken, William Fox some day will cast Virginia Pearson for the principal role in a picture portraying some great and mighty pageant. She would attract audiences that would rival the annual attendance at the Yale-Harvard or Army-Navy football game."—Pittsburgh Leader.

Walsh Invades Mining District

With great throngs looking on, Raoul Walsh, who has been responsible for many of the William Fox photoplay productions on the Pacific coast, with a company of 125 has left Los Angeles by special train for the mining districts of California for the staging of a spectacular photoplay.

Bands were on hand to speed the photoplayers on their long jaunt to real "atmosphere," flags were waved and the cheers of the hundreds almost tamed the engine's whistles.

To make sure that his company was properly supplied in the matter of horses, 100 mounts were carried by Mr. Walsh. They are desert bred horses, cowpunchers' broncos of truest types.

Randsburg is the destination of the photoplayers, a most picturesque setting for the thrills which the camera's eye will treasure for all the world.

New One for Fairbanks

Robert M. Baker, who, with John Emerson, wrote the stage play, "The Conspiracy," has completed a genuine five-reel comedy plot, which he specially prepared for Douglas Fairbanks, the Triangle star. The studio title of the new Robert M. Baker play is "The Assassin," and, judging from a recent rehearsal, it is a typical Fairbanks' story. In this new Fine Arts play, Douglas Fairbanks will be directed by William Christy Cabanne, a graduate of the Griffith school for directors.

Fairbanks will be supported in "The Assassin" by Jewel Carmen, A. D. Sears, Margie Wilson, W. E. Lawrence, Lillian Langdon, Wilbur Higby, and George A. Beranger.

SOUTH AMERICAN EXHIBITORS

Decided Progressive Spirit Shown by Southern Managers in Advertising William Fox Productions With Big Success

That South American exhibitors are progressive is shown by the manner in which they have advertised the Fox films and so drawn crowds to their houses. The initial success of William Fox features in both Brazil and Argentina is due largely to the successful use of the daily newspapers published in Spanish, Portuguese and German which have a vast hold on the South American public.

Every first, second and third run exhibitor using Fox features in South America is signed up to use paid advertising to make the features known to the public. The initial advertising outlay entailed an advertising expenditure running from 25 to 33⅓ per cent of the rental cost of the pictures and the exhibitors promptly spent these amounts in their most powerful newspapers.

The influential newspapers of both cities dealt with these showings at great length and with the dignity usually attached to reviews of the opera in South American capitals. The critics personally reviewed the performances under their signatures and so placed motion pictures on a par with the highest forms of amusement.

The results obtained from this advertising were astonishing. "Carmen" and other Fox pictures attracted audiences so large that the theater attendants could not cope with them and it became necessary both in Rio and Buenos to ask police assistance in handling the audiences. Motors lined both sides of the streets near houses where the Fox features were showing and the very best elements of the population, beautifully gowned, came long distances for the premiers.

The better to take care of its increased laboratory work, the Signal Film Corporation is arranging for the enlarging of that department at its Los Angeles studios. The extra work has been entailed by several of the independent plants requesting that the Signal do the developing and printing of their camera work. Orrin Denny, superintendent of the Signal's laboratories, is one of the best known of the pioneers in that line on the Pacific coast.

Violet Harner, the Fox star, is beautiful and gracious, but she makes a monkey of her chauffeur.

First Mutual-Chaplin Releases

OTHER UNUSUAL FEATURES READY

THE first of the Mutual-Chaplin comedies, "The Floorwalker," is practically complete and will be released on May 15. According to advance information this film shows the famous comedian at his best and contains a number of novel stunts heretofore never attempted by Charley. Many of the incidents are woven around an escalator and while these were being filmed Chaplin came near having a very serious accident, and was only saved by the famous Chaplin shoes. While rushing up the moving stairway Charley tripped and nearly lost his balance and his foot was caught between the first and second steps. But fortunately the shoe was several inches longer than his foot so that the steps closed only on the shoe and not on his foot and resulted only in a badly torn shoe.

The American's big new studios at Santa Barbara will number four big stars among its family. They are the celebrities Richard Bennett, Mary Miles Minter, recently of Metro, Helen Holmes and Audrey Munson. These stars will appear in productions of not less than five reels to be released through the Mutual in America as special features.

Two of the eight new feature productions starring Florence La Badie, to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation under the title of "Thanhouser Classics," have been completed and release dates will be announced in the near future.

"The Fugitive," a five-part drama, will be the first of these Classics released. It will be followed by "Woman, Saint and Devil," also in five acts. In "The Fugitive" Miss La Badie appears in the role of a young heiress who accepts exile in preference to having her widowed sister sent to prison. The story is novel in theme and replete with action. Miss La Badie is supported by Ethyle Cooke, Hector Dion, Robert Vaughn and several other well known members of the Thanhouser-Mutual stock company.

In "Woman, Saint and Devil," Miss La Badie essays an exceedingly difficult role and one that calls upon her to bring into play the many emotional qualities which have won for her a place among the screen's foremost interpreters of dramatic roles. Psychology, treated from an angle never before attempted in motion picture production, is the basic theme of this play. It deals with quadruple personality, and is founded on a recent discovery by a celebrated psychologist. Medical men will immediately recognize it as a parallel case to the one recently announced by the psychologist, who experimented and conducted researches for several years before announcing his discovery. The quadruple is handled with exceptional merit by Miss La Badie, due to her keen understanding of the subject touched upon. In this play Miss La Badie is supported by the same cast as in "The Fugitive."

Miss La Badie is now at work on the third of these "Thanhouser Classics," the title of which has not as yet been definitely decided upon.

A number of releases are nearing completion at the American Film Company studios. Chief among them are "The Highest Bid," starring William Russell, supported by Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan. The scenario is by J. Edward Hungerford from the story by Arthur H. Gooden.

"The Courtesan" is being filmed under the direction of Arthur Maude. Eugenie Forde has the leading role and in her support appear Nell Frazen, Hal Cooley, Al Fordyce, Charles Wheelock, William Carroll and several others.

"The Reclamation" is another of these Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition.

In addition to these will be released "At the End of the Rainbow," a three-reel drama filmed under the direction of Thomas Ricketts.

Frank Borzage is in charge of the screening of "The Man Who Forgot," second of the three-reel subjects from the American-Mutual studios. The entire company was taken to the Mojave desert for the filming of a number of the scenes. The story is a unique one of the West and reaches a startling climax in a novel and unexpected fashion.

"The Touch on the Key," a two-reel drama featuring Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat is a newspaper play, based on the adventure that befell a young reporter in an effort to finish a "scoop" to his paper. Harry McCabe, King Clarke and Joseph Beaudry are the other members of the cast.

"Pierre Brissac, the Brazen," also in two reels, features Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne. Work on this production was recently completed. The drama was directed and staged by Thomas Ricketts from a scenario by Kenneth B. Clarke.

In addition to these two, three and five-reel productions, a number of comedies are also at the "Beauty"-Mutual studios. They include "The Rummy Act of Omar K. M.," featuring Orral Humphrey, "Billy Van Deusen's Operation," with John Steppling in the title role, and others not yet titled.

New Two-Reel Mutuals

Margaret Gibson has been chosen as the star of the new two-reel Centaur features to be released each week by the Mutual Film Corporation. "Avenged by

Just one of "The Secret of the Submarine" thrill-your-spine scenes.

Lions," the first of this series, will be released May 6. An excellent supporting cast has been supplied Miss Gibson and Charles Swickard, long affiliated with the directing force of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has been secured for the directing of this series. The famous collection of Bostock animals will be used in the filming of these two-reel subjects, one of which will be released every Saturday by the Mutual.

Although only seventeen, Helene Rosson has been chosen as the star in the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "April." In this film which depicts life in the Tennessee mountains Miss Rosson has a splendid opportunity, for in the role of an unsophisticated mountain girl she combines the elements of delirious happiness and despair. It seems almost incredible that a girl of seventeen could portray roles demanding real insight into life as well as Miss Rosson does.

Kenneth B. Clarke, the clever writer, has woven an unusual plot for the forthcoming Mutual Masterpiece, De Luxe Edition, "The Abandonment." The play is being produced at the American studios. In the leading roles are Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor and Harry Von Meter.

Arthur Acord, the popular American-Mutual player, is cast for a striking role in the intensely dramatic two-part picture, "The Return," which will be produced in the American studios.

Jack Dillon of the Vogue-Mutual forces is making up for the rainy weather and is cutting and assembling no less than three films and at the same time is working on the fourth. In "Peeping Tom" he has a "nancy" police force which is as funny as can be. In "A Rainy Day at the Studio," Dillon has conceived and carried out a clever comedy taken in the real rainy weather, and it is hard to say just what he did not have his artists do in the rain, wet and mud, but anyhow he managed to get a funny and fast photoplay. "Because He Flirted" is a crook story with Paddy McGuire at his best, and "Bungling Bill, Detective," which is at present in the making, is one of the quickest action comedies Mr. Dillon has yet made.

Little Reine Rogers is the latest acquisition in the way of a leading lady in Jack Dillon's productions. Miss Rogers is well known in comedy films and is a bright, pretty blonde, full of life and good spirits and plucky as they are made, and will be a worthy addition to the comedies.

Another scene that makes you gulp, from the American-Mutual, "The Secret of the Submarine."

Rube Miller and his co-workers, Arthur Tavares, Madge Kirby and Alice Neice, have gotten to understand each other's work and methods and the result is that Mr. Miller's comedies run as smoothly as they do swiftly. Miller also took advantage of the weather conditions and "Flooded With Troubles" is a scream. "Across the Border," a comedy with a Mexican flavor; "A Butcher's Mixup," which describes itself, and "Dell of the Mill" are all much above the average of slapstick comedies.

President Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Co., Inc., and a number of invited guests attended a private showing of the first three chapters of "The Secret of the Submarine," the new American-Mutual photoplay in chapters, held recently in Mutual's projection room. President Freuler announced himself as exceedingly well pleased with the chapters screened. The first chapter, in two acts, will be released May 8.

Three-Reel Features

The two three-reel feature offerings for the same week include "A Broken Genius," an American production with a strong heart punch, the principal roles of which are assumed by Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne for release April 27, and "The Carriage of Death," a Thanhouser drama to be released April 29 featuring Marion Swayne and Bert Delaney.

Included in the three two-reel subjects are "The Counterfeit Earl," from the American studios, for release April 24, in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh have the chief roles, a Thanhouser production entitled "A Man of Honor," for release April 25, with the Fairbank Twins, Madeline and Marion, and George Marlo in the leading parts, and "Unlucky Luke," a Mustang Western drama for release April 28, in which the principal roles are handled by Anna Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson.

Among the comedy releases for the same week are "Dad's Darling Daughters" with Riley Chamberlain and Walter Hiers, and "Willie Wendy to Willie" with Frances Keyes and Jay Yorke, Falstaff production for release April 24 and 29 respectively; "Bugs and Bugles" featuring Carol Halloway and Johnny Sheehan released April 26 and "Two Beds and No Sleep" for release April 30, in which Orral Humphreys is the featured player. These last two names will be released under the Beauty brand. The Vogue comedies for the week feature Rube Miller and Madge Kirby in "The Island that Never Was" for release April 25, and "Bungling Bill, Doctor" with Paddy McQuire and Rena Rodgers. This will be released April 30. George Ovey, the funny man of the Horsley-Mutual studios, has a laughable role in "The Traitor," a Cub comedy for release April 28.

Robert Edeson Back to Boards

Robert Edeson, who has just concluded his engagement with the Vitagraph company, during which time he appeared in a number of feature pictures, will return to the legitimate stage later on in "The Dawn," under the management of A. H. Woods.

Mr. Edeson has recently been starred in the following Vitagraph productions, "Mortmain," "The Cave Man" and "For a Woman's Fair Name."

May Metro Features

BUSHMAN, BAYNE AND PETROVA STARRED

THE first releases for May on the Metro program are announced.

"A Million a Minute," with Francis H. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles, will be released on the Metro program May 15. This feature is now being completed by the Quality Pictures Corporation for the Metro program under the directorship of John W. Noble assisted by William Bailey. This story was picturized by Howard Irving Young from the novel of the same name written by Hudson Douglas. "A Million a Minute" is a five-reel feature and contains some pretentious scenes showing cafe life both in New York and Paris, in and around New York harbor and other interesting glimpses of New York. The supporting cast includes Helen Dunbar, Robert Cummings, John Davidson, Charles Prince, Mrs. Walker, Carl Brickert, William Bailey, Mary Moore and Jerome Wilson.

Some difficulty was encountered in filming this production wherein a number of scenes had to be taken on an incoming steamer, owing to the rule that people are now not even allowed on the piers to say nothing of the steamships during the war, unless they are passengers carrying passports. Through the diplomacy of Frank McCauslan, however, arrangements were made for the Bushman-Bayne company to go down the bay on an ocean tugboat and there board the vessel and make their pictures between the time the health officers were inspecting the ship and the revenue service men were coming on board. The players were not allowed to proceed up the bay on the steamer and were taken off while she was under steam.

Another five-part feature on the Metro program is "The Scarlet Woman," which will be released on May 22. Mme. Petrova has the leading role in this play which is produced by the Popular Plays and Players for Metro. The story, written by Aaron Hoffman and produced under the direction of Edward Lawrence, while containing many colorful scenes of New York life, is handled in a manner that does not give offense, and the most delicate situations are presented in an artistic way. Mme. Petrova wears several gowns which were especially fashioned for this production. The supporting cast includes Arthur Hoops, Edward Martindell, Eugene O'Brien and Frances Gordon.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison are at work on their second feature for the Metro program. "The Night Riders," as the title implies, is a story of the south at the time of the moonshiners, and arrangements have been made with the government agents to use buildings and locations which were once the rendezvous of real moonshiners. Fred J. Balshofer is directing this five-reel feature, and assisting Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison are Howard Truesdell, Lester Cuneo and a large group of natives who will appear in motion pictures for the first time.

Edward Martindell will make his debut on the Metro program in "The Scarlet Woman," playing opposite Mme. Petrova. Mr. Martindell is a distinctive leading man of the strong, heroic type and he makes an excellent foil for Mme. Petrova.

Edgar L. Davenport, of the famous family of Davenports, is now appearing regularly in Metro productions. He will next be seen in "Dorian's Divorce," in which Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are starred. Mr. Davenport can best portray the roles of middle aged men, and generally appears as a banker, broker or other successful business man.

An addition to the Metro program, the release date for which has not yet been announced, will be the film version of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the name parts. This production has been carefully prepared with strict attention given to the proper locations and the costuming. Metro has spared no expense to ensure the success of this feature as it was realized that the newer art would be in competition with the older art and subjected to a critical analysis.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne made a most successful trip into Canada, making a tour of the principal cities. They were accompanied by Helen Dunbar and Robert Cummings of that company. The moving picture theaters in Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal were visited and many social functions were planned in honor of the players.

Advance glimpse of "The Scarlet Woman" with Mme. Petrova. Popular Plays and Players-Metro.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS MEET

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton Answers Questions on Motion Picture Board of Trade—Three Hundred Exhibitors in Association

On Thursday, April 20, the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn held their last open meeting. The gathering took place in the smoking room of W. H. Kemble's Triangle Theater after the evening performance. The majority of Brooklyn's three hundred or more exhibitors belong to this organization, which is Local No. 3 in the New York State League and the official mouthpiece of these showmen in their attacks on censorship and in the handling of the various other problems with which theatermen are forever confronted.

The meeting was opened by President Manheimer, who indicated that the evening's principal topic was to be the Motion Picture Board of Trade by introducing Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, known to the film world as a pioneer manufacturer who has kept abreast of the times, and, in addition to his official duties in the Vitagraph Company of American, has personally written and directed some of that concern's biggest productions.

Commodore Blackton prefaced his talk with the announcement that he was speaking not as an individual manufacturer but as the president and representative of the Board of Trade. He briefly outlined the purposes and advantages of the Board of Trade and the bonds of mutual interest existing between it and the exhibitors.

Louis F. Blumenthal, an officer in New York Local No. 1, answered Commodore Blackton's speech. For a few minutes it looked as though a debate would follow, but the president of the Board of Trade corrected Mr. Blumenthal's understanding of certain things and promised to have remedied the irregularities which he brought up. One of the questions raised by the latter was: "Should the exhibitors be expected to tie up their money in advance payments for films without interest or other recompense?" This, Commodore Blackton said, was a subject for arbitration with the Board of Trade and recommended the exhibitors appointing a committee to confer with the Board on it.

The chairman then announced that Commodore Blackton would answer any questions relative to the Board of Trade that the exhibitors cared to ask. For a time these queries came thick and fast, but they were answered with the same speed and a gratifying directness. The frankness with which Commodore Blackton spoke and the satisfactory way in which he met the exhibitors' desire for information quickly won their confidence and respect.

Other speakers of the evening were W. Stephen Bush, Sam Spedon, and Exhibitors Brandt, Lesslebaum, Loeb and Sanders, and Exchangeman Ivan. Unless present conditions change considerably, open meetings of this kind are the one means of getting the Board of Trade and the exhibitors together. But it requires only a certain number of these get-togethers to accomplish it, for in them the Board and the showmen meet on common ground and come to an understanding through a discussion of their mutual troubles.

The officers of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn are: Mr. Manheim, president; Mr. Levine, first vice-president; Ben Title, second vice-president; William Brandt, executive secretary; Mr. Lesslebaum, recording secretary; and Julian Loeb, treasurer.

After the meeting the men were again reminded that they were the guests of the Big T Film Corporation by the appearance of trays of sandwiches and certain refreshments of liquid and innocent character.

ESSANAY SUES CHAPLIN

Comedian's Injunction Against Essanay Answered by Half Million Suit Against Chaplin by That Company

To counteract the injunction brought by Chaplin against Essanay this company has filed a suit against Chaplin for a half million dollars. This $500,000 represents the sum the film company believed it would realize on the three pictures which remained on the unfilled contract which the comedian had with the Essanay Company.

In the papers filed on behalf of George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay, it is stated that in December, 1914, Chaplin signed a contract which specified he would give his services to that company for a year at a weekly salary of $1,250; but that when he became famous in a few months he demanded a larger salary and a new contract was made out, dating from June, 1915, to the expiration of the old one, calling for a bonus of $10,000 for each of ten pictures. After this agreement was signed it is claimed Chaplin acted in only one picture, and then although he was drawing his weekly salary he did not appear in the studio for eighty-one days, and that of the ten pictures agreed upon in the contract Chaplin only completed seven and on these collected the bonus of $70,000. Therefore the Essanay Company believes $500,000 is a fair estimate of the amount it has lost because of the nonproduction of the remaining three pictures.

The injunction which Chaplin recently brought against the Essanay Company was based on the demand that his burlesque of Carmen should appear in two reels instead of four. The comedian stated the comedy was originally intended for but two reels and charged that its release in four reels was a violation of Chaplin's contract with the Essanay Company. He also charges that the four reel Carmen will ruin his reputation, and his brother, Sid Chaplin, signed an affidavit to accompany the injunction setting forth facts in regard to the making of the picture and citing the effect upon Charlie's reputation of adverse criticisms which were likely to appear in newspapers, trade and dramatic journals.

With Chaplin charging a breach of contract on the part of Essanay and his suit for a permanent injunction against the distribution of the Carmen film; and Essanay charging a breach of contract on the part of Chaplin and asking for $500,000, there is quite a complicated problem to be solved.

Under the direction of J. P. McGowan, the Signal company is rapidly nearing the completion of the fifth reel of its production, "Whispering Smith." Although it is entirely incidental, it has been able to secure some of the most unusual of lighting effects. The entire street set of Medicine Bend is shown with the action going forward lighted only by the street lights and an occasional finger of white from some open doorway or window.

Intense Interest in Campaign

ENTIRE INDUSTRY WORKS FOR ACTORS' FUND

THE interest in the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund is now keen in all parts of the country and among all classes of people. This movement was first started by those interested in the making, selling and exhibiting of films, and the object was to raise $500,000 in fifteen weeks as the screen's share of the endowment of the Actors' Fund of America.

But the public also wanted to be represented in this worthy charity and are responding most heartily. A friendly rivalry has arisen among cities to see which shall stand highest on the roll of honor on National Motion Picture Day, May 15, on which day a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown will be donated to this campaign.

San Francisco is working hard to be at the head of the list of the cities who are aiding this fund. The committee in charge of the fund are planning to hold a monster entertainment and Grand Ball in the Municipal Auditorium on May 13, the proceeds of which will be donated to the campaign.

At a recent dinner at the Screen Club in honor of Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund, Albert Ricardi, a comparatively unknown actor, made a most appealing speech which sounded the keynote of the campaign. He told of his own experience and how the Actors' Fund had aided him in his hour of need. As a result of this appeal over $2,000 was raised to add to the campaign fund.

Columbus, O., is coming well to the front in its efforts to aid the campaign fund and promises to be well at the head of the list of cities giving substantial amounts.

The Actors' Fund was given a boost last week when several members of the Vitagraph Company contributed between them $500. Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Dorothy Kelly and several others separated themselves from enough of their weekly stipend to total that amount.

Gary, Indiana, has pledged its help in the campaign through V. W. Young, manager of the Art Theater, the largest motion picture house in Gary, who has promised to give to the fund ten per cent of his receipts on National Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15.

Denver, Colo., bids fair to take a high place on the list of loyal municipalities. The Rocky Mountain Screen Club is behind the activities there, and the local committee is composed of Messrs. H. T. Nolan, W. E. Foley, Al Hagen and Frank Harris. A monster Tribute Fete will be held in the City Auditorium and all the leading actors and actresses of the stage and screen in the vicinity have promised to attend. A unique method has been devised for boosting the Denver contributions on May 15. The forty-odd picture houses in the city will receive a number of reels of film donated without charge by the manufacturers.

Hollywood, California's, contribution is perhaps the most pretentious undertaking for the benefit of the Actors' Fund. At the instigation and under the direction of Raymond Wells, will be given a production of Julius Caesar enacted by men and women now engaged in motion picture work. The cast will be a most notable one.

Tyrone Power, accounted as the foremost portrayer of Shakespearean parts since Mansfield, will play Brutus. William Farnum, an Anthony never equalled, will do Marc Anthony. Frank Keenan, the Cassius of every notable performance of Julius Caesar, will once more walk the boards in his favorite characterization. Theodore Roberts realizes the dream of a life time in having the opportunity to play Julius Caesar to Mr. Power's Brutus. De Wolf Hopper bids fair to be a really great Casca. Tully Marshall will play Decius Brutus. Douglas Fairbanks, Octavius Caesar; Sarah Truax, Portia, Constance Crawley, Calpurnia. In the great spectacle of the Feast of Lupercal, Mae Murray will be the premier danseuse, assisted by five hundred of the best dancers California can afford. In the battle scenes, Captain Louis R. Ball, U. S. A., will direct five thousand men. In depicting the final scenes by means of especially constructed lighting effects, the motion picture method of "cut-back" will be employed.

This performance will be given on May 19 in the Beachwood Natural Amphitheater in Hollywood, which has a seating capacity of 30,000 and can accommodate 50,000, and the entire proceeds of the production will be donated to the fund.

Reports received from Chicago indicate that city will make good its boast to contribute $100,000 of the $500,000 total. Aaron J. Jones, chairman of the Chicago Branch Committee, says he has signed up 150 theaters already which will donate ten per cent of their gross receipts on May 15, and these are only a starter, that there will be four hundred on the list before May 15. Marcus Loew is preparing a unique program for his theaters in Chicago consisting of feature films and "personal appearances" of stars which he expects to pack his theaters to the sidewalk. Led by two such energetic theater owners nearly 1,200 picture houses have already pledged themselves to make Tribute Day the biggest kind of success.

Following is a list of additional theaters which will donate 10 per cent of their receipts to the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund on National Tribute Day, May 15:

BILLIE BURKE IN SEA

Captivating Star of "Gloria's Romance," the New Kleine Motion Picture Novel, Autos Into Ocean in First Chapter

Motion picture audiences the country over are sure to sympathize with Billie Burke when they behold her at the end of the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance," the new George Kleine motion picture novel from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, in which she is appearing.

For it's not the fair and bewitching Billie, immaculately garbed and prim and precise, whom they will behold, but a frightened, tearful Billie, rocking about in a big automobile far out amid the breakers of the Atlantic ocean, off Palm Beach, Florida. And ere she gets safely ashore again her Paris gown is a sight to behold. Miss Burke, to be perfectly frank, didn't care much for the situation herself, but the plot of the story called for the scene and so she went through with it, doubtless considering that she was earning every cent of the $4,000 she receives by way of salary every week.

Miss Burke appears as Gloria Stafford, the daughter of a wealthy banker. She goes with her father and brother to spend the winter in Palm Beach, Florida. Being sixteen and vivacious, she naturally resents the rigid regulations under which her governess, who has cared for her since the death of her mother, would have her live. She frequently escapes from beneath the vigilant eye of her governess to romp about like a veritable tom-boy. Judge Freeman and his daughter, Lois, friends of the Staffords, also arrive in Palm Beach, Freeman being attended by Dr. Royce, who at once becomes interested in Gloria. David Stafford finds much to admire in Lois Freeman, and Richard Freneau, a young broker, in charge of the Palm Beach branch office of his firm, scrapes an acquaintance with the Stafford and Freeman families and soon becomes David's rival.

One night, Gloria, eluding her governess, slips out of her room, ventures downstairs, looks in upon the gay throng in the hotel ballroom, and then, noticing her brother's car in the street, decides it will be a great lark to go for a spin in the moonlight all by herself. She throws on the power and whirls madly away down the hard-packed sands of the beach. Suddenly something goes wrong with the car, she loses control of the stearing gear and the big racer swerves straight out into the ocean. Gloria succeeds in getting safely out of the motor but her Paris gown is drenched and bedraggled. As the chapter ends, she sets out for the hotel, afoot, loses her way and dawn finds her wandering in the Everglades, a lonesome, homesick little maid. Quite naturally the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance" has been entitled "Lost in the Everglades."

Ziegfeld "Loans" Billie

Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., famous the world over as the producer of the "Follies" and other musical entertainments, is responsible for the appearance of Miss Billie Burke in the George Kleine motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," soon to be seen in theaters all over the United States. The films are nearing completion in the George Kleine studios in New York City, and both the film titles and the newspaper and trade journal advertisements, and the posters will bear the legend, "By Special Arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr."

TRIANGLE STARTS LECTURES

Exhibitors Furnished With Slides and Other Material Showing "How Triangle Films Are Made"— Features in the Making

The Triangle Film Corporation has presented a new idea to the exhibitor in its fifteen-minute talks on "How Triangle Films Are Made," illustrated with sixteen slides showing the directors, stars and various stages of production. William H. Kemble, of Brooklyn, was the first exhibitor to try this new plan and he followed closely the lines suggested by the main office, outlining the preparing of manuscript, laying out of scenes and casting; technical construction; selection of locations; rehearsals; actual photographing of scenes; and the editing and assembling. The audience were very much interested and gave close attention to the lecture.

Another Triangle innovation is an Information Bureau for the convenience of its patrons. So many people wanted to follow their favorite Triangle players and did not know how to find out at what theater and at what time their latest plays were being shown that the film company was forced to establish a bureau to give this information. S. Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York branch, is in supervisory charge of the new service bureau.

The first showing of Thomas H. Ince's spectacle "Civilization" was a huge success. The play was preceded by a prologue and followed by an epilogue and accompanied by the special incidental musical score of Victor L. Schertzinger. This production is said to be one of the most daring and astounding offerings since the beginning of cinematography, and the most powerful and logical plea for universal peace that has yet been uttered. The feature is drawing large houses in the west and Producer Ince will soon leave for New York to prepare for its Metropolitan premiere.

Mabel Normand, the former Keystone comedienne, is ready to start in her new work as an aspiring dramatic star with the Triangle. Miss Normand is to have her own studio, a four-acre tract midway between Los Angeles and Hollywood, and will have her own company of players who will be used as her permanent supporting cast in each of the plays in which she will appear. The director for Miss Normand has not yet been named. Each play will be under the personal supervision of Ince and be released as a Triangle-Kay Bee subject.

Frank Keenan began work this week on a new Triangle-Kay Bee subject in which he will be presented as an Ince star. The story is from the pen of J. G. Hawkins. Enid Markey is to play opposite Mr. Keenan.

J. G. Hawks, of the Ince staff of photoplaywrights, has burst into the ranks of the poets with a verse penned on the occasion of the death of Judge Juan J. Carillo, the pioneer Santa Monica jurist, who for years was a friend of the Ince players.

Bessie Barriscale is enjoying a much needed vacation for a week before starting on the new play, "Not My Sister." William Desmond will be co-star with Miss Barriscale in this play. In this intensely dramatic story by James Montgomery and C. Gardner Sullivan, there is a splendid chance for Miss Barriscale to display her strong emotional acting and also for Mr. Desmond to share equal honors. The supporting cast includes Franklyn Ritchie, Alice Taaffe and Louise Brownell. The production is directed by Charles Giblyn.

"The No-Good Guy," the second comedy in which William Collier will be presented by Triangle, has been completed under the direction of Scott Sidney. This play calls for some strenuous action on Collier's part. In one scene he is required to drive an automobile loaded with women through a plate glass window, and in another he has to fight a big huskie.

Jane Grey and William Desmond have found their beauty a hardship in making-up for their parts in "Waifs," the Triangle-Kay Bee feature in which they are co-stars. It is hard to hide the classic lines of their faces to represent the slum types.

April Triangle releases include: "The Children in the House," Triangle-Fine Arts, released April 30; "The Beggar of Cawnpore," Triangle Ince, featuring H. B. Warner, released April 30; "A Dash of Courage," Triangle-Keystone, presenting Harry Gribbon, Wallace Beery, Guy Woodward, Gloria Swanson and William Mason, released April 23; "Bucking Society," Triangle-Keystone, including Chester Conklin, "Shorty" Hamilton, Louella Maxam, Dora Rogers and Jack Henderson, releases April 16; "His Last Laugh," Triangle-Keystone, released April 9; and "His Bread and Butter," Triangle-Keystone, released April 9.

William Collier and William Collier, Jr., will be running opposition to each other in New York the week of April 30, when the father will appear in "The No-Good Guy" on the first run Triangle program at the Knickerbocker Theater and the son will appear in "The Bugle Call," on the Triangle program at the Rialto.

MAY GAUMONTS

"The Quality of Faith" and "The Isle of Love" to Appear—"Reel Life" Series to Be Released Each Week

The first two Gaumont releases for May will be two five-reelers, "The Quality of Faith" and "The Isle of Love."

"The Quality of Faith" enlists as co-stars Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson. This is their first appearance on the same screen since they played together in "As a Woman Sows." In the new play Mr. Gaden appears as a minister and Miss Robinson as the Salvation Army girl. In the supporting company are Lucille Taft, John Reinhard, Harry W. Pemberton, Charles H. Travis, John Mackin and Alan Robinson.

"The Isle of Love" stars Gertrude McCoy assisted by Robert Clugston. Supporting Miss McCoy are Earl O. Schenck, W. J. Butler, Charles W. Travis and Iva Shepard. In this play Miss McCoy lives up to her former reputation as a dare-devil and has had some exciting moments while producing the picture. In one scene Miss McCoy jumps into the sea in her bathing suit and upon returning from her swim finds her clothes washed away by the tide. Impetuously the heroine overplayed her part and dived into a pool lined with jagged rocks. She completed the scene despite the fact that she had sustained painful bruises. In other scenes Miss McCoy jumps into the ocean from the deck of a burning steamer; she is saved from the sea and taken to a desert island; kidnaped by a wealthy yachtman she is forced to fight for her freedom aboard the yacht and enacts a very realistic struggle which covers her with bruises.

Paul M. Bryan of Denver, Colo., a photoplaywright who has written a number of Gaumont releases, is spending a combined business trip and rest seeking vacation in the east. Mr. Bryan plans to visit Atlanta, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla., where Gaumont's winter studios are situated. Among the Gaumont successes written by Mr. Bryan are "The Card Players," "The Idol of the Stage" and Miss Marguerite Courtot's latest Mutual Masterpicture, "Feathertop." He is also author of a Gaumont May release, "The Isle of Love," in which Miss Gertrude McCoy is starred. Charleston, South Carolina, will be the subject of the weekly split-reel showing interesting places in the United States in the "See America First" series. No beaten path will be followed in these releases but all part of the country covered. On the same reel with this series appear Harry Palmer's animated Kartoon Komics. Mr. Palmer has placed two new interesting characters on the screen in Nosey Ned and Estella, who will alternate week after week.

A standard feature from the Gaumont laboratories is the Mutual Weekly, the motographic news reel which not only covers the events of this country but through powerful foreign connections secures remarkable pictures from abroad. Every facility afforded cameramen has been placed at the disposal of the Mutual cameraman who is filming the Villa expedition. Throughout the United States over two hundred cameramen are constantly in touch with the Gaumont main office. For their benefit a house organ is issued which will be sent free to any cameraman requesting it. The first of its kind, it is called the Pocket Edition of the Mutual Weekly.

An innovation in one-reel releases will be the "Reel Life" series of the Gaumont Company, which will be released each week hereafter. This series will feature all phases of outdoor life, no matter in what form. The communal activities of ants, the birth of a butterfly or the habits of alligators will be filmed with the same care devoted to picturing Belgian cavalry or some other human activity, so the public may be assured of an instructive and intensely interesting series.

Gaumont Meets Summer Theater Demand

In less than a month there will be a great demand for three-reel features by amusement parks and summer theaters. The Gaumont company has recognized the importance of supplying photoplays of this length. Beginning late in May Gaumont three-reel features will be seen on the screen, in addition to the Mutual Masterpictures which it will continue to release. The magnitude of the Gaumont operations reflects the impetus given production by the recent visit to America of Mr. Léon Gaumont, head of the Société des Établissements Gaumont.

"With that rare discernment which is so characteristic of Mr. Gaumont," explained F. C. Bradford, general manager of the American Gaumont interests, "he saw the immense possibilities of three-reel productions which would be the same as our five-reel photodramas in everything but length. As you know, there are thousands of vaudeville houses which wish to run pictures as a regular part of the program, yet do not wish to give up all the time required for a five-reel feature. Then, too, there are the smaller picture houses which must have a varied program, yet must 'turn over' their spectators many times during the day. Their patrons would not be content to see only a five-reel photodrama, but they would consider they had their money's worth with a three-reel feature, a one-reel comedy, and a reel of The Mutual Weekly, 'See America First,' or Gaumont's new single-reel release, 'Reel Life,' the Mutual Film Magazine."

BIG BROOKLYN EXHIBITOR

W. H. Kemble Bought Triangle Rights for City—Organizes Kemble Theaters Corporation and Several Others

Experience, skill and the ability to think in big sums developed the great million dollar Triangle Theater enterprise and made W. H. Kemble of Brooklyn one of the most potent factors in theatricals in the east. Kemble is the man who shattered all precedents by paying the enormous sum of $65,000 for the privilege of producing D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall where he showed it all summer to capacity business, succeeding wonderfully where other film men prophesied a loss.

W. H. Kemble.

Kemble's unrivalled success with the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," his formation of the Triangle Theater enterprises on the magnificent scale on which they are conducted, the fact that he is now furnishing the best motion picture theaters in Brooklyn with the famous Triangle Plays and that he is the head of three great enterprises, all make him a big man in the business affairs of Brooklyn.

Mr. Kemble lives in Flatbush. He is a member of many fraternal orders and clubs. For years he was a member of the Twenty-third Regiment, and belongs to the Veterans' Association of that organization.

Kemble was born in Delaware thirty-five years ago, was educated in Brooklyn Boys' High School and the University of Pennsylvania. Upon graduation he entered Wall street, he then branched out as a promoter of motion picture theaters, successfully operating a string of them. He saw what he regarded as a chance to revolutionize the entertainment business throughout the world.

When the Triangle Film Corporation was formed he sought the exclusive rights for the productions of this company in Brooklyn. He outbid all others and got them. He then obtained a lease on the old Crescent Theater, and in fourteen days transformed it into a beautiful theater.

Kemble organized the W. H. Kemble Theaters Corporation, the Big "T" Film Corporation and later the Kemble Film Corporation. These are all concerned in the management, leasing and production of photoplays.

The Kemble Film Corporation will soon make pictures of its own. A studio will be established in Brooklyn or on Long Island. Other big enterprises are being formed by Kemble and his associates.

Kemble is congenial, democratic, a smiling big man. He is a bundle of energy and nerves and his mind is keen and quick to act. He forms opinions like a flash, but is not obdurate, and will change them if argument shows him to be in error.

"Brooklyn and the theatrical business are in their infancy," said Kemble in discussing his business. "I don't think the people realize this. Brooklyn is a great city now, but we have little conception of what it will be in another five or ten years. It will pass Manhattan and be the greatest borough of the great city.

"So it is with motion picture business, despite the enormous strides it has already made. It is still in its infancy.

"I intend to grow up with Brooklyn and the motion picture business, and when they reach their maturity, then I will be happy to have been a factor in aiding their development."

PATHE'S SERIAL CONTINUED

Because of Demand from Exhibitors the Popular "Iron Claw" Will Run Twenty Episodes—Other News

The popularity of "The Iron Claw" has been proved by the many requests received by the Pathe Company from exhibitors asking that the serial be lengthened. To supply this demand the series will be continued to twenty episodes, is the announcement of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe. The serial has more than lived up to the promise of the first episodes and possesses all the elements that go to make a good picture—mystery, thrills, suspense, excellent acting and careful workmanship. The mystery and suspense have been well sustained and the more recent episodes have been even stronger than the first. Edward Jose, the producer, has spared neither pains nor money to make this picture the best ever.

Sheldon Lewis, the villain in Pathe's "The Iron Claw," pulled a good one the other day. Mr. Lewis, who had just pumped from a bridge into a river spotted with cakes of ice, was hugging a red hot stove trying to control his shivering, when the director came in and said the scene would have to be done over as the camera buckled. Lewis groaned and then replied, "I'll do it on one condition, old top." "What's that?" said Mr. Jose. "That you have the water warmed," said Mr. Lewis.

Seventeen stories above the street, in an eighty mile breeze, on a scaffold that kissed at intervals the bare, unsympathetic wall of the Gerard building at No. 729 Seventh avenue, New York, Pearl White, the Pathe "Peerless Fearless Girl," looked down into the street below, turned meditatively to the sign painter she was assisting and delivered herself as follows: "Look at those street cleaners down there, Gus, in amongst all that traffic on Broadway. There's a job I wouldn't take, if I were a man, for love nor money. Think of the chances they take!" And she turned pensively away while the crowds in the street looked up with eyes popping and mouths wide.

"Waddye mean, drawing-room experience?" said the director to whom Jackie Saunders, "The Maude Adams of the Screen," first applied for a job. Jackie hadn't ever posed for a picture before, but she'd seen many and had made a mental decision that the most difficult part of screen work to negotiate was the society stuff. Now Jackie hadn't ever mixed with the 400, but she had posed for artists, so her "drawing-room experience" was a reality. When the director found what her "drawing-room experience" had been he took a chance on the girl's native keenness to supplement her good looks and forthwith hired her. This incident was brought strongly to mind by the title of Miss Saunders' latest picture, "The Girl Who Won," a three-reeler released on the Pathe Program April 8.

Harold Lloyd, the "Lonesome Luke" of Pathe's Lonesome Luke comedies, produced by the Rolin Film Company, is a scoffer and a disbeliever in the old adages. Nothing makes Harold madder than "a-penny-saved-is-a-p e n n y-earned-start-at-the-bottom-and-work-up" stuff. To prove his point that the man who starts at the bottom of the ladder invariably does it because he hasn't brains enough to take the elevator, he tells the following story to young hopefuls who set out to conquer the world with nothing but persistency. "Ah, yes, perseverence is a great thing! A wonderful thing! Why ten years ago I knew a man who hadn't a cent to his name. He hadn't even any particular talent or training, but he was persistent and said he would persevere till he made his pile. So he started out by gathering up old bones. He found there were more bones to be gathered than he could hold without the aid of some container, so he went to a basket-maker in the city, told his story and got a basket on credit. Then he went about his business again gathering up old bones. Today that man is worth—well what do you think he's worth today?" Here the aspiring one's eyes usually gleam and he stutters something to this effect: "Oh, I don't know—millions, I suppose." "Not at all," says Lloyd, "he still owes for the basket!"

"RAMONA" IN CHICAGO

Big Clune Production Now in New York Soon to Run Also in Boston, Cleveland, Detroit and Other Cities

With the big photo drama "Ramona" firmly intrenched at the 44th Street Theater, and negotiations concluded for its presentation at the Colonial theater, Boston, beginning the latter part of May, W. H. Clune, the Pacific Coast film magnate and his associate, Lloyd Brown, have gone to Chicago to complete arrangements for the exhibition there of the elaborate cinema-drama founded on Helen Hunt Jackson's famous romance of California and the Mission Indians. While in the west they will also arrange for the presentation of "Ramona" in Cleveland, Detroit and other middle western cities.

The big Auditorium will be the summer home of "Ramona" in Chicago, the engagement opening June 19. In Detroit and Cleveland various houses are available for "Ramona" and one of the purposes of the visit of the Los Angeles men to the middle west at this time is to close deals pending for theaters in these cities.

By the middle of June "Ramona" which is in its fourth week at the 44th Street Theater, will be playing simultaneously in seven cities extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Film News From the Capital

By Thomas O. Monk,
Washington Correspondent for Motography.

SENATOR SMITH, of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, has introduced a Federal censorship bill, the text of which he has been informed has been agreed to by the welfare workers and certain motion picture companies. The draft of the measure introduced by Senator Smith was furnished by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau. The measure is along the lines of others, the text of which have appeared heretofore in Motography.

The significance of the introduction of the measure at this time by Senator Smith is that the welfare workers have appeared to have become impatient at the delay in the consideration of the new Hughes bill in the House Committee on Education and intend to try to get consideration of a Federal censorship bill in the Senate first, and after the Senate has acted to have it taken up in the House. Coincident with the introduction in the Senate of the new bill, Dr. Crafts sent out several thousand copies of a statement similar to the following to welfare papers, Sunday school superintendents and others:

"BROADSIDE OF PETITIONS NEEDED IMMEDIATELY.

"Fellow Workers with the Truth:

"I enclose a new Hughes bill for federal censorship of motion pictures, made by welfare workers and high grade film producers. The only danger now is delay. What is now needed is a swift, strong expression of public sentiment, to save motion pictures from a downward tendency, admitted by leading film men, to meet the competition of low exhibitors. An effective censorship by a commission of the same grade as the Interstate Commerce Commission would kill off the worst shows, and so divide the patronage among those of the better class. Send your petitions, one to Senate, one to House, also letters, telegrams, deputations to your own Congressman and your two Senators at once, at Washington, D. C. Let us know by carbon or postcard what you have done.

"Yours for a 'better world' here and now,

"Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts."

In connection with this "broadsides of petitions needed immediately," Dr. Crafts has left on a tour of the west to make a series of speeches to help bring the broadsides in. Dr. Crafts' itinerary covers states from West Virginia to the Pacific coast.

It remains to be seen what effect concerted action on the part of the welfare workers will have in having reported to the Senate or to the House a Federal censorship bill at the present session.

The House Committee on Education has endeavored to secure a quorum for some time to get consideration of the measure, and at the committee the statement is made that the failure is due to the fact that the House has been meeting unusually early and that more important matters have taken up the time of the members of the committee.

It will be recalled that Senator Smith early in the present session introduced in the Senate the same bill that was introduced in the House by Representative Hughes. It was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor of which Senator Smith is chairman. While there was no formal understanding on the matter, it has been taken for granted that the bill would first be taken up in the House and disposed of before being taken up in the Senate. However, it must be remembered that there is no rule on the subject and that the Senate committee can take up the measure and proceed with it without waiting for the House to act. The Senate is just as free to act in connection with legislation as the House, in initiating it or originating it with but one exception and that exception relates to revenue measures. Under the Constitution, measures for the raising of revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. In view of this, it might be well for the motion picture industry to keep in touch with the Senate committee as well as the House committee in connection with the proposal for Federal censorship of the motion pictures.

Representative Dyer, Republican, of Missouri, has introduced a bill "to prohibit exhibition or use of films or pictorial representations calculated to reflect on any race or nationality." The bill was drawn forth as the result of the exhibition here of "The Birth of a Nation," but its application is general throughout the United States. The bill provides:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States mails for mailing or delivery, or to deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, or to send or carry from one state or territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other state or territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or to bring or cause to be brought into the United States from abroad, any film or other pictorial representation based or founded on any adaptation of any book, play, or publication, under whatever name, which is designed to be used or may be used for purposes of public exhibition and which would reflect or tend to reflect on any race or nationality and subject it to unjust and unwarranted criticism or which may disturb the peaceful relations existing in a community.

"Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to take or receive from the mails, or any express company or other common carrier, with intent to sell, distribute, circulate, or exhibit any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for mailing, delivery, or carriage in interstate commerce.

"Sec. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The bill was referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Garrick theater, of Thirty-fifth street, one of the theatrical landmarks of New York, is about to change its policy and it is possible that beginning on the first of May the house will run photoplays.

NEW SELIG RED SEAL

A Real Melodrama and Several Other Dramas Completed by Selig Company for May Release Through V-L-S-E

A real motion picture melodrama with a succession of stirring situations which will make the most blase fan sit up and take notice is the Selig Red Seal play, "At Piney Ridge." This adaptation from David K. Higgins' stage success was made by Gilson Willetts. Fritzi Brunette is the lead as a girl of the mountains, and is supported by Edward J. Peil, Al. W. Filson, Wm. Scott, James Bradbury and Vivian Reed. This play will be released May 1.

Another drama completed for release May 29 is "Into the Primitive," featuring Kathlyn Williams, supported by Guy Oliver, Harry Lonsdale and Eugenie Bresserer. The drama was written by Robert Ames Bennet and produced by T. N. Heffron. During the action of this drama a herd of wild elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, a river swarming with alligators and a huge python are introduced. Also a realistic hurricane is depicted during the action, accompanied by lightning and pouring rain.

The history of Indiana as a state will be filmed by the Selig Company for future release. Director Frank Beal with several principal actors have gone to Indiana for a two weeks' sojourn and taking of the principal scenes in the film. James Whitcomb Riley is en route to Indiana from Florida and has promised to do everything possible to co-operate in the filming of historic Indiana.

"The Hard Way," a Selig multiple reel feature to be released through General Film Service May 15, was written by Russell E. Smith and produced by T. N. Heffron. Jack Pickford is the hero of this play and is supported by Sidney Smith, Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hayward, Vivian Reed and others.

A comedy to be released through General Film Service on May 20 is "A Boarding House Ham," with the action taking place in a theatrical boarding house. This comedy is full of fun and the subtitles are carried in clever verse. Among the characters presented are the Street Faker, the Animal Trainer, the Property Man, the Strong Man and the Lightning Sketch Artist.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Colin Campbell, director, have gone to St. Louis, Mo., and Vicksburg, Miss., to visit localities to be used in the production of Winston Churchill's story of "The Crisis." Mr. Selig intends later to take a company of his players south for the filming of scenes in these localities.

Fritzie Brunette has designed and made for herself a most beautiful evening gown to be worn in the production of "The Hare and the Tortoise," a forthcoming Selig production. The gown is fashioned from orange panne velvet combined with gold cloth and is trimmed with a wide girdle of rhinestones and pearls.

THOROUGHBRED "AMERICANS"

"The Abandonment," "The Highest Bid" and Several Other Unusually Powerful Plays in the Making for Mutual Program

Director Donalds MacDonald, of the American Film Company, Inc., is nearing completion of the filming of "The Abandonment," a powerful story by Kenneth B. Clarks. This is another of the series of prominent fiction to be adapted to film by President Hutchinson.

Helene Rosson and E. Forrest Taylor have the important roles in this vitally interesting story of a prominent physician who becomes a tramp. The theme, which is strikingly original, is carefully conceived and well directed. This five-reel masterpicture is to be released by Mutual in the near future.

"The Highest Bid" is the title of a five-reel American-Mutual masterpicture, nearing completion, under the direction of William Russell, who also plays the leading role opposite Charlotte Burton.

An interesting fact in connection with the filming of this story is that the mountain scenes were taken near the remote lodge of George O. Knapp, the Chicago millionaire, who owns a 160-acre game preserve located two hours' ride from the studios of the American Film Company, at Santa Barbara.

"A Courtesan," a five-reel subject, is being filmed under the direction of Arthur Maude at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc. The cast includes Eugenie Forde, Nell Franzen, Hal Cooley, Charles Wheelock, Al Fordyce and William Carroll. The Mutual schedule will carry this picture soon.

"The Overcoat," by Forrest Halsey, is now being

One of the many charming scenes in the Selig Red Seal play, "At Piney Ridge."

A hint of the unique atmosphere which will be found in the Selig Red Seal "Into the Primitive."

filmed in five reels, from a scenario by J. Edward Hungerford, under the direction of Rea Berger.

This piece of fiction is rich in historic interest, as it reproduces correctly a famous dance-hall of San Francisco's famous "Barbary Coast," which is now extinct. In one night scene there are nearly two hundred people.

The cast includes Thea Mitchell, William Stowell, Perry Banks, Clarence Burton and Warren Ellsworth.

The second "Mustang" company, under the direction of Frank Borzage, is now braving the scorching heat of the Mojave Desert, where they are filming scenes for "The Man Who Forgot," a three-reel subject in which Anna Little, Borzage and Jack Richardson play the chief parts. This subject will be announced later on the Mutual Service Schedule.

Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne, Leona Hutton and George Field make up the cast of "At the End of the Rainbow," a three-reeler being made under the "Flying A" banner by the American Film Company. Release date will be announced later by the Mutual.

PICTOGRAPHS CONTINUE STRONG

Paramount's "Magazine on the Screen" Adds New Cartoonists and Continues to Present Unique and Interesting Features

The Paramount Pictographs released the first week of May will contain some very interesting features.

"Men Who Make Us Laugh" will show the cartoonists of the daily press and the motion picture screen while at their work.

J. R. Bray, creator of Colonel Heeza Liar, leading man of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, is shown in his studio putting the finishing touches to one of his screen productions. In the same release appears the popular cartoonist, Clare S. Briggs. He is shown at his drawing board creating comedy for his "Kelly Pool" cartoons. Fontaine Fox permitted himself to be filmed as he looked when creating the adventures of Thomas Edison, Jr. Mr. Fox made his debut into motion pictures with his constant companion and pet dog "Rags," so-called because he permits himself to be used during the production of the Fox cartoons as a pen-wiper.

"Science and Invention; Candles to Electric Lights," shows how grandmother made tallow into candles to place in her quaint old candlesticks, and then how electricity stepped in to take away from women the work of cooling beef or mutton tallow in moulds to make candles and placed it in the hands of men operating switch-boards in an enormous power house of the present day, and shows how electricity is turned into the home.

The popular cartoonist, Fontaine Fox, and "how he does it," for Paramount Pictographs.

"Preparedness" is a continuation of the forceful arguments which are converting a nation to "preparedness" doctrines. To exploit this doctrine Henry Reuterdahl, greatest of naval experts, has prepared a picturization of his great story "Arm or Surrender."

In other departments of the Pictograph will appear the picturized arguments in favor of a new ABC for infants—that of etiquette—warranted to create "Better Babies" even out of good ones; "Miss Nomination," a political cartoon by J. R. Bray; and "Happifat and Flossie Fisher Take an Unexpected Buggy Ride" in the Trickids. The fourteenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-pictures takes the audience with Burton Holmes as he "hikes" with the Igorots from Baguio to Bontoc. Many quaint sights greet the eye in this release—grandmother smoking her pipe as she digs her native potatoes or "camotes," the native constabulary giving a little exhibition drill; Bontoc, the Igorot capitol; natives who shun clothes as immodest and others who thrive in raiment of their own particular type; the many weird dances at which "blood sacrifices" are compulsory; and the hike with the Igorots over wonderful mountain passes and along splendid mountain trails built by American engineers since the Spanish war.

$1000 STORY FOR IVAN

May Release of This Company Will Set New Standard for Their Productions from Standpoint of Expense

"Her Husband's Wife" is the title of the May release for the Ivan Company. This will be one of the most expensive features ever put out by this company and will set a new and higher standard for them. The story is by Ivan Abramson, and one Broadway manager who desired to use it as a vehicle for one of his stars offered one thousand dollars for the manuscript alone. This manager did not want to use the manuscript as written but desired to rewrite it and build all the situations around the stellar role. When he found that Abramson refused to sell at this price he offered the same sum for the use of the "vampire" part alone, and pointed out to the director that even without this strong lead character he had four parts, about any one of which he could write a scenario much better than the average.

However, these offers did not appear enticing to the director, and he saw no occasion to rewrite the scenario, so "Her Husband's Wife" will be produced as originally written. The thousand dollar vampire part will be portrayed by Sally Crute, who is well able to bring out all that the character offers.

Mignon Anderson will also have a very strong part in the rising young artist who is torn between love for her art and love for the man.

Augustus Phillips will play the lead and the other big parts will be enacted by William Bechtel, Brindsley Shaw, Bradley Baker and Guido Colucci.

The production of this play promised to be well done because with the exception of one member of the cast all the other actors have worked together under one director from one to five years, a very unusual combination in a production.

"God's Country and the Woman"

Special Blue Ribbon Feature Is Impressive. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

GREATLY profiting by the grandeur of the locations in which its action is set, "God's Country and the Woman" is a film drama of considerable depth and impressiveness. Again Rollin Sturgeon, who produced this story of the Northwest for Vitagraph, shows himself, in a big way, to be a director possessing rare skill in procuring striking scenic effect without sacrificing the story to the interests of pictorial magnificence.

One might say that this eight-reel production places itself with the best that have come to the screen this year, little fearing that the statement will be dubiously taken. And that the greater credit for the success of the picture as one of deep and wide appeal belongs to Mr. Sturgeon is something equally free from grounds for doubt. The story the director had to work with is one of no little merit, while the camera man and the players aided in a most commendable manner.

Though "God's Country and the Woman" is a picture presenting brilliant opportunities for special musical accompaniment of an attractive character, advantage of this valuable asset was not taken during its run at the Fulton Theater, New York, last week. Another fact of interest to the exhibitor is that this picture is a splendid subject for special lobby-display. "God's Country and the Woman" is well worth the expenditure of the high-class exhibitor's most able efforts.

The story tells of a young woman who lives with her parents in the Hudson Bay country. Josephine Adare finds no task that will help the poor trappers and their families too arduous, and they appreciate her many kindnesses; later in the play they willingly risk their lives to save her from the toils of Arnold Lang, the brutal proprietor of a dive called "The Devil's Nest," which is the resort of all the rough characters who come to the locality.

After Lang's statement that he is determined to marry Josephine, the story skips over a period of a year and a half. When Josephine is next seen she is greatly troubled by some past event which she keeps a secret from her new acquaintance, Philip Weyman, who promises to help her while remaining in the dark regarding many strange circumstances. The baby Josephine cares for, and which he believes to be hers, later developments, which are cut-backs to action having occurred during the period passed over, prove the child to be her mother's by Lang, a beast who would use this means to force Josephine to become his wife. Both the mother, who Josephine shielded, and the child die, and all knowledge of the tragedy is kept from Mr. Adare. Lang and his close companion are killed. Josephine and Weyman marry.

We do not consider that anything was gained by jumping the story over the developments which have such a weighty bearing on Josephine's future course, and showing them in cut-backs. What suspense is created in this manner is overbalanced by the spectator's confusion in the effort to grasp the trend of the action. These situations are the real vital ones of the play, and the spectator should be acquainted with them as they take place.

Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt are the leading players. Edgar Keller, splendid as Jean Croisset; William Bainbridge, Nell Clark Keller and George Kunkel complete a cast of uniform ability. Miss Shipman, in a grateful part, pleases mightily, and fills one with a desire to see her in more picture dramas. Mr. Duncan poses his way through much of the picture, but he is satisfactory in the final analysis, and George Holt's performance is brilliant. Each member of this cast is deserving of praise.

"The Kiss of Hate"

Columbia-Metro Drama With Ethel Barrymore Released April 3. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE general feeling after seeing this film is that, although the story is compelling enough and set in appropriate surroundings, there is too much barbarous cruelty depicted to produce good dramatic effect. There may be a reason for some of this and some of it is well acted, but the rest is unpleasant. In the main the settings are excellent for a Russian story. Those taken in the ruins of an old abbey are particularly effective, and while snowstorm scenes may not be especially rare in pictures, those used in this film are so real and well-photographed that one can almost feel the flakes.

The story deals with the persecution of the Jews and those who attempt to aid them. One of their fast friends is Count Turgeneff, governor of the province. Indeed he is such a worker for justice that the cruel Prefect of Police, Orzoff, makes an immediate move to have him dethroned and later assassinated. Then, through his influence at Petrograd, Orzoff becomes governor himself. He forces his attentions upon Nadia, Turgeneff's daughter, who finally agrees to his proposal in order to free her brother, Paul, then being persecuted. Nadia makes her way to the prison to free Paul, but finds that both he and Isaac, a leader of the Jews, have been sent to Siberia. With a stalwart peasant, Goliath, she rushes after her brother and rescues him.

By chance Nadia and her wounded brother, for he had tried to escape exile, come upon the hut of Sergius, the sportsman son of Orzhoff. They accept his hospitality without knowing his identity. Nadia and Sergius fall deeply in love with each other, but when she discovers who he is, she flees under cover of the night with Isaac and Goliath.

The Jews decide to avenge themselves by taking the lives of both Orzoff and his son. Rather than have hateful hands touch her lover, Nadia decides to kill him, and herself at the same time. She plunges her knife into the body of Sergius, the son of her wicked enemy, but is prevented from doing the same thing to herself by the servants. Believing his sweetheart wished his death, Sergius will not allow his wound to be treated. He is informed by Isaac, however, of Nadia's true love and also learns for the first time of his father's wickedness. Orzhoff begs Nadia to save her son. She agrees to go to him after the father has written a full confession of his crime. Orzoff will not allow the girl to reveal his relations with her to Sergius. While they argue over this point the enraged Jews, not knowing Nadia is within, fire the house. Nadia runs to her lover's arms and they both die amid the flames.

Ethel Barrymore is very pleasing in the role of Nadia, although it does not offer her exceptional opportunities. There is no trace of overacting in her several dramatic scenes. H. Cooper Cliffe makes a typical remorseless villain out of Orzhoff, and Robert Elliot is good as Sergius, the son, although it is a rather small part. Other very good members of the cast are William L. Abington, Niles Welch and Roy Applegate.

"The Conscience of John David"

Mutual Masterpicture Featuring Crane Wilbur Released April 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE Conscience of John David" is pre-eminently a Crane Wilbur offering, inasmuch as he is author, director and star. And all these offices are capably filled, the result being the best picture this actor has appeared in for some time. The story has a number of good situations and engenders interest, although it does not always convince. The idea of the man's struggles with conscience is well handled. The photography and settings are in good taste.

The picture was produced by David Horsley. Alice Rinaldo, Frederick Montague, John Caker, Mae Gaston, Louis Durham and Francis Raymond constitute the supporting cast.

In the opening scenes we are shown how John David, a rich idler, is preparing to marry a worldly woman who has her eye on his riches. His rival, the libertine, adores this woman, but laughs at the idea of marriage. It is not long before John loses his entire fortune and with it all his shallow friends. At the woman's apartment he discovers her in the arms of the libertine and learns that the latter is now her accepted lover. Furious, John attacks his rival and leaves him dead over the lounge, supposedly strangled. It is shown, however, that a Jap, whose wife the libertine had insulted, is the murderer, using a poisonous needle from his place of concealment under the lounge.

David makes for the West, becomes postman in a small rural community, falls in love with a girl and feels secure, inasmuch as he has heard of his former fiancee's indictment. Some time later John finds that a reward for his capture is out and he realizes that his time for marrying the girl is short. During the wedding ceremony, however, John's conscience—typified from time to time by the appearance of a counseling friend—gets the best of him, and he loudly proclaims himself to be a murderer. Only a little time before, the detective who has come for him receives a message telling of the Jap's dying confession. The detective announces this glad news to the guests and the wedding ceremony is continued.

"The Heart of Nora Flynn"

A Five-Part Lasky-Paramount Drama Released April 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

FASCINATING Marie Doro finds the role of an Irish nurse girl in this picture full of opportunities for human, heart-to-heart acting and handles this part, which is rather novel for her, with great appeal. Much that is delightful enters into this characterization. Although in facial appearance she does not look the part of an Irish maid, she is well suited to its requirements. Nora, indeed, has a heart—one which is big enough to cause her to sacrifice her reputation in order to bring about peace in the family employing her and to save the two children who are in her charge.

Artistic and skilful production is a prominent part of "The Heart of Nora," and as for the story—it holds to the finish and has a good moral effect. The dainty and characteristic child-acting done by "Little Billy" Jacobs and Peggy George is ever a source of amusement and charm. Elliott Dexter plays convincingly the part of Nolan, Nora's chauffeur lover. Others in the cast are Ernest Joy, Lola May, Charles West and Mrs. Lewis McCord. Hector Turnbull's story was scenarioized by Jeanie MacPherson. The picture was directed by Cecil B. De Mille.

Besides the love affair of the chauffeur and the governess, there is another, less romantic, between Mrs. Stone, the lady of the house, and an unprincipled man by the name of Murray. While Mr. Stone is at the club he hears that Murray is calling at his home, concluding he is infatuated with either Mrs. Stone or the pretty maid. Nolan hears this also, and, as he is jealous by nature, orders to drive home at break-neck speed meet with his entire approval.

Murray has persuaded the dissatisfied and spoiled wife to go away with him and they are about to leave when the lights of Stone's car flash through the window. Settling accounts with a motorcycle officer delays Stone in entering the house and gives the secret lovers a chance to prepare. Mrs. Stone appeals to Nora to save her from exposure. The maid takes Murray upstairs to conceal him. Although she pleads with the man, he makes straight for her bedroom and locks himself in.

When Stone enters the house he finds his wife in a very tranquil state. She denies any knowledge of Murray's being there, but says that perhaps Nora knows something about him. Whereupon Nolan wrenches his employer's revolver from him and dashes upstairs in a jealous rage. Finding Nora in front of the locked door does not ease his mind any. He finally catches Murray on the lawn below and wounds him. Nolan is taken into custody, but the next day is released by Murray's order.

Rather than have anything happen to the two children whom she has learned to love, Nora bears all the shame that comes her way and will not allow her lover to clear her name. Nora has forced Mrs. Stone to admit the truth to Nolan, who has to be satisfied with the mere fact of his sweetheart's innocence. Stone disdainfully orders his servants out of the house, but as they leave, Nora sees the family in a happy scene, and admits that the children's future is worth her sacrifice.

"The Law Decides"

A V. L. S. E. Blue Ribbon Seven-Reel Drama Released April 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS offering, a lengthy but entertaining sociological drama, holds steadily to its story and relies upon it, together with impressive acting, for its appeal as a seven-reel feature. Sensational feats or spectacular efforts hold no place in it. The story is told in leisurely, narrative style, and in its completeness and stability is most interesting. It is from the pen of Marguerite Bertsch, and has been given forceful interpretation by Director William P. S. Earle.

Dorothy Kelly, Donald Hall and Harry Morey play the important roles. It is good to see Donald Hall in a more prominent part than he usually gets. As an impersonator of the polished gentleman this actor is in a class by himself. Other members of the splendid cast are Adele Kelly, Bobby Connelly and Louise Beaudet, the latter making a cold-blooded, intriguing step-mother par excellence.

Dorothy Kelly, as capable of deep emotion as of vivacity, portrays with fine human feeling the part of Florence Wharton, the wife who suffers separation from her husband because of the carefully laid plot of her husband's step-mother, who tries to arrange things so that Wharton will marry her daughter, Beatrice. Mrs. Wharton knows that if John Wharton marries her daughter, his fortune will revert to them.

The mother's instrument is Lorenz, who wins Florence away from her husband by trickery. Wharton divorces Florence, whose only honorable recourse is to marry Lorenz. The custody of the child is awarded to Wharton. A pathetic part of the story embraces the secret meetings Florence has with Bobby.

Beatrice, who really loves Lorenz, is finally persuaded by her mother to marry Wharton, but before the wedding, she and Lorenz decide to elope to distant lands. Florence at last learns of the part which John's step-mother played in their separation. When Lorenz learns that all is known, he commits suicide. Florence and John, whose enduring love has long since been discovered by each through Bobby, now are reunited. The repentant Mrs. Wharton, punished by her daughter's suffering, packs up and leaves the Wharton home for good.

"None So Blind"

Three-Reel Lubin Drama Released May 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY worked out naturally and with a number of interesting developments is this three-reeler which Melvin Mayo directed from a story by C. A. Frambers. It deals with an unjust accusation brought against Lieutenant Fred Watson (Walter Spencer) an inspector for the U. S. navy. The title of the play refers to the blindness of legal justice, which in this case makes a mistake.

Milton Hesser (Cecil Van Auber), agent for a company building a submarine for the navy, tries in vain to bribe the inspector. The submarine is rejected as unfit for service and Hesser in revenge determines to ruin Watson. He gains an influence over Watson's secretary, Madge, a role especially well played by Ruth Saville. Together they arrange a letter written by Watson, making it appear that he asked for a large sum of money for approving the ship. Since Madge has destroyed the carbon of the original letter, Watson cannot prove his innocence and he resigns from the service and goes to the Philippines.

Watson is in love with Gladys Remington (Evelyn Page), but her parents prefer that she marry the wealthy Hesser. With Watson away, Hesser's affair with Gladys progresses until it arouses the jealousy of Madge, who threatens to reveal the plot against Watson with her short-hand note book as evidence. Gladys overhears the conversation and persuades the girl to help her gain justice for Watson. They are successful and the inspector is cleared.

In the meantime, Watson, in the Philippines, has been drowning his troubles in drink until he is reformed through the influence of a native girl, Ukana, a role taken by Nona Darkfeather. He promises to marry Ukana, but before the event takes place, Gladys, her mother and party in a private yacht, arrive in the village. Watson still loves Gladys, but feels bound to Ukana. However, a group of ruffians plan to rob the yacht, and Ukana, who overhears the plot, warns Watson, who is on board. But she is killed in a struggle with the robbers, leaving Watson free to return to his old life with Gladys.

There are a number of very pretty scenes in the part of the play depicting the island life. The story is attractively presented, the events clear and the characters well portrayed.

"The Closed Road"

World-Paragon Five-Reel Feature Scheduled for Early Release. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

HOUSE PETERS and Barbara Tennant are the featured leads in a most original story in this offering. House Peters has not had a better part than this in a long time. He is always at his best when playing the part of a bachelor who is suddenly thrown in with complete strangers under circumstances that are most peculiar, and this is one of those parts. Barbara Tennant in the opposite role plays the part in her usual charming and efficient way. It is a story that is not too full of the love element. It is not apparent at the very outset that Miss Tennant is eventually going to become the bride of Mr. Peters.

At the beginning they are as far apart as the two poles, so far as any chance of their knowing each other is concerned. In fact the two lovers do not meet until well beyond the middle of the story, and right up to the end it does not seem that there is a chance on earth for their ever getting together. By the girl's efforts, he is saved from the electric chair at the last moment, and the rest is easy to imagine.

This is one of the best features that has come along this season. It holds water at all points. The story is logical and original, the direction is artistic and clever, the photography is brilliant, the acting is very fine, and the settings are gorgeous and magnificent, according to whether they are indoors or outside. What more an exhibitor could ask in the way of a feature would be difficult to imaine. The story was written and directed by that master mind of picturedom, Maurice Tourneur. The production was photographed by John v. d. Broeck, whose work is altogether praiseworthy.

The plot is worth relating in brief. It tells of a young physician and his uncle, also a physician, both of whom are experimenting on a cancer cure, but lack funds to make the proper progress. A certain clubman owes the young doctor money, and the uncle goes to his rooms to demand it in behalf of his nephew. It seems that the uncle has a mania for watching people die. He poisons the clubman, and after he is dead shoots him a couple of times with his nephew's revolver, and leaves it there to give the appearance of suicide. The revolver is easily identified, and the young physician is sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Meanwhile the insane uncle is called upon by House Peters, whose heart is bothering him a little. The crazy physician tells him he has heart disease in the worst form, and has only six months to live. The information is entirely false, but House Peters decides he will beat nature by committing suicide. Miss Tennant being told by her uncle that the man would probably commit suicide, hastens after him and stops him just in the act of self-destruction. She persuades him to confess the murder with which her brother is charged, inasmuch as he cannot live long anyhow. He does as the girl wishes, and her brother is released. Peters is duly sentenced to the electric chair, but is horrified to learn after it is too late, that he has a perfectly sound heart. He is caught like a rat in a trap, but Miss Tennant is working tooth and nail to find the real murderer. It does not develop until near the end who the murderer is, because the witnesses cannot be found, but in the end it turns out to be the old uncle.

The way the suspense is sustained in this picture is truly remarkable. The producer has done this without once showing the stereotyped details of a courtroom or of Mr. Peters strapped in the electric chair. He shows everything about the courthouse except the courtroom, and he shows everything about Sing Sing prison except the death chair. These he leaves to the imagination, and the imagination easily supplies the rest.

As a feature it is going to be a knock-out. Nothing more original or better directed has been seen this season, and nobody would ask to see a better production.

"The Crippled Hand"

Bluebird Five-Reel Drama Released May 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE method of presentation of this story is especially interesting. That ever-popular fairy tale, "Cinderella," is beautifully picturized, together with a simple but rather unusual modern version of the story. The producers have shown skill in producing a certain atmosphere and in sustaining it throughout five reels without monotony. The lighting effects and the camera work are excellent.

Ella Hall is a pleasing Cinderella in each story. She is a poor little girl who lives in an attic somewhere in a city. At night she reads fairy tales and, looking over the lighted city, dreams of the interesting things that are taking place there. These are beautiful pictures of the city streets, and above them, in the clouds, appear the visualized dreams of the little girl. In the day time, the girl works in a department store and to her the haughty saleswomen seem like the proud sisters and the stepmother in the fairy tale. Their actions are exaggerated a bit for they are shown as they appear to the little girl.

In the meantime, in "The Land of Make-Believe," which is stageland, a wealthy man is backing a musical comedy company, whose leading lady is in love with him. As an advertising stunt for the play, which is a Cinderella story, they offer a part in the production to the girl who can wear a tiny slipper they place on exhibit. The girl, who has lost her position in the store, chances to hear of the contest and in it she becomes the winner. She is given a part in the chorus, and though she is not wonderfully successful as an actress, she wins the heart of the rich man.

An outcast with a crippled hand is introduced early in the story, but his importance is not shown until near the end of the play when it is revealed that he is the husband of the actress and was formerly a musician. Although it was by her that his hand was injured, thus putting an end to his career, she had deserted him. On the opening night of the play, he tries to kill her, but is prevented by the little girl. Instead he forgives her and the two are reconciled. And as the rich man turns to the little "Cinderella," the modern scene is replaced by a scene from the fairy tale and the play ends with the lines of the fairy tale, "They lived happily ever after."

There are a number of very pleasing pictures from the fairy tale throughout the drama, in which we meet the fairy godmother, see pumpkin and rats changed into the coach and horses, and have a glimpse of the prince's ball. The production, which was directed by Robert Leonard and David Kirkland, is light and imaginative in tone throughout. There are touches of humor in many of the modern scenes, particularly in those of the shoe fitting contest and in the stage scenes.

Robert Leonard plays the rich man, Gladys Rockwell the actress and Kingsley Benedict the man with the crippled hand.

"The Chain Invisible"

A Five-Part Equitable Release for April 24th. Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

STORIES of a ship wrecked man and woman being thrown together on a desert island, have a great fascination for playrights. They find in that situation a convenient vehicle to bring out the fact that, with civilization removed, a man becomes savage and is apt to go about his mating a good deal as his caveman ancestor went forth with a club and proved his love to his future wife by hitting her over the head, and carrying her home with him. This story is not exactly that kind of a story in its general circumstances, but it becomes that kind of a story once the man and woman are thrown together on the island.

Such stories as this are mostly intended to remind us that human nature has not changed one iota since the world began. The argument of them is, that were it not for the laws made by men, we would all quickly go back to the Adam and Eve style of living, which argument is basically sound. This story differs from the usual run of desert island stories, because the man in this case is a savage before they ever get to the island. He is a backwoods lumberman who has sold out to the trust at an enormous figure, and has tried to get into society without any result. From an ocean liner he throws the girl of his heart overboard and jumps in after her to the rescue. This was the only way he could get her, because she had resented his lack of manners previously and had engaged herself to a designing nobleman. He found a piece of floating wreckage, and they finally arrived on a desert island according to his plan.

On the desert island, the author has dwelt upon the fact that nature will take its course. In time the woman comes to love the man, and in the course of time a child is born to them. A searching party finally comes to the island, and the woman and child are rescued, but the evil suitor of her former days, reports that her companion has fallen over a cliff and lost his life. The woman returns to civilization, and in time marries the nobleman. About four years afterward the father of the child returns to civilization, after being rescued from the island. He afterwards finds the mother of his child. Her evil husband commits suicide rather than face the consequences of his treachery.

It is a mighty absorbing tale and one that is skillfully produced and finely photographed. Bruce McRae is so admirably masculine in his portrayal of the uncouth lumberman, that he is powerfully convincing at all times. Anyone could hardly blame any man for wishing to have a woman like Gerda Holmes for his very own. She is the kind of woman that men would fight for under just such circumstances, and her work goes a long way toward making the production realistic. There are few classier heavy men on the screen or on the stage than Alfred Hickman. He is so extremely artistic and convincing that it is really a pleasure to watch his work, even though it be the work of a deep-dyed villain.

With such an excellent cast, and all things else of the same high standard, the picture cannot help being a first-class feature.

"The Mysteries of Myra"

First Two Episodes of International Film Service Serial. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WITH the release of the first episode of the serial photoplay by Charles W. Goddard and Hereward Carrington entitled "The Mysteries of Myra," the International Film Service makes its technical entry into the film industry, its real entry into the art-industry took place some time ago. Even for a concern so obviously destined to hold an imposingly prominent and ornate niche in the hall of film fame, the release which marks its van is auspicious in no conventional sense of the word.

The first two episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra" were projected in advance of their release atop the New York Theater. The beginning of this continued story dealing with occult phenomena is, without exception, the most promising and striking of any serial picture thus far offered, and this is said with due consideration for the high quality which characterized the beginning and was sustained by the several successful installment pictures presented to date. If the standard of the first episode is maintained, and it is maintained in the second chapter, as far as two more reels of the story can maintain it, then one cannot down the thought that, owing to the quality of the picture and the wide heralding it will receive, "The Mysteries of Myra" will be successful to a sensational degree.

The story advanced in the two episodes contains the elements which make for popular appeal. The story's basis is that which interests all types and classes. Best described as occult phenomena, the influence which one mind exerts upon another has for some time past and continues to be a fertile field for the story writer. Whether treated in romantic or serious fashion, stories dealing with this subject are extensively popular. The material is treated comprehensively and intermingled with this is deep human interest and colorful romance. Mr. Carrington is recognized as one of the foremost students of the occult and Mr. Goddard, it is well known, has a deep knowledge of what is demanded to make a picture or a stage play appealing to the public. Even if this story achieves a success beyond expectations one need look no further than the names of the co-authors for the explanation.

The production is in the hands of the Whartons, whose past success in producing serial plays makes calculations as to the ability of those whose work it is to visualize the story, unnecessary. Howard Esterbrook and Jean Sothern have the leading parts. It is only necessary to consider the roles in which they are cast to realize the splendid judgment shown in casting the play. Some may wonder a bit at our great enthusiasm in regarding the beginning of this new serial, but, we feel sure, those who have seen the four reels will not.

In the first chapter we learn that Myra's father was a member of an organization known as the Black Order and according to the terms of his will his fortune is to go to the Order in the event of the death of his three daughters, previous to their eighteenth birthday. Myra's two older sisters died under strange circumstances on the eve of their eighteenth birthdays. The Order holds complete sway over its members. Arthur Varney belongs to the Order. He is in love with Myra and pleads with the Grand Master for her life, but this is refused. Varney therefor though unwilling is forced to help destroy Myra.

Dr. Payson Alden (Howard Estabrook) receives mysterious warnings to cease his investigations into the occult. He is acquainted with the circumstances of the deaths of Myra's older sisters and he saves her from a like end on the eve of her birthday. Myra becomes somnambulistic. This is explained by the telepathic influence which the Order exercises over Myra's mind. In the second episode the Order makes another attempt upon Myra's life which almost causes the death of their enemy, Dr. Payson. In this portion of the story Myra learns the dangers confronting her and both she and her mother depend upon Payson to aid them.

"The Beggar of Cawnpore"

Triangle-Ince Story of India. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

IN point of impressiveness H. B. Warner's depiction of an English army surgeon in the service in India who becomes a physical and moral wreck through the use of narcotics, ranks with an elaborate and spectacular production given this story by C. Gardner Sullivan, an imposingly prolific writer of scenarios whose work is consistently satisfactory. "The Beggar of Cawnpore," an Ince production showing at the Knickerbocker this week, is in six reels. The piece has been staged on a large scale, there being expansive battle scenes and mass effects, which immeasurably heighten the value of the story since it was to be told in six reels.

There is only one incident which we believe could be dispensed with to great advantage to the whole. This is where the besieged Britishers' water supply gives out, and two brave men give up their lives to secure a jug of water from the well directly under the enemy's fire. That very thing has happened in pictures often enough to make us justly weary of it, and in this case it is not justified on the ground of contributing anything to the story itself. Aside from that one bit of by-play the six reels of "The Beggar of Cawnpore" are interesting enough to suit the highly developed taste for action of the confirmed picture fan.

Mr. Warner is a good type for the part and he is thoroughly convincing in his portrayal of Dr. Robert Lowndes. Lowndes puts forth every means known to his science to save the life of the engineer in charge of construction work at an isolated post in India, but he is unsuccessful. The natives flee, fearing that the engineer was a victim of the cholera. Driven to it by the barren loneliness of the parched desert, Lowndes turns to the use of a narcotic for relief.

When he returns to Delhi he confesses that he has indulged his desire for the drug to Betty Archer, to whom he is engaged. He breaks his promise to her and on the advice of her father, Lowndes departs from Delhi and his fiancee. Six months later he is seen in Cawnpore, living and associating with beggars and thieves. He again sees Betty, who is now married to Captain Douglas, and, inspired by a spark of his former self, he successfully weathers the tortures of a struggle to overcome his weakness. A coward, Captain Douglas is killed in the rebellion and the reformed Lowndes is reunited with Betty.

Charles Swickard produced the picture, and his treatment of the subject is commendable. Lola May is a charming Betty. Wyndham Standing, H. E. Entwistle, A. F. Hollingsworth and Wedgwood Nowell make up the balance of the cast. The effects in battle, street and desert scenes are striking and atmospherical.

"The Secret of the Submarine"

First Three Episodes of the "Flying A" Mutual Serial Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE are a number of elements in the plot and in the presentation of American Film Corporation film novel, judging from the first three installments, which are likely to make it a strong drawing card. Timeliness is an important feature. Submarines are receiving close attention at present, and such an invention as that dealt with, which, we are told, is not impossible, would be of vital importance in history. The scenes depicting events in the interior of the submarine, in the first two chapters, are interesting in themselves alone, apart from the story.

Having selected a fortunate subject, the producers have elaborated it into a swiftly moving, cleverly complicated story. In fact, the story is the important thing in this feature and while thrills and spectacular events are part of each chapter, they are not allowed to obscure the plot. Rather, they emphasize it.

The leads in the drama, Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen as Lieutenant Jarvis Hope, a U. S. officer, and Cleo Burke, the daughter of the inventor, are attractive players and will add to their personal following of film "fans" in these roles. The supporting cast is interesting, and the characters stand out vividly.

Necessarily, much of the first episode is used in introducing the important members of the cast. In his laboratory we meet Dr. Burke (Hugh Bennett), studying his various experiments, chief among them one which will enable subsea boats to take their supply of air from the sea itself. His daughter Cleo (Miss Hansen) is the first to be told of the success of the invention, which Dr. Burke then offers to his country. The hero, Lieutenant Hope, is introduced when he is sent to investigate the worth of the reported invention and to buy it for the government, if it proves satisfactory.

Other important characters are "Hook" Barnacle, a one-armed seaman with a great curiosity about the invention, an amusing role played by George Clancy; Satsuma, a Japanese spy, very cleverly portrayed by William Tedmarsh, who learns of the invention through "Hook," his superior, Mahlin (George Webb); Olga Ivanhoff, a Russian adventuress in the secret service of her country, whom Hylda Hollis competently interprets, and her agent, Sextus (Harry Edmondson). These foreign agents at once take steps to gain possession of "the secret of the submarine," and in addition, a wealthy lobbyist, Calvin Montgomery (Joseph Beaudry), sends his nephew, Gerald Morton (Lamar Johnstone), to buy the invention for their personal advantage.

The characters introduced and the plots and sub-plots suggested, the story begins with the demonstration of the invention. Dr. Burke, Cleo and Lieut. Hope are in the boat, and the invention is working well. But, unknown to the others, Satsuma is concealed on board and when the others are at lunch, he examines the machine. He is discovered, and in the struggle the invention is disabled. Satsuma escapes through the conning tower. The water rushes into the boat and the others are left to what sems certain death, when the first chapter ends.

The second chapter shows their escape when the incoming waters are checked and the air machine repaired and set in motion. Hope recommends the purchase of the invention.

Later Morton arrives and tries to purchase the machine for his uncle. Meantime the agents of Japan and Russia, are plotting to capture the plans. That night Sextus and Satsuma break into the house, meet in the laboratory and have a violent encounter. After that Dr. Burke fears for his own life and calls Cleo's attention to the value of his books, should she be left alone. The next night he is murdered.

When the murder is discovered, in the third chapter, Morton, who calls at the house, calls attention to a button which he declares is in the dead man' hand. "Hook" has already removed the button and he suspects that Morton himself may have put it there to throw suspicion on Hope.

Cleo, left without property, sells her father's books, without examining them, keeping only the Bible. Then, too late, she finds a note in the book declaring that concealed in one of the other books there is a cipher code explaining "the secret of the submarine," and in another there is the key to the cipher. While it seems a little stupid of Cleo to misunderstand her father's remark about the value of his books and to sell them, her act offers a chance for a most interesting struggle for the discovery and possession of the plans.

The books are already sold, but the agent has a list of the purchasers. Satsuma learns their value and goes to the city to get the list. Hope and Cleo also go by automobile, and there is a wild race in the course of which leaps a wide gap in a broken bridge. But the Jap arrives first and being unable to secure the purchase list, burns the original. So Cleo and Hope have not even that to guide them.

George Sargent is the director of the serial, which is taken from a story by Russell B. Smith. The scenario was prepared by C. R. Hoadley and William Barker. If the succeeding installments are as clear and interesting and well done as the first three the serial will be decidedly entertaining to the majority of puicture theater patrons.

"The No-Good Guy"

William Collier Scores in Triangle-Ince Comedy Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE NO GOOD GUY" brings William Collier to the screen in a way that one has a right to expect of a comedian who has long held a conspicuous place among the foremost laugh-makers of the stage. Aided by a story that serves his purposes well and direction equally strong in this respect, Collier has no difficulty in keeping the spectator amused through five reels of film containing innumerable comical incidents.

Mr. Collier is Jimmy Coghlan, who is no good. The title introducing Walter Edwards as Jimmy's valet states that Hawkins has the hardest job in the world, and when Jimmy comes home from the party that night one appreciates the truth of those words. With a rich uncle to supply him with money for really gay parties and a chronic thirst, Jimmy is notorious from one end of the city to the other.

In all he does Mr. Collier is funny. His work registers and, looked at from all viewpoints, he is one of the most amusing good-for-nothings one could desire. The business is remarkably good. Director Walter Edwards used everything within the grasp of the producer of motion pictures, slapstick and trick photography included, in staging C. Gardner Sullivan's story. In no instance is there recourse to business or incident that would tend to make the actions of a man who takes entirely too much drink anything but comical.

In the first scene we learn from Jimmy's rich uncle that the wild one has climbed aboard the water wagon. But driving a water wagon is uninteresting, the seat is uncomfortable and when Jimmy comes to a stone in the road he quits. That evening he celebrates. Just a few minutes before dawn he leaves the cafe, in an auto, which he speeds up and drives through a store window. This escapade lands him in jail, but as uncle has influence and Jimmy promises to go to work his sojourn there is brief. In order to work he opens a detective agency and lives in fear that he will get a case. He does, finally, and here some exciting adventures with black hand gangs give him control of uncle, rich political boss, and in the end he promises to live on a farm with the pretty girl he has won.

Enid Markey plays opposite Mr. Collier. Miss Markey heads a cast including Charles K. French, Robert Kortman, J. Frank Burke and Walter Edwards, all of whom do good work.

"Lying Lips"

Five-Reel American Mutual Masterpicture Released May 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WINNIFRED GREENWOOD has an unusually attractive role in this drama as the actress who gives up her work because of love for her husband and later, risking his displeasure, returns to the stage in order to aid him. As Emily Alden, Miss Greenwood plays in a sincere and forceful way which at once wins sympathy and interest. The story itself is interesting and plausible and the release forms a most pleasing entertainment.

Franklin Ritchie is well cast as Neal Frazer, an artist. At the theater one night, he saves the life of the leading lady, Emily Alden, whose gown takes fire when an accident occurs on the stage. The actress and the artist are mutually attracted and later fall in love. Frazer does not wish his wife to appear on the stage and Emily, in marrying him, agrees to give up her work.

Frazer's sister, Wanda, is the wife of Arnold Howard, a stock broker. She is an idle, vain woman and spends much of her time in the company of Douglas Stevens, a wealthy clubman. Eugenie Forde interprets Wanda skillfully, while Roy Stewart appears as Stevens. Clarence Burton is Arnold Howard and his acting, especially in the scene when, his fortune gone, the man knows that even his wife will turn against him and decides to commit suicide, is very convincing. Howard has lost not only his own fortune but also funds which Frazer had lent him from money held in trust for an art association. After Howard's death, Wanda lives at her brother's home. Then Frazer, from overwork in an attempt to restore the money, becomes ill and the entire burden falls on his wife's shoulders.

At this time, Emily receives an offer to revive her former stage success, and knowing that her husband would not approve, she does not let him know. While he is ill, she earns money to pay his debts. Wanda, the sister, after quarrelling with Emily, turns again to Stevens. But when Frazer finds a note from Stevens, she leads him to think it addressed to Emily and that it was from Stevens that Emily took the money to pay their debts. Emily, when she returns from the evening's performance, believes that her husband's anger is because of her return to the stage, and heart-broken at his lack of appreciation of her work, she leaves him. Some time later Frazer learns the truth, that his sister is the guilty one, and he and his wife are reconciled.

Julian L. Lamothe is the author of the story, which Edward Sloman directed. The material is well handled and the events clearly presented. The interest is well sustained throughout.

"The Half Million Bribe"

Metro Picturization of the "Red Mouse." Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

SCENARIOIZED by Harry O. Hoyt and produced under the direction of Edgar Jones, "The Red Mouse," a former stage success by William Hamilton Osborne, is offered by Metro under the title of "The Half Million Bribe," a film whose five reels present several not very well joined but interest-compelling developments. A perspective of the story presents a rather scattered aspect, but its many pleasing, though episodic phases sustain interest as they arise and are completed.

Marguerite Snow, who never fails to make the character she enacts attractive, and Hamilton Revelle are the leading members of the cast. Mr. Revelle, whose former Metro appearances were under such advantageous conditions, has no exceptional opportunities as Challoner, an idler who reaches the gutter practically, before he is brought to a realization of what real character he possesses. Also, Miss Snow has little to do as his faithful wife. But despite these facts Miss Snow is a charming figure in this story and Mr. Revelle does well what satisfactory work he has to do.

The story begins with a mystery which is never fully cleared up until the end, the spectator being kept in the dark concerning facts which really should not be withheld. Challoner is accused of the murder committed in a gambling den. At the trial the manager of the resort and a servant give evidence which convicts him. The conviction comes as a surprise to Miriam, who has given her fortune to the district attorney on assurance from him that he would free her husband. She reproaches him but he calmly retorts that he has not said when he will secure Challoner's release.

Fortunately for the Challoners and the district attorney who apparently has no foundation on which to base his confidence that the convicted man would be cleared, the manager is struck on the head by some crooks and he makes a dying confession which proves that Challoner, who is himself convinced that he murdered Hargraves, is innocent. The attorney leads Challoner to believe that the confession is a fake. Later, when he reforms, Challoner learns the truth and his wife receives her half million back from the district attorney, who took this means of making a man of Lawrence.

The play is well mounted and photographed. Carl Brickert, John Smiley and Carol Seymour are entrusted with the other important parts, while Walter Hitchcock and Fred Heck are satisfactory villains.

"The Red Widow"

John Barrymore Seen in Famous Players-Paramount Comedy. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A SCREEN version of "The Red Widow" shows John Barrymore at his best as a film comedian. This comedy by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf has been picturized by the Famous Players with a great deal of success. "The Red Widow" is a continuously enjoyable photoplay and one that will find responsive audiences everywhere.

The rather clever comic opera plot offers John Barrymore admirable opportunities, and he makes "The Red Widow" an uncommonly good picture. From beginning to end the film is consistently interesting and amusing, the spectator being kept in a continual state of good humor, and on several occasions one finds just cause for boisterous laughter. But best of all is the fact that the picture never loses its hold on the spectator.

Mr. Barrymore is Cicero Hannibal Butts, an American corset salesman who combines business with his wedding trip to Europe. After a stay in London Butts is keen about visiting Russia, so with this end he visits the Russian ambassador in London and has little trouble in securing a passport for himself and wife. Butts finds a handbag belonging to Anna Varvara, a Russian dancer appearing in London who is being watched by the police because she is believed to be a Nihilist. Armed with a bouquet of posies, Butts is on his way to call on Anna when he meets his bride. Going along the line of least resistance, Butts tells his wife that the flowers and the bag are for her.

That evening Anna learns that Butts is going to Russia, and a plan to return to her home suggests itself. Mrs. Butts receives a wire from home which determines her to leave for America the next day. Rather than have his intended visit to the dancer made known to Mrs. Butts, Cicero agrees to take Anna over the border as his wife. The trip to Russia is an eventful one for Butts. He threatens to quit a couple of times, but Anna holds a trump card. From this point on matters develop quickly. Mrs. Butts finds it unnecessary to return home and follows her husband. Through the efforts of Anna's admirer, an officer in the Russian army, Mrs. Butts meets her husband again wearing a medal conferred by the Czar, Cicero is a hero.

The subtitles are especially good. They are all well placed and humorous. Flora Zabelle, who created the role of Anna on the speaking stage, is well cast and she adds much to the beauty of the picture. Lillian Tucker as Mrs. Butts plays with her accustomed pleasing effect, while George E. Mack, Millard Benson, Eugene Redding and John Hendricks are of valuable support to Mr. Barrymore, who, when all is said and done, makes "The Red Widow" an immensely enjoyable comedy. The settings and the photography are all that they should be to be in keeping with the other departments of this praiseworthy Famous Players offering.

"David Garrick"

Film Adaptation of the Play Is Offered by Pallas-Paramount. Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

CLOSELY following the play and full advantage taken of its picturesque possibilities the "David Garrick" of the films gives screen patrons an opportunity to see the popular Dustin Farnum in a romantic role which suits him to perfection. From the sombreroed and over-determined "Ben Blair" to "David Garrick" of the powdered wig and graceful poise is more in the nature of a bound than a jump; for in the latter picture Dustin Farnum and the Pallas company are revealed on a plane that towers above the former in artistry, entertainment value; every way, in fact.

To put it briefly, we should say that never before have we seen Dustin Farnum to such marked advantage. One might also say that Pallas has never offered a better picture.

"David Garrick" is, of course, a costume play. If this fact militates against it in attracting people, those who have recognized in the picture all the essentials of an evening of delightful entertainment can only feel the pity of such a circumstance. But it would seem that "David Garrick" is too widely and favorably known to serve as anything but an especial attraction at any and all motion picture theaters.

The production and the direction of the play in every sense are worthy to be classed as excellent. The settings are exceptional even for Pallas productions, and the director visualized a capital screen romance splendidly. As the director carries practically all the responsibility of a production it is to him that the lion's share of the praise must go when a picture of the quality and effectiveness of "David Garrick" is presented.

The story, which tells of the famous actor who agrees to kill a certain young woman's fascination for him only to find that the lady is the only one for whom he has ever felt the emotions he portrays so finely on the stage, is one of the most pleasing romances that have come to the screen. The brillance of the producer and the cast have made it so.

Winifred Kingston has the required charm and much appeal in the leading feminine role. Herbert Standing, as her father, utilizes his every opportunity and gives one of his usually good performances. Lydia Yeamans Titus plays Araminta in a manner that places her among the features of the picture and Frank Bonn is a good Richard Chivy. Olive White and Mary Mersch are others in the cast which, in its entirety, is well above the average.

"The Man Within"

Selig Three-Reel Drama Released May 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A WESTERN play dealing with the drink evil describes this offering, which Tom Mix directed from a story by E. Lynn Summers. Mr. Mix also plays the leading role of Tom Melford, the foreman of a ranch. The play has a double appeal. There are all the exciting western scenes, the barroom fights, and a very thrilling chase on horseback, which give the players a chance to show their horsemanship. There are a number of tumbles during the chase, several of the horses falling headlong and throwing their riders, mishaps sure to call forth gasps from the audience.

Then there is the appeal which the play makes to the sympathies, largely due to the acting of Victoria Forde as Vi, Tom's young wife. She plays this role in a very realistic, sympathetic fashion, without too much sentimentality.

The story tells of the marriage of an eastern girl, whose father buys the Double O ranch, and Tom Melford, the foreman of the ranch. The father is furious, especially because he knows of Tom's fondness for liquor. Nevertheless the young couple are happy for a long time, and Tom conquers his weakness. He is summoned one day to another ranch to help train horses. While he is away, his little daughter becomes ill and Vi sends for him. Tom, led by his former comrades, has yielded to temptation and becomes drunk at the nearby saloon. Before he is in a condition to return home, his child has died and his wife has returned to her father's home.

Since her father is still unforgiving, Vi leaves again and becomes a cook at the Golden Nugget saloon. Tom, returning home, finds Vi's note, and believing her safe at her father's home, he goes away, intending to return when he has conquered himself and earned a fortune. While Vi is having a great deal of trouble in her unpleasant position at the saloon, Tom locates a gold mine. An outlaw tries to trick him out of his find and in pursuing him, Tom arrives at the Golden Nugget saloon. The picture of his baby, in the possession of one of the men, leads to Tom's discovery of the identity of the persecuted cook, and he sets out to find her. He rescues her from her enemies and the play ends with the reconciliation of the young couple.

"Pierre Brissac, the Brazen"

Two-Reel "Flying A" Drama Released May 1. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ALMOST amusing little comedy, out of the ordinary, is this picture. It is whimsical and wholly delightful. Kenneth B. Clark wrote the story, which is clever, and it is well presented under the direction of Thomas Ricketts. Much of the humor of the play lies in the characters of the two burglars. Pierre Brissac and his confederate, Le Petit Jean, two impudent rascals who go about their business of burgling in a light hearted manner and never lose their good manners, even when a policeman rudely interrupts their discussion of the best way to break into a house. George Field and John Gough play the burglars in a very delightful manner.

Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorn appear as a newly-wed couple, Mr. and Mrs. Brand, having their first quarrel. As a result, the wife goes home to mother and the husband goes to his club. Before she leaves, Mrs. Brand pins a note on the front door for her husband, stating that the key is in its "usual place," and in the hall, she leaves another note to say that she is leaving the jewels he gave her in the house. So the two burglars, after spending the long afternoon fishing, a pretty scene, find things all ready for them when they come to their regular task of housebreaking. They have a lovely time robbing the house, especially when they reach the kitchen and find a dinner waiting for them. When the young husband, tiring of the club, returns home that night, he is locked out and the burglars, within the house, telephone to the police and have the real owner arrested for trying to break in. In the morning the wife, repentant, returns to find the house robbed. She goes to the police station, where she is told the robber is held, to find her husband in jail.

The fact that crime is lightly treated in this story is counterbalanced by the fact that the comedy teaches a serious lesson in calling attention to the carelessness of people in guarding their property. The key left under the front door mat and the note telling of its location are by no means unusual.

"The Feast of Life"

A Five-Part World-Paragon Drama Released May 1 Reviewed by George W. Graves

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG as a Spanish type is particularly attractive in "The Feast of Life," a story which offers her opportunities for display of emotion and charm. The name of Miss Young is in itself sufficient inducement to lure a person into a theater without further investigation, but if he is one who wishes to know all the reasons why a picture should claim any of his time or interest he will discover in this particular case that, next to Clara Kimball Young, Frances Marion and Albert Capellani are the biggest arguments. The latter, with the aid of rich tropical scenery, obtained some very excellent artistic effects and gave ample proof of his well-known ability as a director, while Frances Marion furnished the scenario.

This picture combines the elements that the public likes and it should take very well. There are tense situations and interest holds very well as a whole. One of the most satisfying things about this production is, however, the genuine tropical settings mentioned above. Good atmosphere of this kind always helps a story to convince and is worth the trouble incident to its obtainment. Paul Capellani is a very good type for the part of Don Armada, while Robert Frazer makes an ardent Cuban lover. The rest of the cast is as follows: Mrs. E. M. Kimball, E. M. Kimball and Doris Kenyon.

The story concerns itself with the trials of Aurora Fernandez, a girl of the poorer classes, who becomes engaged to Don Armada, a wealthy but thoroughly contemptible person. He has only just rejected Celida, his former love, with the result that she kills herself. Her brother, Pedro, is the young fisherman whose love has been denied Aurora, but who still loves her. To avenge his dead sister, Pedro gathers a force of fishermen and assails Armada's villa as the wedding feast is in progress. In the hand-to-hand conflict he has with his enemy, the latter is blinded. Pedro is about to kill Don Armada outright, but, seeing his condition, harms him no further.

Armada undergoes a successful operation and regains his sight. He conceals this fact, however, in order to spy on his wife. After several of her meetings with the fisherman, he locks his wife in a room, surprises Pedro and stabs him in the back. Then he rushes back to Aurora to tell her of his deed and gloat over her suffering. The excitement is too great for him, however, and, as his doctor had predicted, he falls dead. Then it only remains for Aurora to nurse her lover back to health to make a happy ending.

"Arrows of Hate"

Episode Nine of Pathe's "The Iron Claw" Released April 24. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS episode of "The Iron Claw" is impressive to quite an extent and Edouard Jose, the director, has brought out a number of situations in vivid style, but it does not convince as much as some of those previous. Pearl White, featured in this serial, is surely augmenting the popularity she has already acquired as a daring and charming actress, finely equipped for this style of photodrama. She finds no difficulty in making her charms register in this episode. Creighton Hale is featured as the resourceful secretary. Davy, and Sheldon Lewis as the vindictive Iron Claw.

Not profiting by her errors of the past, Margery allows herself to be once more trapped by the Iron Claw, and her neglect to heed the advice of her lover, Davy, not to go near that man nearly results in a tragedy. Davy is a lad of ready ingenuity. He is about to free himself and his thoughtless sweetheart from death by asphyxiation, when they are both bombarded with poisoned darts, one hitting Davy. Legar has remembered the cleverness of Golden's secretary and sent his Jap servant to finish the work of death.

Davy is put to bed, believed to be poisoned, but when he continues to live long past his allotted time, it is discovered that the Laughing Mask has neutralized the effect of the poison on the darts before they were used. The identity of the Laughing Mask is still unknown, but this episode and ones previous to it have more or less strongly hinted at it.

In action this is one of the best episodes that has come out, but, as mentioned above, some of the things that transpire in it are not too plausible. All in all, "Arrows of Hate" will please the followers of "The Iron Claw."

New York Motion Picture Corporation: Was weaker during the past ten days than at any time in the last two years. Repeated offerings were made at from 45 down to as low at 42. Evidently the basis on which some of the companies constituting the New York Motion have been taken into the consolidation mentioned below was not such as to enhance materially the value of this stock.

Famous Players Film Co.: A merger is now announced of the Jesse Lasky Feature Film Co., Famous Players, Fine Arts, Kay-Bee and Keystone, with a reported authorized capital of over $20,000,000. Further details will be given from New York, and two substantial banking houses are back of the consolidation. No immediate change in the market prices of any of the securities of the companies involved has yet been recorded, with the exception of the Famous Players.

Mutual Film Corporation: Bookings on the Charlie Chaplin series have now gone over $1,000,000, according to New York advices which we believe to be trustworthy. The Mutual Film Corporation, without taking any risk, secures the first 30% of revenue for the distribution of this series, and expectations from this source, plus actual earning rate on the common stock today, would yield over 30% to the common.

Randolph Film Co.—Is incorporated for $350,000 preferred and $350,000 common. Sales were reported within the past few days of preferred at 115 (carrying with it ½ share of common) and common alone at the rate of $60 per share. This company has indulged in an innovation in their pre-service release, which occurs two weeks prior to their regular release date, May 22nd. We are advised a remarkable record has been established, but are not at liberty to give figures at this time. "Gloria's Romance" starts off under splendid auspices, and, if present rate of contract booking is maintained, new history will be made in the film field.

Lone Star Film Corp.—Newspapers state the Essanay Company (or Mr. Spoor) has sued Charles Chaplin for a sum approximating $700,000, or a little more than the amount he (Chaplin) expects to secure from the Mutual Film Corporation this year. This, of course, will not have the slightest effect on either the Lone Star Film Corp. or the amount of money the Mutual Company will make, as it is simply a personal issue between Mr. Spoor and Charlie Chaplin. Any damages that may have resulted to the Essanay Company through Chaplin's failure to go through with a few of the weeks under his contract with them, could not possibly amount to more than a very small fraction of the amount of damages claimed, but then—the film industry loves to expand figures and has never been handicapped by over-modesty in thinking in terms of six figures when four or five would more than suffice. Chaplin, however, is good at "repartee" and comes back with a "solar-plexus cork-screw" represented by a damage suit in terms of six figures. His reputation has been hurt. How much? Oh, hum! Say about $400,000 or $500,000. The "Carmen" release should have been in two reels, as arranged, and not in four. Balm needed—let's call it—half a million. Our suggestion would be for Messrs. Spoor and Chaplin to play a friendly poker game and adjust their financial differences in the better understood game of "passing the buck."

in "The Iron Claw," the Pathe serial, is the sharp bill and temperamental disposition of the parrot in the cast.

Dorothy Green began her professional career as a concert singer. The failure of her voice led her to enter motion pictures.

Director Eugene Mullin has started work on a Broadway star feature with Harry Morey in the lead. Thomas Mills, Edward Elkas and Harry Fisher are in the cast.

Florence Lawrence has resigned from the Universal Company, after appearing in two pictures.

Earle Williams will apear as a motor speed star and hero of all around daring in the new Vitagraph serial which has been directed by Wally Van.

Caroline Birch appears in a new Vitagraph Broadway Star feature directed by William Humphreys. Little Bobby Connelly is a member of the cast.

Gertrude Robinson appears as a girl of the streets who reforms and becomes a Salvation Army lassie in Gaumont's "The Quality of Faith."

Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune and now a member of the scenario staff of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, arrived in New York recently after an absence of a year.

An ancient Egyptian temple has been erected at Atlantic Beach for use in "The Image Maker of Thebes."

Morgan Jones and William Burt of the Thanhouser Company will leave Jacksonville soon for the company's New Rochelle studio.

Billy Dunn of the Eagle Film Company will soon begin the erection of four stages at the Jacksonville studio for several companies of players who will arrive soon.

Harry Fox, the musical comedy star, has signed with the Internation Film Service to appear in screen comics.

Paul M. Bryan of Denver, Colo., photoplay author, now on a trip east, visited the Gaumont studios. Among the Gaumont dramas which he has written are "The Card Players," "The Idol of the Stage," "Feathertop," and "The Isle of Love."

Fritz Orlamond, technical director and character actor for Gaumont, began his theatrical career in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1884.

Gertrude Robinson wears a Salvation Army costume in "The Quality of Faith."

James Levering, Gaumont character man, played with Henry Irving in England.

The first subject to be made by Craig Hutchinson, recently added to the Universal producing staff, is "A Boarding House Tangle," with Ernie Shields, Harry Todd, Marguerite Joslin and Marcia Moore.

Frances Marion, chief scenario editor for the World Film Corporation, began film work as an extra girl about a year ago.

Thomas Stewart succeeded his brother Charles as manager of the Knickerbocker theater in New York when the latter withdrew to take charge of the new Rialto.

Harold Hubert, a Vitagraph actor, one of the players in "The Battle Cry of Peace," was killed recently when struck by an automobile on his way home from the studio after finishing a comedy scene in the series featuring Frank Daniels.

Edward Jose, now directing "The Iron Claw," on May first celebrates the completion of his first year as an independent producer. During the twelve months he has made "The Beloved Vagabond," "Simon the Jester," "The Closing Net," "Nedra," "The Light That Failed," and fourteen episodes of "The Iron Claw," a total of fifty-four reels.

Norma Talmadge, Fine Arts.

Norma Talmadge is the featured player in the Fine Arts-Triangle play, "Children in the House," and her work wins very favorable comment. Miss Talmadge is a talented and sincere player, and is advancing in her art.

Athletics, portrait painting and the writing of scenarios are Virginia Pearson's diversions when away from the studio.

Frank Burbeck, well known on the legitimate stage, makes his first appearance in motion pictures in the Fox production, "Blazing Love," featuring Virginia Pearson.

Ormi Hawley, formerly with Lubin and other companies, is featured in "Where Love Leads," her first William Fox play. Frank C. Griffin directed the production.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

After two weeks vacation, Henry King is back at the Balboa studio. He is relieved of the responsibility of directing and is co-starring with Ruth Roland again.

A pleasing touch was given one of the desert pictures in "The Aryan," when the pack burro in the scene unexpectedly walked over to its master (W. S. Hart) and affectionately put its nose over the actor's shoulder, just as the camera caught the act.

Harry Lonsdale, prominent in the cast of "The Ne'er Do Well," sang in comic opera at the age of eighteen.

Fritzi Brunette, star in "Unto Those Who Sin," and "At Piney Ridge," is a decided brunette with gray eyes.

Vivian Reed was known as "The Calendar Girl" before joining the Selig Company.

"Into the Primitive," the Selig Red Seal drama released through V. L. S. E. May 29, is a jungle story, written by Robert Ames Bennett. Kathlyn Williams is featured. Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale have prominent roles.

"A Stranger in New York," one of Charles Hoyt's successful farce comedies, has been adapted for the screen by Gilson Wiletts and is being produced by the Selig Company with Otis Harlan in the leading role.

Fritzi Brunette again appears in a "ragged" role in the three-reel feature, "The Test of Chivalry," being produced at the Selig Los Angeles studio by William Robert Daly. Edward J. Peil, Vivian Reed and James Bradbury are in the cast.

A close friendship has arisen between Dorothy Gish and Constance Talmadge at the Fine Arts studio.

A rule at the Mutual-Chaplin studios forbids visitors during working hours. A dignified citizen of Los Angeles, barred out by the rule, was observed recently perched on top of a high board fence overlooking the studio yard.

William de Vaull, who was one of the prominent negro slaves in "The Birth of a Nation," plays a colored servant in a Kentucky story Allan Dwan is directing with Lillian Gish as star. Sam de Grasse, Jennie Lee and Spottiswodde Aitken are in the cast.

Douglas Fairbanks and party were guests of Oliver Morosco at a recent stock performance of "The Show Shop," in which Fairbanks starred for six months at the New York Hudson theater. The party included De Wolf Hopper, William Christy Cabanne, Norma and Constance Talmadge and their mother.

George Fisher impersonates the Christ in the Thomas Ince production, "Civilization."

Bertram Grassby appears as a young English lord in the Universal play, "His Date in Honolulu." Myrtle Gonzales is leading woman. L. Reynolds is directing.

Anne Schaefer, the Vitagraph actress, is a baseball fan.

Webster Campbell is the latest member of the Vitagraph Company to purchase an automobile.

Juanita Hansen, leading lady of "The Secret of the Submarine," is a native of Des Moines, Iowa.

Lamar Johnstone at one time held the record for running one hundred yards at the University of Virginia.

Hugh Bennett once managed a "wagon show" out through the West which was broken up when the audience in one city took the play too seriously and shot and killed the "villain" who was "stage-choking" the heroine.

The marriage of Dick Rosson, the American Film Company juvenile, to Miss Vera Sisson is announced.

Members of the Fine Arts studio were quite excited recently, for they thought they had captured Villa, but the stranger who resembled the bandit proved to be another Mexican, quite harmless.

Dorothy Dalton proved her skill in driving an automobile in a thrilling chase for "The Raiders," the Triangle-Kay Bee play featuring H. B. Warner.

"Four Months," the title of a three-reeler just completed by Director Carl LeViness for the American Film Company, refers to the length of time the millionaire hero is given to live. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat are in the cast. There is a surprise at the end of the story.

Audrey Munson, the artist's model now apearing in "Virtue," a seven-reel feature being made by the American Company, enjoys being a picture actress. The chorus and dances in the production are being arranged by Genevieve Driscoll.

Juanita Hansen was offered leading roles in pictures before she graduated from the Los Angeles high school.

Hylda Hollis, who plays a Russian adventuress in "The Secret of the Submarine," resided for several years in Petrograd. She was born in Philadelphia and went on the stage when seventeen years old.

William Collier, Jr., will make his debut as a star on the Triangle program in "The Bugle Call," written especially for him by C. Gardner Sulivan. Young Collier appears as the mischievous son of a commandant at a western army post. Wyndham Standing, Anna Lehr, Thomas Guise and Joe Goodboy are in the cast.

De Wolf Hopper, in his present Fine Arts picture, "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," is said to be playing his best screen role so far.

Seena Owen, the Fine Arts actress, is taking a short vacation, resting in the hills of Colorado.

Wilfred Lucas, who is working with Mae Marsh and Robert Harron under Paul Powell's direction, is building a new home in Glendale.

Trick photography is used effectively in "The No-Good Guy," featuring William Collier, the principal tricks centering about the hallucinations of the leading character while under the influence of liquor.

George Clancy, who plays "Hook" Barnacle in "The Secret of the Submarine," is a musician and has written several opera scores. On the speaking stage he created the role of "Philip" in the Drury Lane production of "Sporting Life."

Helen Holmes is fond of Indian relics, rare baskets and pottery ware and already has an interesting collection.

Victor Moore will apear as a clown in his next play on the Paramount program. There will be a three-ring circus, side shows and menagerie to give proper atmosphere to the story.

Fannie Ward will next apear in "The Gutter Magdalene," written by Willard Mack, directed by George Melford.

The Jesse L. Lasky May releases include Geraldine Farrar in "Maria Rosa," Sessue Hayakawa in "Alien Souls," and Blanche Sweet in "The Thousand Dollar Husband."

Jane Grey, co-starred with William Desmond in "Waifs," a Triangle-Kay Bee feature, is well known on the speaking stage as star of "The Concert" and other Broadway successes.

Kathlyn Williams is enjoying a short rest after completing "Into the Primitive."

Fay Tincher.

Fay Tincher, the Fine Arts star, has gone to the front rapidly in the two years of her picture career. The little comedienne, who apeared with De Wolf Hopper recently in "Don Quixote" and "Sunshine Dad," made her debut under David W. Griffith in his first feature drama, "The Battle of the Sexes." Before becoming a Fine Arts featured player she appeared in comedy photoplays. "Komics." As an evidence of her widespread popularity, Miss Tincher recently won second place in a popularity contest held in Australia. Mary Pickford was first.

Princess Olga and her trained leopards, who recently appeared in the one-reel Selig comedy, "A Boarding House Ham," are at present among the attractions at the San Diego Exposition.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, who recently left the Universal Company, were guests at a farewell dinner given in their honor by twenty members of their company.

Henry King and Ruth Roland are working in a five-reel Balboa feature, "The Devil's Pet Bait," written by Will E. Ritchey.

Helene Rosson has completed her work in "The Abandonment," an American five-reeler. E. Forrest Taylor and Harry Von Meter appear in the cast. Miss Rosson appears as a society woman, the exact opposite of her role in "April."

Having finished the "Graft" serial and taken his twenty-four hours sleep, Richard Stanton is at work on a comedy drama, "The Great Corona Race," in which he plays the lead with Marcia Moore opposite.

Stella Razeto is co-starring with Harry Carey in "Club Law," under the direction of Ed. J. Le Saint.

Cleo Madison, after a short rest, has begun to direct and play the lead in a West Indian drama. She impersonates a little slave girl.

Rhea Mitchell's mother is seriously ill in a Los Angeles hospital.

Florence Dagmar, ingenue with the Lasky Company, has been informed that a high school girls' club has been named for her in Louisville, Kentucky.

Roland Bottomley and Marie Empress have been brought from New York to appear in the support of Jackie Saunders in the Balboa series, "The Grip of Evil." Harry Harvey is the director.

Billy Mason, with the Essanay Company for three years, is now with the Keystone forces.

Harry Wulze, for two years a member of the Keystone scenario staff, is now an assistant director.

William F. Hart, for seven years with the New York World, is now publicity man at the Keystone studios, assisting Frederick Palmer.

William De Mille and Martin Fairfax prepared the scenario for Victor Moore's next play.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsura Aoki, the Japanese players, are at work under the direction of Frank Reicher in a Lasky photodrama from a story by Hector Turnbull which was prepared for the screen by Margaret Turnbull.

Jackie Saunders' new pet, a Yorkshire terrier, plays a part in one of the episodes for "The Grip of Evil."

For a scene in "Sultana," a Balboa play, a six passenger tourcar was sent over the cliffs at Point Firmin. It dropped 250 feet and broke in mid-air as a result of the gasoline tank's explosion. Norman Manning superintended the stunt.

Clarence A. Frambers, president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago, has been added to the writing staff of the American Company.

George Melford is directing Fannie Ward and Jack Dean in a photoplay by Willard Mack.

Bessie Barriscale is again acting in a light comedy drama at Culver City. William Desmond plays opposite.

Ruth Roland and William Conklin are being featured in "Sultana," under the direction of Sherwood Macdonald.

Jack Kerrigan and a company of forty have left for Arner's camp, near San Diego, where, under the direction of Jack Conway, scenes for "The Silent Battle" will be taken.

Alex. Beyfuss, president of the California Motion Picture Company, is to leave shortly for the east.

Because of the elaborateness and size of the scenes for "The Woman Who Dared," an adaptation of the novel by C. N. and A. M. Williamson in which Beatriz Michelena is starred, the California Motion Picture Corporation is further extending its sunlight stage at San Rafael, and doubling its stage capacity.

A Southern California Motion picture company has offered to buy the Tower of Jewels at the Exposition grounds, with the idea of tipping it over as a spectacular scene in a play written around it. The offer has not yet been accepted.

Dr. H. G. Stafford, head of the scenario department at Universal City, receives an average of about 2,000 scripts weekly.

Little Billy Jacobs, five-year-old actor, appears in the support of Marie Doro in "The Heart of Nora Flynn," which Cecil B. De Mille is directing.

Lola May, prominent on the speaking stage, recently leading woman in New York in "The Lure," has an important role in "The Heart of Nora Flynn."

An exact replica of a ballroom scene at the Casino at Bath, the English watering place, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, is shown in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," starring Mae Murray.

James Young is to direct Blanche Sweet in a photodrama written for her by Beatrice C. De Mille, the mother of Cecil B. and William C. De Mille.

Charles Ray, who has been playing erring sons and wayward boys, has a light comedy part in a feature being produced at Culver City by Raymond West. He begins as a fop, but at the end of the play is a "regular fellow."

In the episodes of "The Secret of the Submarine" already produced, Thomas Chatterton has sprained his ankle, cut his forehead, got a chill and nearly had pneumonia, but he expects to finish the play.

Harry Millarde has resumed directing at the Kalem studios, after a three months' vacation.

A bureau has been formed in Los Angeles, with Anita King as head, to aid and protect the thousands of young girls who come to the city to seek employment in the motion picture industry.

Lionel Barrymore is now working in "The Quitter," a five-reel Metro production being filmed near the Mexican border.

Jack Standing, who plays the role of a young Russian violinist in "Civilization's Child," went to an instructor and learned the proper way to hold a bow.

William Tedmarsh, who plays the Jap spy in "The Secret of the Submarine," was at one time a scout for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police of Canada. He was in the U. S. army for five years and served with the British in South Africa.

Thomas Chatterton is a native of Geneva, N. Y. His early ambition was to be a university professor.

George Webb, who plays "Mahlin" in "The Secret of the Submarine," is an enthusiastic racing driver.

A "MOVING" STAR

Marguerite Clayton, pretty Essanay leading woman, finds that the home life motion picture actors are said to enjoy is not always what it is supposed to be. This is because of President George K. Spoor's insistence on getting realistic settings.

Miss Clayton first came to the Essanay studios in Chicago from the Niles, California, studios. She was immediately sent to Starved Rock, Illinois, to take part in a picture there, then she was sent to "The Pines" in Wisconsin for another picture.

Marguerite Clayton, Essanay

Later she went with a company to Virginia, Minnesota, on the border line of Canada, where she took the feminine lead in "Beyond the Law," taken from Henry Oyen's novel, "The Snow Burner Pays."

Hardly had she returned from the north when she was sent with a troupe to the southland where she appears in the feminine lead in "According to the Code," which is being filmed on Signal Mountain and neighboring peaks of the Tennessee range, in Tennessee.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Elizabeth Burbridge, who last appeared in Essanay's three-reel release, "The Danger Line," will be seen next in a light comedy, "The Double Cross," a flippant tale of boy crooks.

A photoplay, "Orphan Joyce," has been prepared especially for twelve-year-old Joyce Fair of the Essanay Company.

Nell Craig has a strong role in each of three new Essanay releases, "Her Naked Soul," "Once a Thief?" and "The Consummation."

"That Sort," taken from the stage play of that name, is being filmed by Essanay in five acts with Warda Howard, Ernest Maupain and Duncan McRae.

"The Fable of the Good Fairy With the Lorgnette" will be the next George Ade fable in pictures.

Henry B. Walthall received 120 letters in one day recently.

John Junior takes the principal role in "The Frame-up," a three-reel Essanay play.

"In the Moon's Ray," featuring Francis X. Bushman, has been reissued in two reels by Essanay.

"A Return to Youth—and Trouble," is a two-reel light comedy taken from one of Albert Payson Terhune's stories. Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew and Harry Dunkinson appear in the cast.

Marguerite Clayton has bought an automobile, a little coupe of the detachable top design.

Thomas Santschi entertained his friends recently at an elk steak dinner.

The first performance of the Selig feature, "War-torn Poland," was held in Chicago at the Star theater, April 24.

Vitagraphess Recovers

Nell Shipman, on her complete recovery from recent blindness caused by an extreme case of poison-oak was immediately signed by the Vitagraph Company for lead in its coming Blue Ribbon feature "Through the Wall" by Cleveland Moffett. Director General Rollin S. Sturgeon of the Vitagraph studio will personally direct this picture and hopes to make of it as big a success as J. Stuart Blackton has declared the eight-reel "God's Country—and the Woman" picture to be.

The latter picture, which opened at Clune's Broadway Theater in Los Angeles on April 10, also has Miss Shipman in its leading role.

Owing to the general inconvenience which this actress sustained as result of her recent poison-oak affection, she is arranging to take up the matter of fighting this menace in the California mountains with the aid of the health department of the State of California.

"ACT" NEARLY FATAL

It is an old saying that "dog is man's truest friend," but Miss Sothern, who is starring in "The Mysteries of Myra," is rather regretting this fact. Miss Jean Sothern possesses a Pekinese pup who is always with her at the studio.

One morning Miss Sothern was busy with a scene in which she rescues Howard Estabrook from a room filled with stifling vapors. Director Wharton had found that the only way to secure the best effects was to use actual chemicals which would give the exact reaction. Just as Miss Sothern and her butler were effecting the rescue the aforementioned pup started a wild dash in his mistress' direction, with utter disregard for all studio propriety.

He was just a trifle late, however, the door closed and he was surrounded by stifling clouds. A few breaths and said pup coughed, strangled and turned up his Pekinese heels toward heaven. When the smoke had been dispelled he was found in very bad way. However, Miss Sothern's entreaties and ammonia bottle soon restored him. She says her pet will hereafter remain at home while she is working dangerous scenes. Needless to say Friend Pup agrees.

ACTOR MISTAKEN FOR JAP

When William Tedmarsh, the powerful character actor, stepped onto the pier of the United States naval base at San Pedro he was taken into custody by a sentry and hustled before the commanding officer.

He was "made up" as Satsuma, the Japanese spy, in "The Secret of the Submarine," the forthcoming Mutual American photoplay. Mr. Tedmarsh explained and was released.

In these days of national uncertainty especial precautions are taken to forestall anyone prying into the details of equipment and personnel of our regular forces. Mr. Tedmarsh arrived at the pier ahead of the other members of the company and thought to while away the time by examining some ordnance being mounted on the U. S. S. Farragut.

He did not get far with his examination for a guard started toward him. Mr. Tedmarsh, not wishing to intrude, stepped down onto the pier, right into the arms of another guard, who forthwith marched him to the office of the commander, and he had to explain all over again.

THANHOUSER STAR SEARCHES FOR LOST BOY

New impetus is to be given the search for Jimmie Glass, the four-year-old boy who disappeared mysteriously almost a year ago. Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star, has decided to set a number of wheels in motion on the case, and Mrs. Glass, mother of the boy, sees a ray of hope. Her story has occupied the front pages of the nation's newspapers, and since May 12, 1915, when her boy vanished, she has travelled all over the country following up clues.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Glass received word that a boy resembling the missing lad was seen at the Thanhouser Film Corporation's studio in New Rochelle, N. Y. With Police Lieutenant James P. Rooney, she journeyed to the studio, and Mr. Thanhouser most cordially opened for her perusal all available records of the company, showing just which were the children used in his productions for a year back. Frank Grimmer, cast director, located and identified all the kiddies as legitimate residents of New Rochelle and its environs.

An interesting witness of all this was Florence La Badie, who quickly remembered the famous case. Her sympathy aroused, she had a long talk with the mother and the police official. "That actress lady just took me off my feet," said the big detective later. "Ideas just seemed to pop out like gun flashes, and she is going to be a big help, too."

Miss La Badie will first utilize her enormous outgoing mail in her campaign. Every film fan whose letter she answers will receive a description of the lost boy, and an endless chain will be established. She will direct the work personally from the studio in New Rochelle.

Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser celebrity, confering with Mrs. Glass and the detective regarding plans for locating lost little Jimmie Glass, seen on the left.

The yo-ho lads of the U. S. S. Farragut enjoying the lunch given in their honor by Juanita Hansen when she was working in the Mutual-American feature, "The Seeret of the Submarine." It is said that the charming little blonde leading lady made the dessert herself, and that the sailor boys liked it so well that they "adopted" the fair cook into the navy.

HOGAN PUTS HIS HEAD IN A NOOSE

Property men around motion picture studios are ever on the look-out for odds and ends that might be useful in a picture. Metro boasts of a strange and interesting character in the person of Daniel "Kid" Hogan, chief property man at the Rolfe-Metro studio. When Hogan is not actually engaged in work around the studio, he snooks around the city, in second-hand stores, antique shops and out of way places, buying up a curious lot of old things. He is given a free hand with a bankroll, for the managers of the studio value his judgment.

But Hogan bought something recently that did not meet with their approval, and it is now a white elephant on his own hands. And the funny part of it is that he thought he had made a master stroke and had gotten something that would prove invaluable around the studio. It is a gallows that has seen active service, and on which a score of men met their death. Hogan saw an advertisement where the county commissioners of Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, offered for sale a gallows in good condition. It had been stored in the local jail there for four years, since electrocution became the lawful mode of killing murderers. The last man hung on the gallows was Joseph Polichinus.

Hogan thought it would be a capital idea to have a gallows around handy, and he bought the outfit for seventy-five dollars. It was crated and shipped to the studio, and he called a crowd around when he unpacked the grewsome object, thinking they would roundly congratulate him for his shrewdness. Max Karger, general manager of the studio, took one slant at the gallows, and then asked Hogan how in the world he expected to use anything like that in a Metro production. Hogan said he thought it could be used frequently.

"If we ever use it, it will be on you," Karger said.

When Director George Sargent ordered his property man to "dig up a shark" that individual "'lowed that they didn't grow in the ground." And he was right, but there were plenty of them where they did grow, out in the Santa Barbara channel. By using the carcass of a horse a big specimen was captured.

The men who constructed the cage into which the shark was lured, evidently did not figure on the tremendous strength of the tail, for Mr. Shark with one powerful blow ripped open the sides and effected an escape. Now the hunt is on for another one.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than clsasification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Swords and Hearts—BIOGRAPH—MAY 1.—Featuring Wilfred Lucas, Claire McDowell and Dorothy West. In the old South, before the war, the wealthy belle is wooed by her neighbor's son. When he rides away to join his regiment she kisses him before the assembled crowd. The daughter of a "poor white" on the plantation, who loves him secretly, bids him good-by also. Later, while riding to see his sweetheart, the officer is pursued by Union troops. The poor girl sees them, and, galloping off, draws the troopers in pursuit. She is wounded, but makes her escape, returning the horse without her escapade having been suspected. Her father heads a band of lawless men who, knowing the lieutenant's father has a treasure chest in the house, attack the mansion, kill the owner and set fire to the place during their drunken orgy. They do not find the treasure chest, however, for the old negro butler has buried it in the earth. At the close of the war the officer returns home a beggar, and is flouted by his former sweetheart in favor of a Union man. The old butler discloses the secret hoard and tells of the poor girl's bravery. The young man offers the heroine the life she saved, and she confesses her love.

The Buckshot Feud—LUBIN—MAY 1.—Featuring Davy Don. Don, a lawyer in a mountain town, has the distinction of winning the first and only case tried in town. It happens that a feud breaks out among two families. The leader has been arrested and is on trial for his life. The court room is crowded, and Don, who has been selected to defend him, is making a good defense when he is shot at by the friends of the other family. Don, scared to death, refuses to be made a target and is about to give up the case when the defendant's friends point a revolver at him. Don suddenly changes his mind and proceeds with the trial, and after many very funny situations the judge charges the jury and they file out. When the verdict of "Not Guilty" is announced, the friends of the opposing feudists proceed to shoot up the court.

The Man Within—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—MAY 1.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

In the Moon's Ray—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—MAY 2.—Featuring Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Bryant Washburn, Rapley Holmes and Gerda Holmes. Meredith Blake, a gentleman crook, learning that Robert Hamilton, a millionaire, has obtained a priceless scarab, determines to procure it. With the aid of his accomplice "Spider," he enters Hamilton's home and, by the light of the moon shining through the windows, obtains the scarab. Judith Hamilton, hearing the noise, comes into the room, and Blake, infatuated with her, has "Spider" carry her away. On her white slipper she makes a plea for help with a fountain pen which she unconsciously carried with her when disturbed in writing, and hurls it out the window. It strikes Richard Neal, a private investigator, who rescues the girl and returns the scarab to its owner.

The Candle—(TWO REELS)—LUBIN—MAY 2.—Featuring L. C. Shumway and Helen Eddy. James Carr, a young author, one evening finds a youth in his cabin. They struggle and the lights are extinguished, and when Carr lights the candle again he sees the flowing tresses of a girl before him. Carr asks Sue to tell him her story, and she shows him a letter which she received that morning from one Bancroft, known as Shiro, the Hypnotist, demanding five thousand dollars. She tells Carr that years before she met Bancroft, who acquired hypnotic influence over her, and on his account she was arrested. After serving her term in prison she marries Jim, a young mechanic, and that morning she received the threatening letter, and, not having the money, she went out to kill him. Carr then tells her that Bancroft has been killed in a gambling brawl, and when Sue hears this she rushes out gladly into the night, while Carr looks after her meditatively.

Fit for Burning—(THREE REELS)—BIOGRAPH—MAY 3.—Featuring Vera Sission and Charles H. Mailes. Constance Grey saves Madge Martin from the police and plants her feet in the path of righteousness, but Madge, driven from one employment to another by members of her own sex, becames disgusted and goes back to the purlieus of vice. She falls in love with Dick Foraker, who, unknown to Constance, was the cause of Madge's downfall. Sophie, a young girl of sixteen, whom Constance has befriended, disappears, and Constance asks Madge to help her find the girl. That evening Madge asks Constance to come to her resort, and when she arrives Madge leads her to a door and asks her to look through the tramson and she sees Sophie in the arms of Foraker. The next day Constance returns the ring which Foraker gave her with a brief note, and stronger of mind and higher of soul Constance rises superior to the shocks of life and continues her work of love and kindness among the weak and downtrodden.

The Fable of the Preacher Who Flew His Kite But Not Because He Wished to Do So—ESSANAY—MAY 3.—A certain preacher became wise to the fact that he was not making a hit with his congregation. The pewholders could understand everything he said, and they began to think the preacher was common. The preacher decided that to win and make everybody believe he was a nobby and boss minister he would have to hand out a little guff. On the following Sunday morning—from his lookout—he gave out a text which didn't mean anything. He sized up his flock with dreamy eye as he vocied the poetry and mysticism in those familiar lines of the great Icelandic poet, Ikon Navrojk. A stout woman leaned forward so as not to miss anything, and a venerable harness dealer seemed to recognize the quotation and nodded his head solemnly. The preacher didn't know what all the talk meant and he didn't care, and perceiving that the congregation would stand for anything, the preacher knew what to do after that. Moral: Give the people what they think they want.

None So Blind—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—MAY 4.—The cast includes Walter Spencer, Evelyn Page, Nona Darkfeather, Adelaide Bronti, Cecil Van Auker and Ruth Saville. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

The Brave Ones—VIM—MAY 4.—Featuring Plump and Runt. Plump and Runt, footsore and weary, arrive at a village, and after devouring a plate of newly-made pies, proceed to make love to the sheriff's daughter, who is rescued from their attentions by the worthy official himself. Not having the necessary money to pay for their meal, the old man tells them that if they will sleep for one night in an untenanted house on his property he will not have them jailed. Our two heroes agree to this proposal and take up their new quarters. As midnight approaches they are disturbed by unearthly noises, creakings and shadow-like apparitions. Finally, giving up hope of sleeping, they lay awake. Their door slowly opens and in the wall appears a ghost-like shape. This puts the finishing touch to their nerves and they bury their heads under the bed clothes. Meanwhile, a gang of counterfeiters, who have long used the house as their headquarters, discover the precense of the new tenants and decide to scare them off. Dressing in white sheets, they invade the bedroom, but Plump and Runt, now thoroughly aroused, attack and make them prisoners.

The Oath of Hate—(THREE REELS)—KNICKERBOCKER—MAY 5.—Featuring Henry King and Marguerite Nichols. Captain Mark Stone receives word from his financee that she has decided to marry another man. He arrives at her home just after the ceremony and vows that he will marry and rear children to hate her children as he hates her. Stone is injured in the head and loses his sight. He marries May Manning, the slavey at his boarding house, and later, when their child is born—a girl—he leaves the house in a rage of disappointment. Meeting an old shipmate he goes on a voyage with him, and one of the crew, bearing an old grudge against Stone, throws him overboard and the shock restores his sight. He returns home, but discovers that all trace of his wife and child has been lost. Stone, seeking his wife, is recognized on the street by his former sweetheart, who, having left her husband for another, is an outcast, and to avoid meeting her he enters a restaurant, where he finds May, who became a dishwasher there to support her child, and he discovers that the weapon he chose to work evil against the woman he once hated has turned to love in his hands.

Home-made Pies—VIM—MAY 5.—Featuring Pokes and Jabbs. Pokes, badly in need of a meal, steals a couple of pies which Mrs. Jabbs put outside to cool. While he is eating the pies he is attacked by a policeman and a farmer whom he has previously insulted. By using the pies as ammunition he manages to get away. Coming upon Ethel, Jabbs' daughter, he carries her off to the quarry which Jabbs owns. Here he pauses to rest and sits on an old log under which an irate employe whom Jabbs has discharged had placed a keg of powder in an attempt to blow up Jabbs. When the explosion occurs Pokes is making love to Ethel, and both are blown high into the air. Ethel falls on top of her mother, and Pokes, when last seen, is perched on top of a high tree calmly devouring the last of the home-made pies.
